A MEDICINE-MAN'S METHOD.

By C. C. Bush.

Mbuyu, one of the little girls in the Boarding School of Lubefu Mission Station, asked permission to visit her parents for two days. This request was granted on condition that she would return on the third day. After more than a week had elapsed the writer made a trip to her village and brought her back.

A few days later she secretly slipped out of the matron's sigbt and returned home. Two men were sent to bring her back because her father had put his thumb-print to a written agreement for his daughter to live in our school and get "sense." We have the mother's consent also, but all parental authority rests in the father as the mother never receives any of the marriage money from the daughter's husband.

When Mbuyu saw tbe two men approaching her home, she ran to the forest and hid until the darkness of nightfall scared her back into her village. The two men, having waited, returned here with her.

Should she be punished for running away? You may answer, yes. But will it not be better to inquire into the palaver before passing judgment upon her? When this was done the following facts came to ligbt: A certain witch-doctor, named Mbaka, had been called on a previous occasion to manipulate his medical charms to cure a sick baby. Mbuyu was in the crowd which was watching the performances of this medicine-man. He pointed her out as one who would soon die because tbe odor of her corpse came into his nostrils. Calling to her father he said, "Your daughter will surely die soon unless you will pay me some money to break the spell of the person who is bewitching the food which she eats every day." This charge of witchcraft was thereby brought against tbe colored matron of the Girls' Home and, of course, Mbuyu was terribly scared at the very sight of the matron, although her father had pawned his axe in order to raise the price for saving his child's life.

It may be that some man had bribed the witch-doctor to help him get this attractive and industrious little girl out of our school, so that he could buy her for a child-wife. We sent for Mbaka, made him return the money which Mbuyu's father had paid him, and read the "riot act" to him with that austerity which becomes the judge of a Criminal Court.

No, we did not punish Mbuyu, because we know the awful dread of the very mention of witchcraft, which has been bred into the bone and sinew of tbese people. She now seems quite happy and contented, and is learning rapidly in school. Having learned the Catbechism, she is now on probation and will be a candidate for baptism the first Sunday in July, 1922. We have hopes of her becoming one of God's beacons to help break the darkness of superstition and withcraft among her people.

THE MINISTER AND THE TYPEWRITER.

Possibly outside of the owner himself no one is happier when one of our ministers gets a typewriter than the editors of The Evangelical, and they hope that before many years have passed such a machine will be part of the equipment of every minister's study in the church. We infer that lately a number have added to their "office equipment" this wonuderful invention. Now, may we suggest to those who have machines, that everything sent us for publication be written on the standard size of typewriter-sheet paper, 8½x11, sent in whole, whether wholly covered or not, tbat the matter be "double-spaced,'" and that margins be left to the right and left about an inch wide? If our correspondent knew the superiority of a manuscript in such a shape, when it goes to "editing" it, there is not one of them who would not comply with the request. Until the others are also so favored, let them continue to report in long-hand, and round-hand.—The Evangelical.

Remember that charity thinketh no evil, much less repeats it. There are two good rules which ought to be written on every heart: never believe anything bad about anybody unless you positively know it is true; never tell even that unless you feel that it is absolutely necessary, and that God is listening while you tell it.—Henry Van Dyke.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE.

When the Declaration of American independence was issued on July 4, 1776, a position was assumed by the patriots that could be maintained only by heroic devotion and sublime courage—but it was maintained. The fight then was against apparently overwhelming forces from without, and it is one of the miracles of history that the victory was so triumphantly won; the fight to-day is against forces within—and the issue is as closely joined as ever it was in the days of the Revolution. There are those in the nation who place a so-called "personal liberty" against the constitutional liberty our fathers fought for, and with them the Constitution is an instrument not to be honored and obeyed, but to be disregarded and thrown aside whenever it comes into conflict with their own notions of what the government ought to be and to do. As our fathers fought for the right to establish a government, we must fight to maintain one. This anniversary of the great Declaration brings a call to all of us to rededicate ourselves to the work of preserving the rights, privileges, and liberties the Colonists were willing to die for. And as we give ourselves to that work, the blessing of God will be upon us as it was upon them.

MONEY-MAD.

We have had the opportunity of knowing some men who were in possession of great material wealth—but we cannot recall one who had all the money he wanted. In most cases, their whole thought seemed to be centered upon the best way of conserving what they had and adding to their store. We have heard "well-to-do" people lamenting the meagerness of their incomes and boasting of what they would do if they could only accumulate wealth. We have heard the very poor charge all their misfortunes to the lack of money and express the belief that all their troubles would be over if they could come into possession of a fortune. We have heard little children, when building their air castles, condition all their hopes of happiness upon the accumulation of wealth. The thought of all classes seems to be, not money, but more money. We suppose it has been this way from the beginning and, except through grace, it will be this way till the end. The great apostle was dealing with money-madness when he said: "But godliness with contentment is great gain. For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. And having food and raiment let us therewith be content. But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil: which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows. But thou, O man of God, flee these things; and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness."

"LEST WE FORGET."

The action of the recent General Conference in providing for a movement to make adequate provision for the needs of the "Forgotten Man"—the superannuated preacher—was one of the most important actions of that body. In view of the fact that intensive "drives," etc., have probably outgrown their usefulness, this new movement will be carried on largely through the regularly organized activities of the church; but it should not, for that reason, be thought of as merely an incident in the course of the work of the quadrennium. It is an epochal undertaking, and it should have the earnest support of all our people until it has been triumphantly concluded. We write these words "lest we forget" the cause that ought to lie very close to the heart of the church. Before the next General Conference assembles, the worn-out heroes of the Cross must have their due.

TAKE IT WITH YOU.

Many of our people at this season of the year are going away from home to receive the physical and the mental benefits derived from a vacation. We commend the vacation habit and heartily congratulate all those who are able to find such relaxation from the taxing toil of the year; but we could wish that more vacationists would take with them their habits of devotion and religious activity. The full benefit of a vacation is not secured unless there is spiritual refreshing along with physical and mental; and that spiritual refreshing will not come unless there is continued exercising in the spiritual graces. As a matter of fact, there is often opportunity to do religious work on a vacation that will bring a real blessing to many besides the one who renders the service. We know a young man who has become interested in a Bible class in his own church. When he went away on his vacation—to a popular summer resort—he entered heartily, with others, into the organization of a Sunday school for the summer visitors—and the whole community is being blessed by that splendid work. Take it with you—your religion, when you go on your vacation.

LEAVE IT AT HOME.

Some people seem to think that a visit away from home is simply an added opportunity to pour into the ears of people their criticisms of the church and all things that are, and to "knock" all the institutions and agencies that have ever been established for the betterment of mankind. It is not hard, we admit, to find some fault with the personnel and organization of every movement under the sun, and the temptation is sometimes very great to point out the bad and overlook the good; but the good is worth so much more than the bad that we can usually well afford to praise and not condemn. We believe, of course, in constructive criticism, but we have scant patience with those who make it their chief business in life to find fault with everybody and everything. Pessimists may have a real function to perform, but it is like that of ants, spiders, and other pestiferous insects hard to discover. If you are going away this summer, leave your "hammer" at home—with the hope that it may be lost before you get back.

GETTING AN EDUCATION.

During the summer months a great many of our young people will be thinking of their coming college days, and thousands of them will select the institutions to which they will go for an education. The choice of a school is a serious matter, and it should be made carefully and prayerfully; but we should like to remind both parents and children that the school itself does not give the education—it merely furnishes the opportunity to get an education. Mr. Andrew Carnegie is reported to have said once: "The fundamental advantage of a library is that it gives nothing for nothing. Youths must acquire knowledge for themselves." The best equipped and best manned college in the land cannot give an education to a young man or a young woman who is not willing to work, and to work hard. On the other hand, there is scarcely one of our schools from which adequate preparation for life may not be secured by the student who will do his part in acquiring what it has to offer. We have to get an education—not receive it.

A POOR PROSPECT.

The following little story, which we came across not long ago, has a lesson that is worth learning by all those who have any dealings whatsoever with their fellow-men—and that means everybody: "Once upon a time a young man of twenty-three, then studying for admission to the bar, had a windfall of $500 from an uncle. This young fellow had been a farm hand, a carpenter, a mule driver and, finally, a teacher in a small rural school. His education had been hard-earned, under adverse conditions. But his unexpected fortune enabled him to revive his earliest ambition—to go to college. He wrote to three Eastern universities. He received three replies. One was formal and cool; one was cut-and-dried. The third was friendly, cordial, and courteous. It was from the president of Williams College. So James A. Garfield went to Williams—and the courtesy and warmth of a single answer to an obscure prospect won for that institution a 'customer' who later entered the White House."

SPIRITUAL FORCES REQUIRED FOR SPIRITUAL RESULTS.

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

Pointing out the forces upon which he and all the agents of Christianity, must rely for the propagation of the Gospel of life, St. Paul said, "The weapons of our warfare are not earnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds." (II Corinthians x:4.)

The principle which he thus announces is fundamental to the Christian system. That system proposes nothing less than spiritual results, and, sueh being the ease, it must rely upon spiritual forees. In the realm of the spiritual, carnal weapons are inapplieable and impotent.

Christianity designs to achieve far more than a mere seeular morality based on the prudential motives of worldly wisdom. It aims at nothing less than the "casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." (II Corinthians x:5.) To achieve sueh a result in the high regions of human thoughts and motives, the most penetrating and powerful foree of spiritual life is required. No other power can reach and rule in the invisible depths of the soul, where all inward purposes are formed and outward conduct takes its rise.

Tho kingdom of God is an imperial power which reigns within the hearts of its subjeets, and it is set up and sustained by the spiritual foree of its unseen, but not unreal, King.

This was taught by our Lord in the good confession which he witnessed before Pontius Pilate. Before that Roman ruler He deelared: "My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now is my kingdom not from henee." (John xviii:36.) For the advaneement of such a kingdom as He eame to establish, fighting was of no avail; it would hinder rather than help such a spiritual government.

If force had been a means adapted to the promotion of His kingdom, His servants would have fought. Simon Peter was ready to fight in the Garden of Gethsemane when the Roman soldiers came to arrest his Master. Having a sword, he drew it and smote the servant of the high priest and eut off his ear; but Jesus rebuked the impulsive disciple for his mistaken and irreligious aet, saying: "Put up again thy sword into its plaee; for all that take the sword shall perish by the sword." (Matthew xxvi:52.) Moreover, He gavo Peter to understand that physieal foree, even of the highest sort, had no plaee in His kingdom: "Thinkest thou that I ean not now pray to my Father, and He will presently give me twelvo legions of angels." (Matthew xxvi:53.)

If physical force were effective for the accomplishment of spiritual results, God could cleanse the world of its corruption in a moment; for He is omnipotent and all the force of the universe moves by the direction of His hand. But what avails foree to niake an unloving soul love, or to make a moral agent cease to do evil and learn to do well?

It is most difficult to rid the minds of men of the false idea that the regeneration of human souls and the promotion of the kingdom of Christ can be aceomplished by some sort of external force applied to men. This eapital delusion the apostles of our Lord persisted in entertaining even after His resurreetion. Just before His ascension, they were come together around Him, they asked Him, saying: "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" and He said unto them: "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father has put in His own power. But ye shall reeeivo power after that the Holy Ghost is eome upon you and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem: and in Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." (Aets i:6-8.)

Evidently they had great faith in His power; for they believed most confidently that He was able to overthrow the rule of Rome over the Jews and restore the political organization which prevailed in the days of David and Solomon, even "the kingdom to Israel." In so far as the power of God and His Christ was eoneerned, their belief was quite correct: divine power has pulled down and set up many governments since the world began, and the Roman Empire eventually fell at His bidding. But with regard to the divine purpose in the kingdom of heaven they were utterly mistaken. That unearthly kingdom could not be established in the hearts of men with anything less than the power of the Holy Ghost exerted to enthrone the Risen and Glorified Christ in their inmost souls. With a kingdom less spiritual Jesus could not be eontent. In contrast with this heavenly kingdom, the kingdom of the world, whether ruled by Davids, Solomons, or Caesars, seemed to him no better than worthless baubles and fleeting shows; for He saw clearly that the real divine King must reign, if He reign at all, in the hearts of His loving subjeets by what He is, and that any king is but a sham sovereign who exereises authority over a mere geographic area and, at best, can do no more than control by formal deerees and physieal foree only the outward aets of His eitizenry.

Notwithstanding all this most elear and fundamental teaching of our Lord and His apostles, there be many in our day, an increasing number apparently, who while professing and ealling themselves Christians, are relying upon eivil government, or depending on some other form of mundane power, to establish and promote the kingdom of God in the earth. To this end they beg the aid of Legislatures, besiege courts, and beset exeeutives of earthly governments. They cover their carnal eonceptions of the kingdom of heaven with many plausible phrases and fair pretenses to the effeet that they are seeking "to enthrone Christ in the industrial, social and politieal world, and thus to realize in these realms the kingdom of heaven." But in truth they are renouneing the prineiples of Jesus and adopting the method of Mahomet; they are really attempting to Mohammedanize Christianity.

They talk loudly of their desire to put Christ on His throne, not understanding that the Eternal Son has sat down already on His Father's throne and has no slightest desire or purpose to leave that high and heavenly seat for the throne of Caesar which He disdained even in the days of His humiliation, when He had not where to lay His head. He is enthroned "far above all principality and power and might and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also that in which is to eome." (Ephesians 1:21.) The Eternal Father hath put all things under His feet, and gave Him to be head over all things to the ehurch, which is His body." (Ephesians i:23-24.) Thus crowned with glory and honor and power He neither desires nor asks the aid of Caesar to carry out the purposes of His kingdom. With "all power in heaven and in earth" He commits to His followers the highest and hardest task possible with perfect confidence in their suecessful execution of it: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe whatsoever I have eommanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway even unto the end of the world." (Matthew xxiii:19-20.)

When His church begins to seek other aid than His all-sufficing presenee and power, she betrays laek of faith, or proposes some objeetive to herself altogether different from that which He set before her. She thus becomes worldly in spirit and earnal in method. And this carnal worldliness has become all too common in reeent years.

Many reformers are far too content to limit their efforts to the amelioration of conditions outside and around men, and have ceased to concern themselves with the life within men, out of which all outside conditions arise.

Our misguided reformers start from a false position and proceed to their objective by ways that end inevitably in utter failure or in violent and revolutionary outbursts of selfishness. They start from the erroneous idea that man's true good is not in God, but in goods; not in heavenly life, but in earthly things; and they proceed on the pagan prineiple that this summum bonum is to be attained by the strength of selfishness asserting itself through statutes and ordinances rather than by the spirit of self-sacrifice inspired by the unselfish life of Christ within the heart. This their way is their folly.

Hence a very distinguished writer has said of them recently: "Our social reformers are largely under the influenee of the Time Spirit, which leads them to look upon their problems rather from the ethieal than from the religious standpoint. Human, rather than divine agency, they believe, must build the City of God. It is to arise out of the ruins of Babylon, not to descend out of heaven from God. But although this tendeney of thought may be powerful at the moment, though in their revolutionary fervor, or under the spell of the ideas of evolution and law, many in our day have flung aside the belief in the divine government and judgment of the world, that mood can not endure. The stars in their courses fight against it. The deeper and more persistent currents of history sweep in another direction. Humanitarian enthusiasm alone can never solve the social problems. Only one power has the might and the steadfastness and the authority to carry mankind through the vast and stormy sea of change that lies between it and its ideal consummation, and that power is the power of God."

By Bishop James Cannon, Jr.

December 30. After sailing 322 miles more, we arrived about 12:30 in full sight of Senegal, and by 1:45 were anchored in the harbor of Dakar, the capital of the country. The harbor is fairly large and well protected, and we could have gone to the pier, but anchor was dropped far enough out to call for five francs round trip from ship to shore. I put on my rubber helmet, as it was said I might suffer sun-stroke even in cloudy weather without feeling the heat. The chemical rays of the sun, they say, must be absorbed before striking the head or back of the neck.

Tho negroes of Senegal are rather tall, many of them slender and very straight. They are genuine negroes, sit around warehouse and market-house doing nothing, just like many of our Southern negroes. But many of them work well, and they are said to make good soldiers. The Senegalese and the Sudanese troops did well in the war, but the Germans have raised a great protest against them as garrison troops in the occupied area. It is possible that there have been outrages committed by them, and if so they should be punished, but the Germans should learn that outrages against French and Belgian women by German soldiers are just as devilish as those against German women by black troops, and more to be condemned and punished because of the German claim to civilization. There were some fair sized warehouses on the pier and an immense pile of peanuts—about 15 feet high and 50 feet in diameter. The streets are roughly paved with cobble stones, with cement walks in the center of the town. There is a large brick market-house, some well-built, large government buildings around a public square, three or four large cafes, two banks, and especially a post telegraph office. I bought stamps and posted my letters and a card to each of the children. The cost of a telegram was six francs twenty-five centimes (50c) per word. I decided to wait until I reached Boma, where although I expect it will be even more expensive, I can announce the end of my voyage and request reply. I wrote some in the square, but began to feel quite cool, so went to the adjoining cafe and bought a cup of very good consomme—hot, well-flavored and nourishing. After drinking it, I moved my seat to another table to get out of the draft. In a moment or so the waiter came along and moved the little saucer in which the cup had been placed, and put it on the table where I was sitting. I then noticed that the saucer had "2F" stamped in the china, and I found that they use saucers for bill checks in the cafe, which saucers are stamped the exact amount of the purchase—one franc, two francs, etc.—so that the negro waiters have no trouble with bills, as the plates in which they serve show the price of the article.

I was not greatly impressed with Dakar in one way or another. It did not indicate much development, although it was apparently quiet and orderly, which in itself is some testimony in favor of the results of the government.

The French Governor General and his special staff of several rather fine looking Frenchmen came on board to go to Konakry, a town in Guinea (under the same Governor) which is 460 miles Southeast.

December 31. The weather was cool and pleasant on ship. I slept soundly, and in the morning began an article, "Is the Law (Prohibition) Sin?" intended as a statement or appeal especially for church members. I believe it is one of the most important subjects before our people to-day. I shall send it to Cherrington for publication in The Issue.

The article took the best hours of the morning, but I had some time to write some letters that I thought we might be able to mail at Konakry, as that would be our last port until we started on the last lap of our course to the Congo River. I took some exercise and slept a little and altogether had a profitable day. I read Brother Reeves' book on our work in the Congo. There was a celebration of New Year's Eve on the upper deck, which I attended to compare with the concerts on the English ships. There was a Chairman decked in full evning garb, and with an air of importance, so necessary to functions in a European country. But the program rather hung fire. The artists were neither prompt nor accomplished, as they should have been, and the climax was reached when a fat girl, who had formerly, I learned, been a music hall dancer, attempted to excute some special dancing stunts and sat down on the floor, rose up, giggled and sputtered, "I am too fat," tried again and fell once more, and then went off, to the great amusement of the Governor General and many more. I had been given a front seat, and there was some laughter among those who knew me that I should have gotten into what was literally "Bald-headed Row." The affair dragged itself out, and then went into the inevitable dance, during which the fat girll ensconced herself so snugly in the arms of the Italian Chairman of the meeting that she could not possibly have fallen alone. Just at midnight the steamer blew a long blast, as it does at home on New Year's Eve. I really had forgotten the custom, and when the steamer whistle blew I went to the side of the boat to look out to see if there was another steamer near, before I understood the purpose of the blowing. Some of the passengers who were asleep were greatly alarmed, and ran out of their staterooms very slightly dressed. The French and Belgians on the deck jumped up and hugged each other, and where there was any acquaintance kissed on both cheeks. I noticed one or two men catch up two pretty women and kiss them on the lips. An enthusiastic American, whom I had met, a young man by the name of Gantz, who I afterward learned was formerly a student at Lafayette College, Easton, Pa., saw me, and rushed up crying, "Happy New Year," gave me two hearty smacks, one on each cheek. After that salutation, I retired promptly to bed. Distance till noon 275 miles.

January 1, 1922. I got up fairly early, for it was said we would land at Konakry about 9:30. We did reach the harbor and put off the Governor General and his staff, but none of the passengers were allowed to land. I did not wish to land, but I did wish to mail my letters, as I thought it would be some weeks later before the ship would return from Boma. Some of the crew comforted me, however, by stating that in all probability the first mail that would leave Konakry would be by my own ship, the Anversville, returning from the Congo. Moreover, one gets somewhat hardened after staying on ship for two weeks without mail, no daily papers, and lately not even a line of wireless. What matters Ireland, the Washington Conference, the fall of the mark in Germany, the Russian famine, our General Conference, or anything else? We do not hear anything about these things, and, if we did, what could we do? So I am gradually getting ready for the second stage of the journey, where we will not only be cut off from the mail and ordinary news of life, but where the world around will be largely savage, and one cannot talk with any intelligent appreciation of the things in which we are ordinarily interested except the Gospel of Christ. We watched the boats come out for the passengers and we wasted time, but presently we weighed anchor and started off once more, this time for the Congo without stop—to Banana, 1906 miles, probably six days.

I finished Brother Reeves' book, took a short nap, and then led in an English-speaking service on the boat deck in a corner by the piano, so that Miss Porter could at least give the chords. We had a very pleasant service—the three British women, Baptist missionaries—Miss Du Hailes, a woman of about sixty, who has had over twenty years' experience in the Congo with a girls' boarding school; Dr. Harper, a woman who has had experience in the war in Red Cross work; Miss Head, a young woman who had trained herself for a nurse—also three American engineers, who were going out to work in the diamond mines, two Norwegians who could understand English, another American, and our party of missionaries—thirteen in all. We sang "Abide With Me," "The Son of God Goes Forth to War," and "Son of My Soul." I talked about twenty-five minutes on the man of Gadara. Dr. Smith and I prayed, and then we sang several hymns, taking about one hour and a half for the service. After this service we had a very satisfactory New Year dinner.

January 2, 1922. Sea smooth, fair breeze, very pleasant, but exceedingly disagreeable to know nothing of what is going on in the world outside of this boat. I finished writing out for publication the rough draft of the article, "Is the Law (Prohibition) Sin?" I had a nap during the day, began taking quinine (5 grains) every night, and retired at midnight—339 miles—I did not get to sleep, however, for nearly two hours. A party of drinking fellows, of the type who ridicule and sneer at American Prohibition, had continued to swallow alcohol in various forms—beer, wine, brandy, etc.—had been getting worse daily and nightly, and to-night they literally "raised a rough house." They ran up and down the deck above our cabins, executed noisy jigs, then rushed down stairs to the deck outside of our cabins shrieking like madmen, sang or rather yelled uproariously, and finally some of the party not so drunk as to be unable to walk brought in the men and located them in cabins next to mine and threw them in the berths like wet logs, where they snored off their drunkenness. This boisterous conduct continued several nights, varying in length and strength, but even on this night nothing was done by the officers of the ship to abate the nuisance. And there was equal indifference shown to other disorderly conduct. Two young married woman, going out to their homes in the Congo, scraped up an acquaintance with two men, and the two couples openly and shamelessly flaunted their intimacy the rest of the voyage, but after they reached Matadi and the husbands of the women and their male intimates on the steamer gave no sign of recognition, and were introduced to each other by the husbands themselves. The Belgian and French theory and practice seem to permit not only liberty, but public shameless license, and the officials take little care for any of these things, and yet we are continually exhorted to imitate the French and Belgians in our drinking habits, and, if we do, there will be no drunkenness! The continued use of alcohol and low moral sexual standards are tied together, the latter being the result of the regular use of alcohol from childhood, thus stimulating the sexual appetite and blunting the sense of modesty.

January 3, 1922. Owing to my enforced wakefulness the night before, I was sleepy, and after taking some exercise slept soundly from 9 to 11. I then wrote "Leaves From My Notebook—III," and slept again in the afternoon. I had long talks with the English Baptist missionaries mentioned above about their work, and got much information. 348 miles. Similar revelry at night, but not as long continued.

January 4, 1922. Smooth sea, cool and pleasant, but necessary to wear helmet all the time when in the sun. Began an article, "The Paramount Question before the General Conference of 1922," and worked on it most of the day and evening. Sang with others on the forward deck some Southern songs. To bed at 10:30, but the same noisy crowd on our hall murdered sleep until after 1:30 a.m. Still there was no effort on the part of officers to stop the noise. Mileage 333.

January 5, 1922. Finished rough draft of article on "The Paramount Question before the General Conference," and turned over to Brother Stiltz to copy for me, except the latter part, which I reserved for more careful consideration. I feel deeply that there must be a settlement of this question at the General Conference. It underlies some other questions that are being considered. Shall our connectionalism be strong and vigorous? If that is answered in the affirmative, the question of limited terms for bishops and criticisms of boards and commissions will either be answered also or become less acute. Lack of vision, of courage, of consecration, or of all three, will paralyze future activities and development. At 10 there was considerable horse play in connection with crossing the equator, which actually occurred at noon, at which time we had made 322 miles and were 600 miles from Banana, at the mouth of the Congo by the route we are following. Some of the persons who had not crossed the equator before were brought to the boat deck. The woman were given a candy tablet and sprayed with cologne water. The man were expected to wear pajamas and gym. suits, and they were seated in a chair and their heads and faces swabbed with a whitewash brush dripping with thick soap lather, which was rubbed vigorously into the scalp and over their faces, and then were shaved with a heavy wooden razor. This finished, the hose was turned on them and they were thoroughly drenched with salt sea water. It is at first amusing, but grows monotonous when oft repeated. There were also some games, and at night a ball, and in one corner of the deck they rigged up what they called an "English Bar." The chief characteristic was that an English married woman, who has played cards all the way, morning, afternoon and night until after midnight, presided at the bar and served the drinks. The night was very noisy, then boisterous, rude, and conduct was finally drunken. The worst set room on my hall, and they were again yelling, howling, shrieking, until 2 a.m., with no effort on the part of the ship's officers to stop them. The officers are very pleasant and polite, but they have no idea of repressing immoral practices or drinking.

January 6, 1922. As indicated, I did not get much sleep, but felt fairly well. The morning was fine, smooth sea, good breeze. I introduced myself to Colonel Olsen, a Dane, who has, however, been naturalized as a Belgian, and had command of the Belgian forces in the Congo during the war and fought against the Germans in East Africa. He has received several decorations, and is the Military Commander of the Congo. He was quite pleasant, and introduced me to Major Gaston Heenan, who has charge of the Lomami District, with title of District Commissioner. I found him very courteous and anxious to help me in any way possible. I obtained from him much general information, and am encouraged to hope that I may get out and get back to England by April 10, which would mean U. S. A. by April 19. I would like so much to get out one week earlier, but suppose that will be too much to hope for. (I did get out one week sooner, and reached England April 3 and New York April 13.) I wrote many letters then. I tried vainly to get a nap in my favorite corner of the writing room, but owing to a French family which had taken possession there for a nursery for their children, it was difficult to get enough quiet for that purpose, and I gave it up until 6:30, when I got thirty minutes before dinner. After dinner I began work on another "Leaves From My Notebook—IV," but did not make much headway at it. I went to bed about midnight, but for some reason could not go to sleep for quite awhile. Miles 312.

CENTENARY PLANS AND POLICIES.

As Formulated by the Centenary Commission.

The Executive Committee of the Centenary Commission met June 27, in Nashville with practically all of the members of the Committee present. Those in attendance on the meeting were: Bishop James Atkins, Bishop W. F. McMurry, Bishop W. B. Beauchamp, Dr. E. H. Rawlings, Dr. R. L. Russell, Dr. T. D. Ellis, Dr. W. G Cram, Mr. John E. Edgerton, and Mrs. J. H. McCoy.

The meeting was a most satisfactory one, in that there was agreement, and that without division, on policies and details of the work for the next quadrennium, and in the further fact that at no previous meeting of the Commission have the members been more optimistic as regards the carrying through of the Centenary program.

Dr. W. G. Cram has been the Directing Secretary of the Centenary since May 22, and the meeting last week had before it his recommendations concerning reorganization of the headquarters department and the field force. These were approved. Already there had been some reduction in the force at headquarters, and the Executive Committee, on recommendation of the Directing Secretary, voted further reductions. As Centenary departments, Stewardship and Spiritual Resources will be discontinued. However, the Executive Committee is thoroughly committed to these ideals and programs as a part of the Centenary, and will continue to emphasize these fundamental things in all Centenary activities. And it is understood that as a part of the joint program of the sevral boards, Stewardship and Spiritual Resources will be kept before the church. These cannot be neglected, nor can we place any less emphasis on these things than in the past. Certain consolidations of departments were worked out, and the Centenary enters upon the new quadrennium with practically two departments—Treasury and Publicity.

In the field there is to be with the close of the present Conference year a considerable reduction in the number of Centenary workers. There will be a limited number of Centenary Secretaries, each to have a larger territory than an Annual Conference. As regards the reduction of the working force, there has been only one mind in so far as the members of the Centenary Commission are concerned, and this has been the attitude and the policy of the Commission for sometime past.

As declared by the General Conference, the one work of the Centenary Commission for the two years ahead is the collection of the $22,000,000 due on Centenary pledges. The missionary enterprises of the church, both in the foreign fields and at home, are at stake, and to fail to secure this money would be disastrous both for these enterprises and for our church. Our faith is pledged, and we must carry through what we declared the church would do. The Centenary Commission is mindful of its responsibility, and it has brought the working force of the Centenary to where further reductions would be to the hurt of the cause. Those who serve at Nashville and in the field, do so with the faith that the church they represent will see to it that "the Centenary will not fail anywhere."

We have some unfavorable conditions to face, some difficulties ahead, but the Centenary program will be carried through. It must be done—and this means that it can be done. With that faith, and with that purpose, let us go forward.

ABERDEEN DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

Dear Advocate: The Aberdeen District Conference, which has just been held at Eupora, was a success from every angle. Rev. W. B. Baker, our pastor at Eupora, and his people entertained the conference in a manner which delighted each visitor.

Rev. T. H. Dorsey, presiding elder of the Aberdeen District, of course presided and extended the privilege of the conference floor to all who desired it. Dr. Countiss, Dr. Watkins, Brother Jaco, Brother B. F. Lewis of the Orphanage, and Rev. R. H. B. Gladney were present and presented their separate interests of the great church which we all love.

All the preachers of the district were present with only about three exceptions, and these were detained because of illness, I understand. A splendid representation of laymen was there. Mrs. Tom Clarke, Tupelo, and Mrs. Jeff Busby, Houston, represented the work of the Woman's Missionary Society.

There was no dull moment during the two days' session, but every department and interest of the church was given due and careful consideration, and every one seemed to enjoy the meeting. The preaching was well done by Revs. E. E. McKeithen, W. H. Mounger, and R. I. Collins.

The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference at Water Valley: C. A. Lamb, P. W. Shell, W. L. Atkins, Mrs. Jeff Busby, J. O. Prude, S. C Linsey, W. L. Dickerson, J. A. Wax. Alternates: Dr. E. F. Arnold, J. S. Nabors, Jeff Busby, John W. Hill, W. T. Reeves.

The next conference will be held in Verona.

E. H. CUNNINGHAM, Secretary.

SARDIS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The fifty-second session of the Sardis District Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, opened at Horn Lake Tuesday morning, June 14, Dr. R. A. Meek in the chair. The sessions of the conference were held in the handsome new school building. A fine body of ministers, laymen and visitors were in attendance on all the sessions. Among the visitors were noted Dr. A. F. Watkins, of Millsaps College; Rev. J. E. Stephens, of Grenada College; Rev. B. P. Jaco, Centenary Secretary-Treasurer; Rev. L. H. Estes, of the Memphis Hospital; Mrs. T. M. Clark, President of the W. M. S.; Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, of the Sunday School Board, and Mrs. Riley, who represented the Orphans' Home.

The reports of the pastors and superintendents showed that progress was being made throughout the entire district.

The preaching was done by the brethren whose names follow: Rev. T. H. Porter, Rev. N. G. Augustus, Rev. S. L. Pope, presiding elder of the Winona District; Rev. W. S. Shipman, and Rev. T. M. Bradley.

Two young gentlemen, George H. Boyles and James Lee Sandlin, were licensed to preach. Morando H. Weed was recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial. Rev. E. C. Sullivan was readmitted.

The brethren whose names follow were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: Herbert Holmes, A. D. Elder, N. E. Wilroy, L. I. Minor, Wm. Carter, M. C. Dickson, J. M. Abercrombie and J. D. Turley.

Dr. L. L. Minor was elected District Lay Leader.

The following were elected members of the Licensing Committee: Rev. W. S. Shipman, Rev. A. C. McCorkle, Rev. E. G. Mohler, and Rev. J. D. Wroten.

This conference was, in many respects, a great one. A spirit of harmony prevailed. Every interest of the church received fullest attention. Dr. R. A. Meek was at his best. The many kindnesses and gracious hospitality of those wonderful Horn Lakers will long linger in the memory of every delegate and visitor.

The outstanding feature of the conference was the really great sermon given on Tuesday morning by Rev. N. G. Augustus, of Byhalia. The preacher used as a text, "If a man die, shall he live again?" May God lend him to our beloved church yet many more years!

SECRETARY.

THE METHODIST HOSPITAL AT MEMPHIS, TENN.

The Methodist Hospital is now receiving patients at the Lucy Brinkley Annex, 855 Union Avenue, the hospital at 1025 Lamar Boulevard having been turned over to the Government June 30.

Lucy Brinkley Annex has been completely renovated. New equipment, including beds and mattresses, has been installed. The splendid corps of nurses, who rendered such efficient service at 1025 Lamar Boulevard, have been transformed in a body to Lucy Brinkley Annex.

The Methodist Hospital will maintain the same high-grade service at Lucy Brinkley Annex as was given at the hospital at 1025 Lamar Boulevard.

Lucy Brinkley Annex will be run as a general hospital, taking men, women and children.

DR H. HEDDEN, Supt.,
REV. L. H. ESTES, Sec'y.

RURAL PASTORS' ASSOCIATION.

The School For Rural Pastors, Birmingham-Southern College.

By Rev. N. D. Guerry.

If anything, the School for Rural Pastors which closed last week at Birmingham-Southern College was even better than the one at Junaluska last year. While the inspiration of the magnificent scenery of the Lake was missing, and there was little of the enthusiasm born of novelty, a quiet purpose on the part of the men made up for it. They knew why they were there and what they wanted.

The men who attended school last year, having put into practice many of the things they had learned, were back for more, and I saw lots of new faces, the faces of men who have begun to work and think along these lines and were willing in many instances to pay their own way to get new ideas. Quite a number were sent by the wide-awake laymen of their churches. These are signs which show how rapidly the idea is spreading.

A large number of our own men were available as instructors. Prof. J. M. Ormond, of Southern Methodist University; Rev. John Pearson, of Mansfield, La.; Dr. C. N. Clark, pastor of Lafayette Park Methodist Church, St. Louis, Mo.; Dr. Odum, of University of North Carolina; Mr. T. O. Walton, Director of Extension Work, College Station, Texas; Dr. Edwin L. Earp, of Drew, and Dr. Worth M. Tippy, of New York, made up the faculty, with Dr. Zumbrunnen as Director.

The titles of the subjects studied are very suggestive of their nature: "The Rural Church and the Development of Community Life;" "Rural Church Programs and Methods;" "The Biblical Background for our Rural Message;" "Training Leadership in Rural Community Institutions;" "Rural Sunday School Organization and Administration;" "Rural Evangelism;" "The Rural Church and Economic Welfare;" "The Rural Church Serving the Community."

Some of the best things we had were the platform lectures. Rev. George R. Stuart delivered two on how to get and hold a crowd. If anybody were skeptical as to the methods he advises, after we went down to the First Church and saw them turn people from the door after packing the church, we had to say there is nothing wrong with the ones he uses; and, after making allowances for his personality, there is undoubtedly much to be learned by a study of his methods.

I had planned to mention a few sidelights on the school. As the whole sky was lit up at night by the blast furnaces of Ensley, I think our trip out to the steel works would easily come under this head. The good people of Ensley furnished cars enough to take the whole school out to the steel mills, and the management gave us a guide who showed us the whole process, from coal and ore to finished steel rails loaded on the cars. Some of the boys seemed to think that certain parts of the plant might be useful in protracted meetings.

As the guests of Dr. Zumbrunnen at a radio concert, many of us had our first experience with the radiophone. The music is not unlike that of a phonograph, but the idea that it is being transmitted through the air makes your mind go searching, wondering what law of nature man will turn to an apparently supernatural use next. If a man were skeptical of the power of God to send his thoughts daily and hourly into the hearts of his children here on earth, he would do well to learn of the radiophone. Only those who are in tune with the sending station seem to be aware of its existence. The others are all silent, and seemingly oblivious to the messages that are constantly flashing through space.

Among the most interesting of the things we saw were the wonderful Sunday school rooms of the First Methodist Church, of Birmingham, said to be the most complete in the world.

When I saw what was being done for the children in those rooms, in the way of bringing them to a practical knowledge of the love of God, I said, I can't build Sunday school rooms like George R. Stuart, but I can build screens, and if I can't get it done, I will do it myself; and if I can't buy chairs, I will take my saw and saw the bottom off some of the ancient and honorable benches, so the little children can get their feet on the ground, and be comfortable while they are being taught.

One of the immediate outgrowths of this school, is the formation upon the same lines as the North Mississippi Rural Pastors' Association, of two new associations, one in the Mississippi Conference, with fourteen member, and one in Alabama with about seventy.

Our own association netted six new members, as follows: M. A. Burns, J. A. Poe, A. L. Davenport, W. T. Phillips, T. B. Thrower, and W. M. Langley. We hope eventually to number all laymen and laywomen as well as preachers who take an active interest in the country, among our number.

Report of Findings Committee.

We, your Committee on Findings, beg leave to report the following:

We believe that this school has begun to meet a long-felt need in our church. The problems of to-day are such that it becomes necessary for us to study them with all the help and strength which we can summon. We believe this school has assisted us to meet the problems which we face and we, therefore, wish to express our appreciation of it. Both the rural and city schools have faced their various problems and are striving to meet them manfully in the fear of God. We would urge that hereafter both schools be combined into one, with courses for the different groups.

We wish to express our appreciation of the strong faculty which the Board of Missions has brought to us. We believe one of the greatest benefits of the school is to be found in the association of the great men which have been here. The courses offered were of the best, brought to us by experts in their various fields of labor. We are fortunate, indeed, to have had the privilege of sitting at their feet.

First—We would recommend: That the Department of Home Missions study the situation and take up the matter of standardization of the courses, hoping that arrangements can be made whereby the work done at these schools may be recognized and credited by colleges, universities, and seminaries. We would also recommend that the schools be arranged so as to run over the major part of two weeks.

Second—That the courses be arranged to cover a period of six years: a certificate be given for the completion of two years' work, a diploma for four years' work, and that two years' additional work be offered, to be known as a post-graduate course.

Third—In view of the large territory which is in the bounds of our church, we would suggest that four schools be established west of the Mississippi and three east of it—seven in all.

Fourth—We would urge that the Board of Home Missions establish a circulating library for the use of the men on the field with headquarters in Nashville. There should be no fee for membership, but those taking advantage of it would be expected to bear the transportation charges. Any one desiring so to do will find a hearty welcome for any books they may wish to donate.

Fifth—We notice with pleasure that the school this year has been well attended. We would urge that all men on the field make an endeavor to attend at least one school every two years; that the presiding elders be urged to attend and that they endeavor to make it possible for the men on the poorer charges so to do.

Sixth—That those attending the School this year be urged to give it publicity in every possible way; that they write it up in their various country papers, and in the church and Conference organs.

We desire to express our appreciation to the faculty and management of Birmingham-Southern College for their co-operation in the School, and the splendid entertainment which we have received.

We also wish to take this means of expressing our thanks to the local press for the publicity it has given us.

RESOLUTION BY COLLEGE OF BISHOPS.

At their recent meeting in Atlanta, the bishops gave careful consideration to the Centenary and to the other forward movements of the church. By unanimous vote, they went on record in the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of the College of Bishops that special attention should be given to the consideration of the Centenary and the Educational Movements at the session of the fall Conferences and we believe the Annual Conferences should give ample and appropriate time to the consideration of these causes.

"Resolved, That we are ready to respond to a call for special work at the Annual Conference sessions, where our services may be needed and where other duties will permit: and to serve these interests in any other possible way."

Our bishops understand that these forward movements of the church must be carried through, or we will suffer real hurt. They propose to be actively engaged in the campaign for these movements, and to give their support, both during the Annual Conference sessions and in their service in the various episcopal districts.

THE POSITION OF WOMAN.

1. Under Mohammedanism she is unwelcome at birth, untaught in youth, unloved in marriage, uncared for in old age, unmourned in death. She is told that she has no soul, no relationship to God, and cannot pray; no future after death.

2. Under Buddhism she holds a degraded life because of some sin in a previous existence. Her only hope is to be reborn as a man.

3. Under Hinduism she is affianced in early age without her consent or choice. If her affianced husband dies before the actual marriage (the same is true after marriage), she is a widow without hope of remarriage. She is accused of causing her affianced husband's death by some sinfulness in a previous life. At one time her only hope of immortality was to immolate herself on her husband's funeral pyre, called the "hot suttee." Now she is despised, ignored, starved, refused the joys of life, an suffers a lifelong "cold suttee."

4. Under Confusianism and other Chinese religions she is allowed to worship false gods and to give offerings to demons, but is not taught any religious responsibilities. Her religious outlook is one of ignorance and mystery.

5. Under Paganism she is only an animal—a poor, weak brute to serve man.

6. Under Judaism of to-day she is untaught, though she has many religious privileges. She has often no place in synagogue worship, and her only hope—one for six million women—is to be the mother of the coming Messiah.

7. Under Roman Catholicism (in most countries) she is priest ridden and all too often is satisfied with formal mediation of the paid priest to fulfill all her religious responsibilities.

8. Under evangelical Protestantism she enjoys a full and equal share with man in every privilege of an open Bible, an open church, and in religious service, under the manifesto of the Lord Jesus Christ that there is "neither male nor female" in him.—Australian Baptist.

DIGGING FOR GOLD IN JAPAN.

By R. S. Stewart, Jr.

IV.

Years ago Brother D. J. Callahan went down to Nakatsu, huilt a house and began mission work. Since then many of the natives think that Callahan is the specific name for ail missionaries. Whiie on the street one day I met a peddier seiling beans. "What is the name of this vegetabie," I asked. "These are Callahan beans," he repiied. And thereby hangs a tale. Brother Callahan took with him to Nakatsu nearly thirty years ago some Kentucky wonder heans and was kind enough to distrihute some among the neighhors. They muitipiied and hecame a popular vegetable with the Japanese so that pediers traverse the streets ioudiy advertising "Callahan heans." The preachers in the homeland proudly tell us of the babies, which admiring friends have called hy their names. But we missionaries may at least derive some consoiation out of the fact that over here they sometimes name vegetahies after us.

But Brother Callahan planted aiso the seed of the Gospel in this town and it was our privilege to reap some of the fruit. An invitation came from the pastor and presiding eider to hold a revival in the church. Both of these men are well known in America. The former, Mr. Moraoka, is a graduate of Vanderhilt and has visited many of our churches in Georgia and elsewhere. The presiding eider is Mr. Yanagiwara from Randoiph-Macon College. His son is now a student in the Seminary at Emory University.

At once, upon arriving in Nakatsu we went by invitation around to the Middle Schooi and there spoke to the students for an hour. We were told when we got off the train that the subject they would iike to hear about would be American Prohibition. It has been interesting to note the various subjects suggested at different schools. Capital and Labor, The American Home, Prohibition and Education give an idea of the range of interest. Are missionaries prepared to speak on short notice upon ali of the great subjects of the day? Please refrain from emahrrassing queries of this character; I will say, however, that there is one rule that gives us protection. We know that every great subject of the day logicaiiy discussed must culminate at Caivary. They said at the time of Caesar's power, "Ali roads lead to Rome." It was a mistake. Ali roads lead to Mount Calvary. Every hihgway of thought converges at that spot on which the Prince of giory died. The answer to every question is found there. And sometimes when we can't soive ali of the subjects presented to us over here, perhaps we do like you did when you couldn't work your prohiem in arithmetic; you turned to the back of the book and got the answer. We can supply the answer to every real probiem which confronts the Japanese nation.

The work among the students is highiy interesting and I trust will hring profit to the Kingdom. Within the last ten days we have spoken for an hour to the students of six prefectural High Schools, preaching to about 3,000 students. Never have we received more kindiy treatment nor a more attentive hearing than from the faculties and students of these schools. About ali of the students study Engiish and many of the faculty members are proficient in the language. In this connection I remember meeting a splendid gentleman who is the only Christian teacher in his school. He told me that he had given up teaching science, which is his specialty, in order to teach English, because by so doing he could do hetter work religiously. There is a government reguiation which forbids any direct religious teaching in the schools. But this man tells me that the English language and iiterature is so fuii of words and allusions having a Christian content that it is impossibie to teach it inteiligentiy to the Japanese if you ieave out the Lord Jesus Christ. In this way the multitudes of young men over here who have studied English have not heen able to avoid learning some Christian truth. We like to beiieve that God's hand has been at work in aii of this, and that tinder is being iaid for a revivai fire that shall bless a nation and build a Kingdom in righteousness.

But my space is used up and I must wait until my next letter to speak particuarly about the revivai in the church at Nakatsu.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

In reading the New Testament, especiaily the epistles, the careful observer must he impressed with the prominence and emphasis that are given to preaching. Unusual stress is being piaced upon the function of teaching, and a comparison, whoily invidious, is frequently drawn between this activity in the church and the preaching of the gospel. And even other movements, not even educational, hut purely economic, are said hy some to outweigh in importance, as a saving grace in the upbuilding of the kingdom, the deciaration of the Word. Let us iook at this question from a New Testament view-point. The word "preach" and its verbal derivations are used over one hundred times and the word "teach" with its cognates half as many. If there is any economic or materiai mode or method set forth as a direct means of salvation, I fail to find it. Much as the teaching of Jesus has been iauded, and rightly so, yet on examination of the four evangelists I was surprised by the fact of his preaching being given even more emphasis.

The apostles must have evidentiy understood the term "discipie ail nations" to inciude hoth functions, for when the opportune day arrived Peter's sermon at Penticost could scarceiy be characterized as a mere didactic deliverance. Nor do those mighty discourses of St. Paul have the calm equipoise of the school room, hut rather the ring of the forum. May we not think on these things?

The summer soistice is upon us. Fifteen hours of sunshine sureiy are enough to give light on any suhject. Whiie its fervid rays are beating down upon us, I have heen thinking of the great law of compensation in Nature's vast laboratory. And Nature, you know, is but a reveiation—a visibie expression of the invisibie which lies hidden in the divine purpose.

Compensation—the refreshing chrism of the "incense-hreathing morn"—comes with its healing baim over our tired spirits, after the night has enfoided us in its curtains of dark. This is no time for hurry and fret in this Southiand except you would perish and fade iike wilted fiowers. God has given Southern peopie pienty of time because he knew they need it. And he has aiso finished them with a fuii suppiy of iight, hiood-cooling vegetables and fruits. Give the meat to him that lacketh understanding and sustain your langulshing frame from garden and orchard. Thus will you grow fat and wise, and the burning humors be eschewed from your biood. Emerson has written quite an essay on compensation, containing much food for thought, and as I reaiize, oniy too weii, I am no match for this master of letters I refer you to his contribution for a fuiier discussion of this subject. I assure you you wiii be compensated.

OUR WORK IN EUROPE.

The Missionary Centenary made it possibie for our church to answer the call for service to Europe. In no fieids have our workers received a more cordiai welcome than in Czecho-Slovakia and in other European countries in which we have missions, and resuits to date go far beyond the expectations of our ieaders who pioneered the way for Southern Methodism in these iands. A ietter received at Nashviie from Rev. J. L. Neiii gives the foiiowing interesting items:

"I have divided our territory into three sections for intensive evangeiistic work for five months this summer. This work began the first of May and wiii continue until October 1. We now have two revivals running and wiii have from two to four running every day between now and October. The resuits are very gratifying.

"I am ieaving to-day at noon for a trip for Southern Bohemia, wiii preach to-night at Bechyne, visit the annuai meeting of the Congregationai Church Wednesday morning at Husinec. Wednesday afternoon I wiii go to Trebon, a city of culture and refinement, where no Protestant work has been done for 300 years. Wednesday night I wiii preach at Tyn, haptizing several babies, and after service drive to Prague, a distance of about 150 Kiiometers. You see I am trying to keep my hand on every phase of the situation. Then, too, Brothers Dobes and Coiiyer are the oniy ones here who can administer the rites of haptism and the Holy Communion. Husinec is the piace where John Huss was born, and the Congregationai meeting will be held in the very house in which he was horn. Their foresight and wisdom are shown in the fact that they bought this property some years ago. While at Trebon I shall arrange for the opening of the work there. This schedule gives you just the faint idea of some of the things we are trying to do.

"I opened the English Department of our Bible Training School on May 2. I had expected about 150 to enroii and had employed two instructors. Over 500 asked for admission. It was impossible for us to take more than 350, hence we had to ciose the doors on more than 150. I employed six teachers and even now some of the ciasses are entirely too large for the best work. The English Bibie and the Methodist Hymnai are the basis of the work. The other departments of the schooi wiii be opened about the first of October."

THE RETIRING EDITOR OF THE MISSIONARY VOICE.

By W. W. Pinson.

Those who have been most intimateiy associated with the retiring editor of the Voice part with him as a fellow-worker with regret. He has edited the Voice with marked ability for eight years. During that period it has won its way to the front rank of missionary periodicals in this country, with a iarge and growing subscription iist. It is but repeating the popuiar verdict to say he has few superiors in the editoriai fieid. He has aiso won wide popuiarity as a writer for various publications, North and South.

The writer has worked in the most intimate relations with Mr. Eleazer for nearly sixteen years, as Associate Secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, Business Manager of the Board of Missions and editor of the Voice. It wiii always remain one of my priceiess memories that I have known and had as my friend a man of this type. He has proven himseif ciean, true and courageous. He has high ideals and lives up to them. He ioves the truth with a consuming passion and hates sham and falsehood with equal power. The truth to him is not a shieid, it is a sword. To believe, with him is to act. He grows impatient with comfortahie and easy-going standards of living. He believes in a gospei that wiii set things right, and says so.

He goes from us with a ciean escutcheon and a record of high, unseifish and efficient service. We shaii foiiow him with our love and prayers, and when we iook for him it wiii not be in the easy places, but in the ranks of those who serve God and humanity where it costs.

"I have iived, sir, a iong time; and the ionger I iive the more convincing proofs I see that God governs in the affairs of men. If a sparrow can not faii to the ground without his notice, is it prohabie that an empire can rise without his aid? * * * Without his concurring aid we shaii succeed in this poiiticai buiiding no better than the buiiding of Babei."—Benjamin Frankiin.

For aii the other pieasures suhstitute consciousness that you are obeying God, and performing not in word, hut in deed, the duty of a wise and good man.—Epictetus.

The Home Circle

A KIND WORD, A SUNNY SMILE.

It was only a sunny smile,
And little it cost in the giving;
But it scattered the night
Like the morning light,
And made the day worth living.
Through life's dull warp a woof it wove
In shining colors of hope and love;
And the angels smiled as they watched above,
Yet little it cost in the giving.

It was only a kindly word,
A word that was lightly spoken;
Yet not in vain,
For it stilled the pain
Of a heart that was nearly broken.
It strengthened a faith beset by fears,
And groping blindly through mists of tears,
For light to brighten the coming years,
Although it was lightly spoken.

THE MYSTERIES OF THE SEA BOTTOM.

The deep sea is the most mysterious as well as the most extensive of all the haunts of animal life. There is of course plenty of life in the two hundred and fifty fathoms or so near the surface into which light can penetrate. Below that, says Prof. J. Arthur Thomson in his lectures in the Royal Institution at London, there are vast, lonely wastes of water with scarcely any life at all, and below that again, at depths varying from two and a half to six miles, is another world swarming with living things, but entirely different from any world of which we have any experience. No one has ever seen it, but the long arm of the dredge can reach it and has told us wonderful stories of what goes on down there.

It is cold and dark, still and very silent, and the pressure of the water is at least two and a half tons to the square inch; yet all the animals have adapted themselves to life under those grim conditions.

All the animals that live on the sea bottom have enormously long, thin legs, especially the spiders and crabs. The bottom of the deep sea is covered everywhere with slimy ooze, so that they all must walk on stilts to escape being smothered.

Three types of life are absent from those great depths. There are no plants, because plants cannot grow without sunlight; there are no microbes, so that nothing ever decays; and there are no real insects. As there are no plants, it is hard to see how the animals feed. We know that in the deep sea fishes eat mollusks, and mollusks eat worms, and worms eat smaller worms, but that sort of thing cannot go on forever. Something must come from the outside. It is now known that that outside supply of food consists of a "continual rain of atomies."—infusoria and broken particles from the sea meadows far above—all clean and sweet and never failing.

Many of the fishes have enormous eyes, some indeed so large that the fishes have to carry them at the end of stalks. Others have eyes smaller than pin points. No one knows what they use their eyes for, or why they are so different.

Another puzzle is phosphorescence. Many deep-sea fishes have lanterns. It is unlikely that they use them to find their way about in the depths, because they often wear them in their tails. Perhaps they use them as a lure. But, if so, why do some of them have red and some green lights? It is all very puzzling. Perhaps it is best to say, "We do not know."

A third puzzle is the brilliant color of many of the creatures that live in the dark—crimson and blue and gold. Of what use is it? But, Professor Thomson concludes, perhaps we are too anxious to find usefulness in everything; perhaps the very beauty is sufficient use. Well, possibly; but—to raise the question of utility again—of what use is beauty that no one ever sees?—Exchange.

A YOUNG HUSTLER.

By Lydia Lion Roberts.

Sometimes I have heard boys complain when their mother asked them to go on errands or to sweep rugs or chop some wood. Not long ago I read agout a boy who seemed to feel differently about work. In his autobiography Edward Bok tells how he helped with the housework and also earned money to help his parents when they first came to America and everything was new and strange.

The mother was not very strong, so Edward and his brother got up early to build the fire, prepare breakfast and wash the dishes. After school they gave up their playtime and swept and scrubbed, helped get supper and again washed the dishes.

Yet Edward did not feel he was doing enough, and though he was under thirteen years of age, he decided he must earn some money to help with the rent and food. He could not find a way at first, but kept trying and thinking until he had the right idea.

One afternoon he stood before a baker's shop window, hungrily looking at the display of buns, tarts and pies that the baker had just placed there.

"They look pretty good, don't they?" the baker asked as he came outside.

"They would if your window was clean," thoughtfully replied Edward.

"Perhaps you'll clean it," the baker smiled.

"All right, I will," quickly replied the little boy.

He went in the store and found a step-ladder and used so much energy and made the window shine so brightly that the baker hired him to clean it twice a week after school at fifty cents a week. And so Edward got his first job.

One day when Edward was in the store a customer came in and stood waiting for the baker to attend to her. But the baker was very busy in the back of the store, so after a few moments Edward decided to wait on her himself.

The baker noticed this and watched to see if the boy did well. When he saw how quickly and cheerfully Edward served his customer he offered him an extra dollar a week for helping him wait on customers in the afternoons.

Edward agreed if he could carry home something good to his mother every day, and it was so arranged.

Soon he asked for the delivery route of the weekly paper in his neighborhood and got one more dollar a week for that work.

Then he looked around to see what else he could do. He noticed that the cars which ran near his house stopped for several minutes to water the horses (this was in the time of horse cars). The passengers looked very warm and thirsty, too, after their long, dusty ride, but there was no way for them to get a drink.

Edward thought this might be a good opportunity, so he bought a shining new pail, screwed three hooks on the edge and hung three glasses on them. When the cars stopped he leaped on, offered the conductor and motorman a drink of his ice-cooled water and sold it to the passengers at one cent a glass.

He found this very profitable, but soon other boys began to do the same thing, which reduced his profits.

He felt he must earn as much as before, so after thinking it over he added lemons and sugar to his pail of water and sold lemonade at three cents a glass. Soon all the passengers wanted lemonade.

As he grew older he got other positions that paid him better, but any boy might be proud of the record of helpfulness and hustling that this thirteen-year-old boy made.

He was not ashamed to help at home, nor afraid to try his ideas at earning money, and for every cent he earned he gave back more than that in cheerful, hard work. Maybe that is why he became such a great and respected man.—Exchange.

KINDS OF CHRISTIANS.

Strictly speaking, there can be only one kind of true Christian—one whose life is spent in utter loyalty to the gospel. A Christian is a Christian; and by so much as a man lacks the characteristics of the Christian life, by so much does he fall short of the requirements of his profession.

But there are some people who think of themselves as Christians, and who are so regarded by the world, whose feelings would be very greatly hurt if they should find themselves classified as being not of the number of the truly elect. For convenience, therefore, and for the sake of those who may really be self-deceived, we may undertake to classify those who profess the Christian faith. A basis for the classification is to be found in the parable of the sower as recorded in the eighth chapter of Luke's Gospel.

1. The Church Register Christian. In the parable, the seed that fell by the wayside, so that it was trodden under foot and devoured by the birds, may be likened to the man who thinks he has met all the requirements of the gospel simply by assuming the obligations of church membership and having his name placed upon the church register. It is strange that anybody in this enlightened age should have such a low conception of the highest type of life the world has ever known; yet it seems to be true that there are thousands of people who are resting serenely in the belief that, since their names are enrolled in the church book, they are also to be found in the Book of Life. We are reliably informed that some preachers (not Methodists, thank God!) tell the people to whom they preach that all they have to do to make their calling and election sure is to make a formal profession of faith, submit to the ordinance of baptism, join the church—and their eternal salvation is assured, regardless of their manner of life thereafter! Certainly these can be nothing more than church register Christians.

2. The Emotional Christian. In the parable, the seed that fell on the rock, which withered away as soon as it grew because it had no moisture, may be likened to the man who, under the stress of emotional excitement, makes profession of his faith and, for a little while, seems to show the fruits of a regenerate life; but because his profession has grown out of a passing emotion and is not based upon a true apprehension of the gospel, he soon loses interest in the things of the Spirit and lapses into his old sinful ways. It is perfectly apparent that there is a legitimate emotional appeal for enlistment in the Christian life, and that emotion has a real part to play in the development of that life; but it is likewise evident that unless faith is rested in the intellect and the will there can be no permanency of Christian character. A revival of the emotional type seldom produces lasting results.

3. The Worldly Christian. In the parable, the seed that fell among the thorns, so that the thorns grew with it and choked it, may be likened to the man who really receives the gospel message, but who allows the material interests of life so to interfere with the exercise of the Christian virtues and graces that sooner or later they become the predominant interests, and the spiritual withers away and dies. It is a law of the Christian life that spiritual interests cannot be secondary; and the man who makes them so inevitably and invariably loses spiritual vitality.

4. The True Christian. In the parable, the seed that fell into the good ground, and grew, and brought forth fruit a hundredfold, may be likened to the man whose intellect and will consent to the truth his emotional nature so heartily approves of, who brings all his material affairs into subjection to the law of Christ, who identifies himself with the church and faithfully performs his religious duties, and who constantly grows in grace and in the knowledge of his Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. He only is the true Christian.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The next meeting of the International Sunday School Convention will be at Birmingham, Ala.

Rev. Walt Holcomb, one of our general evangelists, sailed recently to engage in evangelistic work in Europe.

Mr. James H. Felts, Jr., of St. Louis, Mo., has recently been visiting his parents, Rev. and Mrs. J. H. Felts, at Greenville, Miss.

A cooling system has been installed in the building of the Big Brothers' Bible Class at Greenville, Miss. Fine for this hot weather!

General Julian S. Carr, one of the distinguished laymen of our church, was recently elected commander-in-chief of the United Confederate Veterans.

Rev. J. A. Wells had the misfortune to have his new Ford car stolen while he was attending the Dunaway meeting at McComb, Miss., last Friday night.

Bishop John W. Hamilton recently resigned as chancellor of the American University, at Washington, D. C. Dr. C. Clark was elected to succeed him.

Rev. J. A. Baylor, Architectural Secretary of the Board of Church Extension, has been advised of his election to membership in the American Institute of Architects.

The fall meeting of the College of Bishops will be held in New Orleans, December 8-10. These distinguished visitors will receive a cordial welcome in the Crescent City.

Rev. J. G. Snelling, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, made a visit to Louisville, Ky., last week in the interest of church building enterprises within the bounds of the district.

A patriotic service was held at the First Methodist Church of this city at ten o'clock, Tuesday morning, July 4. The principal address was delivered by the pastor, Rev. R. H. Harper.

Bishop and Mrs. John M. Moore sailed with Bishop Hoyt M. Dobbs for Brazil on June 24. Bishop Moore has been in charge of that district, and he now turns it over to Bishop Dobbs.

Rev. N. E. Joyner, pastor of our Trinity Church, Ruston, La., will preach at the Monteagle Assembly, Monteagle, Tenn., on August 6, and deliver several lectures during the week following.

It is now Lamar & Barton, Publishing Agents, instead of Smith & Lamar, as we have been so accustomed to write. Our great publishing interests represent one of the strongest phases of our work.

Seventy people have united with the First Methodist Church at Greenville, Miss., since December 1. During the pastorate of Rev. E. S. Lewis, 517 have been added to the membership of that church.

Mrs. M. E. Joyce, formerly of Jackson, Miss., a good friend of the Advocate, is now making her home at 421 Lake Avenue, St. Louis, Mo. Of course, the Advocate continues to go to her at her new address.

We learn from the Lincoln County Times that Rev. and Mrs. H. M. Ellis, of Brookhaven, Miss., are visiting their daughter in Cincinnati, Ohio. Mrs. Ellis went by train, but Brother Ellis made the trip in his automobile.

Miss Clara Chalmers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Chalmers, arrived this week for a short visit with her parents. Miss Chalmers is engaged in missionary work in Cuba, being a teacher in the Irene Toland School for Girls, at Matanzas.

The first issue of the Alabama Christian Advocate under the editorial management of Rev. M. E. Lazenby shows that the high standard established by Dr. L. C. Branscomb will be maintained. The paper was, as usual, full of good things.

The Methodist Hospital at Memphis, Tenn., which recently sold its plant to the Government, has bought and paid for a new site of a little more than four acres, which is considered to be far superior to the old location for its purposes.

The Wesleyan Bible Class of the Sunday school of the First Methodist Church of this city had an attendance of 241 on a recent Sunday. Mr. C. F. Niebergall, vice president of the Commercial National Bank, is the teacher of this great class.

The Bulletin of the First Methodist Church, Laurel, Miss., for June 25, has a very complimentary reference to the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Rev. O. S. Lewis, the pastor, is a strong supporter of all the institutions of the church.

Rev. C. A. Bowen, head of the Department of Religious Education in Millsaps College, is spending the summer at Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., doing advanced work in his specialty. Mrs. Bowen is with him and she also is taking special work in the University.

The Methodists of Hammond, La., have sold their old parsonage property and purchased another for $5500. The new parsonage is just in front of the church and is a very desirable piece of property. Possession will be given on October 1.

We learn from press dispatches that Bishop and Mrs. E. R. Hendrix celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on June 20, at their home in Kansas City, Mo. A silver water pitcher was the remembrance given by his colleagues in the College of Bishops.

We have seen an announcement to the effect that Dr. W. F. Quillian, president of Wesleyan College, Macon, Ga., will fill out the year at Mulberry Street Church, in place of Dr. T. D. Ellis, who was elected Secretary of the Board of Church Extension.

The assessments on our three patronizing Conferences for the general causes for the next quadrennium are as follows: Louisiana Conference, $46,379; Mississippi Conference, $53,215; North Mississippi Conference, $58,114. The assessment on the whole church is $2,075,000.

Our church at Lyon, Miss., has, by official action of the quarterly conference, been named The Henrietta Allen Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, South. This action was taken in honor of the late Mrs. Allen, who was one of the greatest forces for righteousness in that section of Mississippi.

The McComb City Journal of June 28 gives an interesting account of the great tabernacle meeting now in progress in that city. A tabernacle that will seat three thousand people has been erected, and people are attending the meeting from neighboring towns. Rev. C. M. Dunaway is doing the preaching.

A great revival has just been brought to a close at Sunflower, Miss., where Rev. F. H. McGee is pastor. The preaching was done by Rev. W. M. McIntosh. An account of the meeting, received too late for this issue of the Advocate, will appear next week. The church at Sunflower has given its pastor a trip to Junaluska, N. C., for the Sunday School Training School, July 13-27. Fine!

The report of the Sunday school of the Capitol Street Methodist Church, Jackson, Miss., to the recent district conference, showed the following facts: number of officers and teachers, 72; number on the Cradle Roll, 53; number in the Home Department, 52; total enrollment, 1026; number teacher-training classes, 1; number Wesley Bible classes, 12; average attendance, 800; highest attendance, 972. The total amount raised for all purposes this year is $1,797.09. That is a great school.

The Free Press, of Poplarville, Miss., edited by Rev. G. S. Harmon, has a ringing editorial in its issue of June 29 concerning the recent mob violence of union coal miners against non-union miners at Herrin, Ill. The editor very properly speaks strongly in condemnation of mob violence of any kind, anywhere—but he respectfully refers the South-hating newspapers of the country, who seem to think that the South alone is responsible for crimes of this character, to this outrage in another section. We fully agree with our esteemed contemporary. "Those who live in glass houses should not throw stones."

We have just received a copy of a booklet, "Kindling for the Home Fires, or How to Get the Habit of Holding Family Worship," issued by Rev. W. Fred Long and Dr. H. Walter Featherstun and given to the men who attended the noonday prayer meeting at Jackson, Miss., following the wonderful Gipsy Smith meeting. The booklet contains appropriate Scripture passages and prayers for family worship morning and evening for an entire week, and it ought to prove a great help to those who are just establishing family altars. A few copies were left after the distribution at Jackson, and these may be had, free of charge, upon request addressed to W. Fred Long, Jackson, Miss.

We take the following editorial account of a recent meeting in Winona, Miss., from the Winona Times of June 30: "For the past two weeks there has been in progress a revival at the Methodist Church. Rev. J. T. Lewis delivered the sermons each evening. The series of sermons showed that the pastor had devoted much time and thought to the chain of gospel truths he presented to the large audiences that assembled each evening. His sermons were not sensational, but full of practical common sense and Christian thought. They appealed to the thinking mind instead of the excitable or emotional mind. The meeting had a wonderful effect on the people—it made both Christian and sinner stop and take stock. Many a feeling of prejudice and hate was made to disappear and brotherly love reign instead. As a result, aside from a number of conversions, a large per cent of the people have determined to do more in the Christian world in the future than they have in the past. The final sermon Sunday night, delivered to one of the largest congregations that ever assembled in the city, was based on Diligence and Courage. It was masterly presented and stirred the soul of the large audience. It was a fitting conclusion to a meeting that has changed lives and renewed vows that will terminate in the substantial advancement of the cause of Christ, Who gave His life to save the world."

THANKS TO OUR FRIENDS.

We desire to express our thanks to the following friends who have sent us two or more subscriptions recently: Rev. H. J. Moore, Forest, Miss., 16; Rev. J. L. Greenway, Mt. Olive, Miss., 4; Rev. T. B. Winstead, Carthage, Miss., 3.

PRAYER MEETING ATTENDANCE.

The following are the only reports we have received of prayer meeting attendance last week: Algiers, C. C. Wier, pastor, 72; Lafayette, L. I. McCain, pastor, 82; Jackson, B. D. Watson, pastor, 15.

OUR SYRIAN EVANGELIST.

The pastors and laymen of the Mississippi Conference will no doubt be greatly interested in the following encouraging report of his work to the recent session of the Jackson District Conference, at Harrisville, by Rev. Charles Assaf, a Syrian evangelist, who is endorsed and employed by our General Board of Missions, and also jointly by our presiding elders and by our Conference Board of Missions:

"To the Presiding Elder and Members of the Jackson District Conference, 1922:

"Dear Brethren—I beg leave to submit the following report:

"I have preached forty-four times during the year in thirty-one different churches. Thirty have joined the church under my ministry, twenty-four Syrian brethren and six native Americans. Five hundred and four Syrians have been out to hear me preach in the different places visited. Seven Syrian women have joined the Woman's Missionary Society, and a large number, including men, women, and children, have joined the Sunday school. I have greatly enjoyed my work for the Lord and our churches, and I ask the brethren to pray for me. The more work is given me to do, the better I like it. I appreciate the opportunity of being with the brethren, and their courtesies to me. May the Lord bless you all, and give good success to your work.

"Your brother in Christ,

"Signed: C. ASSAF."

Brother Assaf is doing an important and much needed work among the members of his own race and nationality, and we trust that our pastors will cheerfully open the way for him, particularly in those cities and towns where Syrians are residing, whether they be few or many. He is reaching these neglected people as nobody else among us has done, and is lining them up for service in the church and the Master's kingdom. His address is 428 Lynch Street, Jackson, Miss.

WHEN THE PEN IS VAIN.

Jeremiah was perhaps unfortunate in his contemporaries There are some untoward generations, in the course of history, and even if we believe that in the long run the world is becoming better, that does not necessarily imply that there are not certain years or decades when progress turns back upon itself. At any rate, in the time of Jeremiah lived a number of self-satisfied, quasi-leaders of the public who said, "We are wise," and who never, in the solemnity of a self-scrutiny, asked with penitence of heart, "What have I done?" The worst of the case was that such men would keep on writing—rushing into the print of their day, so that the disgusted prophet, recoiling as it were from all literature, exclaimed, "The pen of the scribes is in vain." Our Lord, in a somewhat similar manner, and for much the same reasons, reacted against the smug literary and legal Pharisaism of His day—scribes and lawyers were His antipathy.

Much of the argument and writing of to-day is indeed in vain. The high cost of printing, indefensible as it may be from the standpoint of what ought to be the condition in an ideal commonwealth, has at least one incidental advantage, if it prevents some of the fools from featuring their views with the linotype. Unfortunately, error is sometimes willing to pay its own bills, even if they be heavy, and so we are treated to all sorts of false, foolish, or weak literature.

When, now, is the pen vain? When it writes that there is no God. We do not read so much of that sort of inept atheistic trash nowadays, yet often we are misinformed about the "God" who—or that—is admitted to exist. A good deal of the vanity of abstraction, impersonalism, mechanism, and fatalism is being, implicitly if not explicitly, slipped into the columns of the magazines. We are still, it seems, expected to believe in God, or permitted so to do, but it must not clearly appear in what sort of God we are to believe. Instead of dwelling, like David, in the house of the Lord, we are to be sheltered in a fog-bank of the Unknowable.

Vain, again, is the writing of the modern scribes when they set it down that atonement is out of date, prayer a waste of time and breath, and history a matter merely of predetermined, fatalistic evolution. These are the people who to-day are saying, "There have always been and always will be wars—human nature never changes," forgetting how Saul of Tarsus changed into Paul, how John Newton changed from a blasphemous sailor to a hymn-writer, how Jerry McAuley, John B. Gough, and others who were once aliens in the far country of sin, "changed," for their own good and that of the world. There are those who are writing to-day that germ plasm is everything and God is nothing; that the world is active, and the deity an absentee; that man is nonmoral, but that morality does not make any difference, anyway; that life is a farce, and you can play it or not, as you want; that there are two codes of convention, one for woman and another for man; that war is a natural, and peace an abnormal, state—and so on, through all the series of subtle, satanic deceits. When we read that sort of stuff we recall Jeremiah's reaction, "The pen of the scribe is vain." But when we read Luke's two stories, the Gospel of John, and the Epistles of Paul, we conclude that some scribes have written quite into the heart of life's long question, and given us some worth-while reading.—Zion's Herald.

A GOOD WORSHIPER.

A writer in Life and Work sets forth the qualities of a good worshiper:

1. One who has prayed for the teacher, and for the Holy Spirit's influence on the congregation.
2. One who is punctually in his place at church, to be recognized by the minister, with his family beside him.
3. One who has a good Bible in his pew, and devoutly follows the reading, as hearing God speak to him.
4. One who joins in the praise as earnestly as do the leaders.
5. One who follows and silently unites in the prayers.
6. One who looks for the Divine impress in the sermon, not for startling statements.
7. One who has a word and a look of Christian courtesy for those near him after the service closes.—Exchange.

Thou canst not all die—there is what must survive.—Byron.

Age rots away the gold we are set in, but the adamantine soul lives on, radiant in every way in the light streaming down from God.—Theodore Parker.

GUY BRAMLETT, son of R. W. and Mrs. Maud Bramlett, was born November 25, 1906, and died May 29, 1922, at Coldwater, Miss. He joined the Boy Scouts Troop No. 1, Coldwater, Miss., in April, 1918, of which he was a true and faithful member until the time of his death, by his life, and conduct, erecting another monument in the territory of death to the principles and teachings of the Boy Scouts of America. The writer of this article as Scout Master of his troop, knew Guy most intimately, and can truthfully say that he ever tried to live according to the motto of the Boy Scouts, "Be Prepared." He was deeply endeared to his friends; his affectionate and cheerful disposition won for him the confidence and esteem of all who knew him well.

'Tis hard to break the tender cord
Which has bound the heart.
'Tis hard, so hard, to speak the words,
"We must forever part."
Boy Scout, we have laid thee
In the peaceful grave's embrace,
But the memory will be cherished,
Till again we see thy face.

May an abiding faith and love in Him who doeth all things well, comfort and direct the bereaved family, and may this untimely death only serve to draw them closer to that unknown shore, from whose bourne no traveler returns.

J. SIDNEY EASON, M. D.

On December 5, 1921, God, in his infinite wisdom, removed from our midst MRS. SALLY J. CHANEY, daughter of William H. and E. J. Tillery. Mrs. Chaney was born December 3, 1851, near Grangeville, St. Helena Parish, La., and was married to W. R. Chaney on November 28, 1872. To this union were born eight children, four of whom have gone on before. Those left behind are E. W. and L. B. Chaney, of Clinton, La.; Mrs. Cleveland Joseph, of White Castle, La., and Mrs. Zack Powers, of Baton Rouge, La. She also leaves a devoted husband, and two brothers—J. A. Tillery, of Montpelier, La., and W. L. Tillery, of Greensburg, La. She joined the Pipkins Chapel Methodist Church when a mere girl and lived a devoted Christian life, with her membership at Pipkins until death. This church lost one of its most consecrated members; the Sunday school one of its most zealous workers; the community a friend and neighbor of the highest type; her husband a devoted and faithful wife, and her children a loving, Christian mother.

We must all bow in humble submission to Him who doeth all things well, trusting that this sorrow may serve to bind us more closely to our heavenly father. And we trust that the sweet remembrance of her pure, Christian life may be an inspiration to all who knew her. Her life was a constant reminder of the truth and power of religion. May we all seek to emulate her virtues, so that when the last summons shall come to us from our Father in heaven we shall be prepared to meet her.

Her brother,
J. A. TILLERY.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, it has pleased our Heavenly Father, in his infinite wisdom, to take from us our friend and co-worker, MRS. AGNES JONES; and

Whereas, she was not only a regular attendant upon the services of the Methodist Church, a liberal and systematic contributor to the support of the church and all its institutions, but was willing and able to help with any movement for the betterment of the community; and

Whereas, she was so long identified with the Woman's Missionary Society, and served as an agent for the missionary literature continuously and faithfully through many discouragements, for more than twenty years; and

Whereas, through all her loneliness and physical suffering, upheld by the Holy Spirit, she was always patient and cheerful and her loyal and conscientious Christian character inspired all her associates to higher and holier living; therefore be it resolved:

First—That we, the members of the Woman's Missionary Society, realizing our loss and feeling our bereavement, bow in humble submission to the will

JELL-O Ice Cream Powder

ICE CREAM THAT MOTHER MAKES GOES FAST

UP to very recent times home-made ice cream was not the real thing at all. Now when mother (or the maid or the cook) makes ice cream she uses one package of Jell-O Ice Cream Powder and one quart of rich milk for half a gallon of ice cream—and she never fails to have "good luck."

Jell-O Ice Cream Powder is sold by all grocers, two packages for 25 cents.

Epworth League.

LOUISIANA STATE EPWORTH LEAGUE OFFICERS.

At the recent Assembly held in Mansfield, the following were elected as officers for the Louisiana State Epworth League:

Field Secretary, Jas. B. Grambling; President, Rev. Leland Clegg; Vice President, Edgar Cayard; Secretary, Miss Nena Collins; Treasurer, Miss Grace Cook; Era Agent, Richard Edgley; Junior and Intermediate Superintendent, Miss Emma Gessner; Dean of Assembly, Rev. A. S. Lutz; Life Service Superintendent, Mrs. R. H. Wynn; First Department Superintendent, Miss Ruth Wilkins; Second Department Superintendent, Miss Laura Edwards; Third Department Superintendent, to be supplied; Fourth Department Superintendent, Miss Maud Nelson; Editor League News for the New Orleans Christian Advocate, Miss Sophie Kuntz.

District Secretaries — Alexandria District, Miss Ruth Bryan; Baton Rouge District, Katherine Evans; Houma District, Miss Nellie Brunette; Lake Charles District, Josephine Smith; Monroe-Ruston District, Miss Carrie Mae Alford; New Orleans District, Miss Thelma Cayard; Shreveport District, Mr. Cecil Perryman.

Some Opinions of the Assembly.

The League Assembly seemed to me to be the best and more Leagues represented with a better spirit and a more earnest consecration than any of the three I have been privileged to be a part of. As I travel over the State I find the League everywhere is becoming a greater power in the upbuilding of the church.

STEPHEN S. THOMAS,
La. Conf. Centenary Sec'y-Treas.

The recent Epworth League Assembly at Mansfield provided a season of fine training and preparation for the young people who are to be the future leaders of our church. The classes gave them a larger knowledge of our church and fitted them to be more efficient in carrying on the work of the League, while the inspirational value of the Assembly was great. But better than any statement that can be made as to the character of work done is the fact that on Tuesday night twenty-five or more fine young people offered themselves as life-service volunteers in some kind of Christian work.

Pastor, First Methodist Church,

GO TO CAMP YOPECACOE.

July 29-August 11.

The Summer Camp Conference has a large place in the activities of the present day church, especially those departments that serve the young life of the church. This is in recognition of the fact that the appeal to youth should be made on a reasonable basis; that if recreation, study, and religious influences can be combined, you will be able to reach more young people and make larger contributions to both youth and the church.

The vacation habit is fixed, in so far as a very large proportion of the people are concerned, and it will continue thus, except that a larger number each year will "acquire the habit." At its basis is a real need, and we do well to heed the call of tired body and mind for relaxation and rest. With youth the vacation period is one of peril as well as of benefit. The church must recognize this fact and must use to the best possible advantage its opportunities for service to the young people. And what better chance is there than in provision for recreation, study, and training for Christian service in one program? This is the ideal and the practical working of the Young People's Camp Conference at Lake Junaluska, N. C.

At Camp Yopecacoe, July 29 to August 11, will be held the second session of the training school conducted by the Department of Young People's and Adult Work of the General Sunday School Board of our church. Our people know, in a general way at least, what Junaluska offers. All of the advantages of this great assembly place of Southern Methodism will be available for the young people who attend this camp conference. Location, climate, and other natural advantages make it an ideal situation, and the added advantages are association with people of the best type and influence and fellowship in study with real leaders in the Sunday school world. The campers will occupy the two dormitories erected by the General Sunday School Board, one dormitory for women and one for men. The entire cost for furnished room, meals in the cafeteria of the Sunday School Board, fee to the Assembly grounds, baggage transfer, the one required textbook, stationery, etc., all necessary items—is $25. This for two weeks in the mountains of North Carolina and at Lake Junaluska! If there is a cheaper vacation expense for two weeks at any resort or any other place in this country, all items mentioned being included, we do not know of it. The railroads give special round trip rates to Lake Junaluska, N. C., and the railroad agent at your town can give you exact information concerning this item of expense. You can make your plans knowing just what the trip will cost you.

In addition to all of the advantages mentioned, is the big item of several hours daily in the training courses offered. The two courses offered are: The Standard Training Course Units, five classes being open and each camper must take one unit of those offered; Special Camp Courses, for workers with young people and others. There will be training in principles of recreational leadership, directed recreation, social programs, lectures, Bible study, etc. The camp will be open both to young people from eighteen to twenty-five, and to adult workers with young people. Make your plans now to attend this camp conference. And bring before your Sunday school the matter of sending, or helping to send, one or more of its young people or workers with young people. It would be an investment that would bring large returns. For further information write to the Camp Director, Rev. W. C. Owen, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

CHANGE OF LIFE WOMAN'S TRIAL

Proof That Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is of Great Help at This Period

Metropolis, Illinois.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it is all it claims to be and has benefited me wonderfully. I had been sick for eight months with a trouble which confined me to my bed and was only able to be up part of the time, when I was advised by a friend, Mrs. Smith, to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills. I was so much benefited by the use of these medicines that I was able to be up and about in two weeks. I was at the Change of Life when I began taking the medicines and I passed over that time without any trouble. Now I am hale and hearty, do all my housework, washing, ironing, scrubbing, and cooking, all there is to do about a house, and can walk two or three miles without getting too tired. I know of several of my neighbors who have been helped by your medicines."—Mrs. EMMA CULVER, 705 E. 7th St., Metropolis, Illinois.

Depend upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Nervousness, irritability, heat flashes, headache and dizziness, are relieved by this splendid medicine.

Sunday School

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

The Biloxi Standard Training School is history. We had a good enrollment, 29 or 30, there being doubt about one enrollment card; 23 three credits were issued. There was an average attendance of 40 each day in the classes. I am sure that next year it will be a bigger and better school.

Sunday School Day Funds are coming in. We have not as yet had to borrow any money. It is possible that we can pull through the year if we can get the loyal support of the Sunday schools.

Brother Hull has done a good month's work.

The Sunday School Board through its work has reached 135 Sunday schools this month. Two district institutes and two training schools and two circuit-wide Sunday school institutes were held.

Pray earnestly for the work and the workers. Yours in Him,

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

New Albany has solved the problem of getting a large number of preachers and teachers to attend our training schools. You may ask how, if you care to know.

Classes have been organized at Batesville, Durant, and New Albany. Keep the good work going and get ready to join the federation next year. In the meantime, build up the classes and organize in the schools near you. Never forget it, we are not reaching more than half the people we can reach.

How about missionary instruction once a month and your "specials?" The school that does not help others is not much service to itself. You have got to instruct before you can get anywhere.

Brother Wroten, wife and children are going to Lake Junaluska to attend the training school. Brother Frank McGee is also going to take special work that he may be one of our accredited teachers to help in our training schools. We ought to have one hundred of our leading men and women attend that school that is making leaders in religious education.

Do not pay any attention to this paragraph. Suppose your stewards should collect your salary and put it in the bank and let it stay there until Conference, what would you think? Suppose they would fail to collect it at all, what would you say? Can you make the application? Have you failed to observe Sunday School Day?

A GREAT REVIVAL AT BUNKIE, LA.

Friday evening, June 23, witnessed the closing scene of what was perhaps the greatest revival meeting ever held in this community. Rev. J. O. Hanes, of Birmingham, Ala., one of the general evangelist did the preaching. He was ably assisted by his co-worker, Mr. W. G. Waltermire.

The meeting began on June 11, and had been thoroughly advertised, and interest and expectation were running high on the opening day. The women of the church had held daily prayer meetings for the week preceding, and these meetings continued, in three groups, throughout the meeting. It is needless to say that a spirit of consecration was generated in these group meetings which contributed very largely to the success of the campaign.

The services began in the church, but it became evident in very few days that the church building was entirely inadequate to take care of the crowds who came. So we moved out into the open air, on the church lawn, where we improvised seats of rough lumber, and a small platform of the same material, and there held forth during the remainder of the time.

The meeting was started as a Methodist and Presbyterian meeting, but soon developed into a community matter and began to reach out into the surrounding country for many miles around. A very large per cent of the congregation each night came from a distance of ten to fifteen miles distance.

There were many unusual instances occurred. One night the Masonic Lodge attended in a body; another high light was when, on the closing day at ten o'clock, an old-fashioned love feast was held, during which many lives were reconsecrated to the Master's service. Old differences were healed, and men and women who had never found a tongue to speak in public before rose up and told of the wonderful works of God.

It remains to speak of the results of the campaign; but at this early date any estimate would necessarily be far short of the actual results. The membership of the Methodist church has increased by about 45, while the other churches received a substantial increase in their membership. But what, to my mind, is the greatest and most permanent value was the reconsecration, the deepened spiritual experience which came to many who had long been members of the church. Old men who had spent almost a life-time in the membership of the church came to the altar and there prayed for the joy of a Christian experience. Many pledges to a greater service were made, and family altars were pledged where none had been before. Literally hundreds pledged their efforts to make a more righteous community life, and prayer went up to God from hearts that perhaps had seldom ever prayed before.

Brother Hanes is a great gospel preacher. He preached twenty-six sermons while with us, and not a sensational word was spoken. In language simple and chaste, and with a life of prayer and deep consecration, he brings to his hearers a gripping message that moves to prayer. During the whole time he was here, and in my correspondence with him he never once mentioned finances. On the night before the last of the meeting we gave out envelopes for the offering, announced in few words what it was for, and received them back with an offering far above our expectations.

Brother Waltermire also rendered valuable service. He ranks high as a song leader and soloist, is a deeply spiritual man, and renders splendid service in personal work in the congregation.

May these two godly men be spared for many years to come to the work of spreading the kingdom, and the blessings of the Father be upon them and theirs! This writer unreservedly recommends them to pastors who need the service of an evangelist—you will be fortunate if you can secure them for your meeting.

MEMORIAL TO REV. J. E. CRAIG.

Sunday, June 20, 1922, the Sunday school and Woman's Missionary Society of Black Water Church presented that church with a beautiful silver individual communion tray, engraved in memory of Rev. J. E. Craig, former superintendent of the Sunday school and local preacher, who passed away a short time ago. At this time the following resolutions were read and adopted:

"Whereas it has pleased God in His wisdom to all from our midst Rev. J. E. Craig, we, the Sunday school of Black Water Church, wish to express our appreciation of him and realization of our great loss in his death.

"As superintendent of our Sunday school, he was most faithful, rarely indeed missing a service, but was always at his post of duty, ready to do his part and to encourage anything that was for the upbuilding of the Sunday school, or to give pleasure to the children. For years he was superintendent of the Cradle Roll and took great pride in that part of his work. It was during his leadership that this Sunday school became a leader in the Sunday school work of the Baton Rouge District.

"As a neighbor he was most helpful, especially in times of sickness or trouble of any kind. He always responded gladly to every appeal for help and did not 'grow weary in well doing.' In times of sickness he was a tower of strength, as almost every home in the community can testify, for he was a splendid nurse, and would always gladly offer to help wherever there was sickness. It was a joy to him to minister to the sick or those in trouble of any kind.

"As a churchman he was faithful and zealous, always praying and working for the advancement of his beloved church and the salvation of sinners. He has heard the Master's 'Well, done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.' We shall miss his face and his beautiful prayers at Sunday school, church and in our homes, but we hope to meet him in that Eternal City that he loved to talk about. Knowing his love for this Sunday school and church, let us all do our best to make this again the Sunday school of which he was so proud."

THE GOLDEN GLORY.

By William C. Allen.

As I looked out of my window early one morning (1922) when approaching Honolulu, I caught sight of a little boat floating easily in the arms of the sunny sea. The splendor of the tropical sun had transformed the beautiful waters into an ocean of gold. Who were the men in the tiny craft? I can not tell. Probably they were fishing folk who had toiled all night and who had caught almost nothing. Possibly they were humble workers who from their situation could not behold or imagine the golden glory that surrounded them.

Then I thought of how strangely like human life was their occupation and their surroundings. How many of us strive—and in God's ordering rightly strive—for the material things that must inevitably perish. How, whilst so engaged, we often fail to detect the beauty and the charm of life that is all about us. We do not understand the wonderful protection that God day by day affords us. We do not comprehend the riches of his forgiveness and grace. As the mist-crowned mountains of Oahu break the force of the strong trade-winds that sweep over the heaving bosom of the great Pacific and make a tranquil sea wherein the Hawaiian can float his little vessel, so does God often, very often, shelter us. We, too, are protected from the ravages and the perils of veritable oceans of difficulty—from dangers seen and unseen—and, like the fishermen I saw that entrancing morning, we are permitted to rest for a season in the golden sea of his quietness and peace.

But the simple lesson of that blue-flecked sea of gold did not close here. I thought of the imperishable future. When the voyage of life shall have almost ended, and the struggle and the weariness will have ceased, there shall remain for God's faithful children the heavenly vision that John wrote of—"the sea of glass mingled with fire." As the little boat I beheld outside of Honolulu harbor that iridescent morning quietly rested on the radiant waters, so will God finally and forever encompass us with perfect safety and encircle us within the golden glory of his love.

Science Discovers Greatest Lice Killer

Changes Old Methods. No Dusting or Spraying. Birds Dclouse Themselves. Gives Lasting Relief.

A recent discovery promises to revolutionize all the methods accepted up to now for keeping poultry free from lice and mites. This wonderful lice killer keeps the birds always free free without the poultry raiser doing any work. It is the simplest, easiest, surest and best method ever discovered.

Hick's Lice Kill, which is the name of this sensational lice killer, is added to the drinking water. The medicine taken into the system of the bird comes out through the pores and every louse or mite dies or leaves the body. It does not injure the hatchability or flavor of the eggs or meat; is harmless to chicks and does not affect the plumage. A few days treatment at the start and then a little in the drinking waer each month.

A TRIAL COSTS YOU NOTHING.

So confident is Mr. Hick that Hick's Lice Kill will kill every louse or mite, that he is making a special guaranteed offer of two regular full sized, double strength, $1.00 bottles and a regular $1.00 package of Hick's Egg-Lay Tablets all for $1.00. Use one bottle yourself and sell the other at one dollar, thus getting your own free. Send $1.00 today (Currency, money order, check, etc.) to Chas. M. Hick & Co., Dept. 393, 1018 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill. If you prefer, send no money, just your name and address, and pay postman $1.00 and postage on delivery. If after two weeks trial you are not absolutely satisfied, write Mr. Hick and your money will be refunded.

A LETTER FROM CUBA.

Dear Mrs. Snelling: You see I did receive your kind note requesting a "story" about the interesting facts of my work here in Cuba, and I did not forget; in fact, I have been doing some real hard thinking since I received your card, trying to decide what of all the very engrossing and fascinating points of views of my work in Matanzas would be most appreciated by our Missionary women readers of the Advocate. You seem to think they would be interested in my room; that is but natural—woman will always be woman. Give her the vote, put her in politics, make her the president of the United States, the feminine will out and she will always be interested in the dressing of the home and herself.

Matanzas, one of the oldest and most conservative towns in Cuba, is situated on the pretty bay of Matanzas and is only two and one-half hours' ride from the modern and far more progressive city of Havana. Our unique Spanish town is located in the hills and is divided into three distinct parts by the two rivers, Yumeri and San Juan. The Irene Toland school crowns one of the hills on the outskirts of the town and it overlooks directly the bay of Matanzas and Yumeri River. The valley of this river is noted as one of the most beautiful in the world and we with our children enjoy many pleasant afternoons in it at the waters' edge. Just about two miles out of Matanzas are the caves of Matanzas. During the Christmas holidays we made a trip to the caves and found them very beautiful and interesting indeed. Yes, I want to say and do say that Matanzas is beautiful, but it should be understood that when I say Matanzas is beautiful I am referring only to the God-created country on which man has built the city, and to the really inspiring country that surrounds the town and which our school overlooks. I wish all the women of Louisiana could see Matanzas from the four large Spanish windows of my room—they would fall in love with it at once, as did the charming wife of our beloved Bishop Atkins during her recent visit in Cuba, and as did I upon my arrival here. But what a contrast is the man-made city, with its narrow, dirty streets, ornamented with goats, dogs and naked children of uncertain color. I do not care to be quoted as saying that all the children of Cuba are of uncertain color, this is not the truth, but those we encounter in our streets certainly are.

I have mentioned the beautiful country our school overlooks, but in striking contrast we have another view which brings pain to the heart each time we look down over our wall into the small paved courts of our neighbors below. We are on the top of the hill, our neighbors at the bottom; we look down upon them. These neighbors are Africans and mixed Cubans who live huddled together in small Cuban houses, or, better, shacks, several of which open into the same small courtyard. These Africans are "nanegoes" who are allowed to practice their old barbarian religion provided the statue of the Virgin is given pre-eminence on their feast days. I know now where the "shimmy" dance has its origin; in celebrating a religious feast these Aricans perform a certain dance in which the individual stands perfectly still and shakes every muscle in his body, and how perfectly it is done! But at these feasts men dance with men; the women have their own dance and feast. These negroes believe that in times of extreme distress and plague only the blood of a white child will propitiate the wrath of their god or gods. The child is, of course, stolen, and is bled gradually as blood is needed in sacrifice, and finally the heart is removed while yet warm. During our very recent epidemic of smallpox all daily papers warned the white public to protect their children, since the nanegoes had been foiled in several attempts at stealing children. So far we have not been able to touch these people with mission work, but our woman's work does realize its opportunity here and purposes in the very near future to open up a Christian center or settlement from which we may reach into the lives and homes of these black heathen. Pray for the opening of this work.

But again to the top of the hill and into our own Irene Toland. What are we doing here? Our school caters to the children of the better Cuban class, whom we bring into our doors and transform into bright, happy Christians through the means of the Christian school-room, Christian environment and Christian love. We maintain the primary and advanced grades and a high school, which is affiliated with the government school. During the past year I taught five classes in English and was in charge of the primary dormitory. How I enjoyed my work, and how I love our children! Their love, and to see them growing and developing in Christian faith and strength is our reward. One of our dear little girls came to me before leaving for her vacation and told me how much she loved the school and the Protestant church and that she expected to join the Methodist church, "but," she said, "Miss Chalmers, I will not be able to go to church in my town for there is no Protestant church there." If that child stays with us long enough we expect so to train her that she will want to put forth the effort to start or help to work up a Sunday school in her home town. This is the way churches begin. Another little one came to me crying one night because her roommate was angry with her and would not speak to her, she said she had asked her friend to forgive her because she did not like to quarrel with her friends; she came crying because she could not go to sleep knowing that the other child was angry, she knew it was not Christian to quarrel and she wanted her friend to kiss her. Again, I went into a room in which were four children; it was time to turn out the light for the night and as I entered all were in the attitude of prayer and one was praying aloud. I joined them.

But I have neglected to tell you about my pretty room. It is a typical Spanish room; extra large and very high ceiling; the floor is tiled and the four large windows are securely guarded by rejas or heavy iron bars; the shutters, which serve to keep out rain and sun, open inside. One window faces east and overlooks the bay; two, south, and give one a splendid bird's eye view of the city and the surrounding hills; the fourth faces west, but not the setting sun, because our main building stands between it and the western horizon. I wish I could express to you just how much I appreciate the various views of this beautiful country that come to me through the windows of my room. I must not forget my pretty tiled floors. Large rooms, high ceilings, and tiled floors are the rule here in Cuba—they are necessary on account of the excessive heat. It never gets cold enough in Cuba for a fire, thus all houses are built with a view to making them as cool as possible; it would be impossible to heat a Cuban house, I mean a real Cuban house. So often I have wondered why the many poor people who live in the multitudes of Cuban shacks one sees in Cuba and especially Mantanzas do not simply burn up during the summer months. How are they existing through it right now! My tiled floor is blue and white and is designed similar to many of our velvet carpets at home, a pretty design is worked out in tile in the center and a border design finishes the extremities of the floor. These floors are really a delight and a source of great comfort, too; they are very easily kept clean, they are necessary also because wood cannot be used to advantage in building here on account of a certain kind of insect or ant which enters wood and completely destroys it in a very little while.

I would love to write on and on, Cuba, her people and their customs and the language are so fascinating; but I am sure, Mrs. Snelling, you are beginning to think that "give one an inch and he will take a mile," might be applied to me. I could tell you about our missionary society, which was organized this year, our Student Volunteer band, which is very much alive and enthusiastic, also our Junior Epworth League, which prophesies a well-trained Christian youth for the future, but I must leave these good things for another time. But tell your young people that there is great opportunity here for those who want to be happy in a life of service. Tell them to come. Lovingly,

CLARA E. CHALMERS.

If You Are Too Tired to Eat

Take Hood's Sarsaparilla. A well-known Justice of the Peace in Indiana says Hood's Sarsaparilla makes "food taste good." After taking three bottles he eats 3 hearty meals a day, works hard and sleeps well.

A grateful woman writes: "I earnestly recommend all women who wish to be made new, or who are tronbled with that tired feeling, to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. It wonderfully relieved me of sour stomach, distress and belching."

A LETTER FROM REV. ROBERT RANDLE.

Dear Brother Carley: I write you a few lines concerning my trip to Columbia, to see Brother W. J. Porter, who has been very low from an attack of pneumonia. It was one hundred and fifty days from the time that he undressed on account of the illness until he was dressed in his suit, last Sunday evening, that he might be pushed in his rolling chair, by his daughter—five months since he was stricken, and that very severely from the first hour. Most of the first two months, his life hung in the balance; and when the turn was for the better, he was so weak that it was a question whether he would reach health and strength. He is very weak yet, but he can eat nourishing food and we hope that he will be restored; but it will be many months before he will be able to do anything.

This has been a very severe strain on his dear and devoted wife and daughters, who have borne the brunt of the labor and solicitude; and by their constant and wise attention, under God's providence and mercy, he has come through thus far, and we hope will reach health again.

His church (charge) has been very kind and devoted to him during his illness. They have continued his salary as through he were at work, and have helped nurse him and met the wants as they have come up, and showed earnest desire to do everything financially and otherwise without any complaint; they have seemed anxious to do it.

The church has kept up all of its services except the preaching. Prayer meetings, Sunday school, Epworth League and all else have been assiduously attended to. They have taken preaching, as they could get it, from passing brethren, and a local preacher who lives in Columbia. I preached for them morning and evening, and we had very pleasant services.

I have known Brother Porter and his wife since they were young people—before they knew each other; I married them, and have kept up with them since. He has been a very efficient Methodist preacher, and she has made a very efficient "preacher's wife," which is a very important office. They have reared three excellent children—two cultured and accomplished daughters, first-class teachers, and one son, who has not yet finished his education but is striving to do so.

May God bless them unto the end, and may he especially bless the church and people of Columbia for their fidelity to his servant and the family, in this long and severe affliction.

ROBERT RANDLE.

Monroe, La.

A GREAT REVIVAL AT MAGNOLIA, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: No doubt you have often heard of a revival, but will you give me the space to tell you of one held recently in the Magnolia Methodist Church? While we did not have a union meeting, yet the pastors of the Baptist and the Presbyterian churches worshiped with us and contributed largely to the success of the meeting.

We secured the services of one of our general evangelists, Rev. G. A. Klein, of Memphis, Tenn., and his choir director and soloist, Prof. H. E. Litchfield, of Portland, Maine. These two men form a team which I do not hesitate to recommend to any Methodist preacher. Brother Klein is sound in all of his doctrines. He does not use any claptrap methods, but depends entirely upon the power of the old-time gospel and the Holy Spirit. He does not compromise with sin, but brings his message in a spirit of love for the sinful man and woman. He preached some of the strongest sermons I ever heard from any evangelist.

Brother Litchfield, choir director and soloist, is the finest I have ever heard. His interpretation of the song, rendered with his wonderful voice, touches the souls of his hearers. He is one of the few singers who sing from their souls. Fortunate is any evangelist or pastor who can get this man as a singer of the gospel of song.

Promptly at 9 o'clock every morning for the two weeks business houses, banks, and oil and gas stations closed their doors, and these men came to the morning services. At the evening hour people from adjacent towns and communities helped to fill the house. During the course of the meeting there were approximately three hundred conversions and reclamations, and almost the entire membership of all churches strengthened and revived. Seventy-seven united with the churches of town, thirty-six of that number giving their names to the Methodist Church. You will understand why this great revival when I tell you that the town was divided into prayer bands, touching nearly every home in the town. Reports coming to me each evening of the number present and prayers offered in each zone totalled 982 present, with 760 prayers.

The meeting is closed, the evangelist gone, but the prayer bands are still at work thanking God for the wonderful results of this meeting—for the new souls born into His kingdom and praying for the abiding presence of His Holy Spirit in the churches, in the homes, and in the hearts of His people.

WHAT OF YOUR BOY?

His education and training, and the development of his mind, body, and character depends on you, his parent. It is a grave responsibility, for there are so many antagonistic influences that come into play in a boy's life. As every boy looks back over his education and training he can always point out some one influence, some one life that has had a more profound influence. To thousands of boys this influence has been the guiding spirit, the personal association and the inspiring character of Mr. Robert K. Morgan, principal of Morgan School for twenty-five years. He knows boy nature. The close personal associations which he has fostered between his boy students and himself, his carefully chosen faculty, his careful attention to the boy's work, his thoughts, his talents, and his special needs, have given great prominence to his school and have characterized the success that he has merited in successfully shaping the lives of thousands of youths at the shaping age.

A postal card to Mr. L. I. Mills, Secretary Morgan School, Petersburg, Tenn., will bring you a catalogue and full information about this school.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

LET THEM DO IT.

"People want to love you." We found this statement in an article in a current magazine a few days ago, written by one of the most popular screen actors before the public. His point was that his own success had been due to the fact that he has always tried to conduct himself in such way as to make this natural impulse of people minister to his own welfare—not so much selfishly, but as a means of fulfilling his duty to his patrons. There is food for thought in that suggestion. We believe it is true that people want to love us; and if they fail to love us, it is altogether likely that we ourselves are to blame. It was written of old, "A man that hath friends must show himself friendly;" and that statement is as true now as it was centuries ago. It is mighty hard to love some people, even in the Christian sense, because of their disposition to "rub the fur the wrong way," regardless of time or place or circumstance. "People want to love you"—let them do it.

THE FIGHT IS NOT LOST.

In spite of the fact that the Louisiana Legislature which adjourned last week refused to enact legislation that would put a ban on horse race gambling, we are confident that such legislation will be passed in due time and that the State will be freed of an evil that has become a stench in the nostrils of law-abiding citizens everywhere. It is a strange thing that fifty members of the Legislature—enough to defeat the measure—could bring themselves to a willingness to vote against a measure which was specifically intended to carry out a mandate of the Constitution; and it is stranger still that some of those who voted against the Butler bill did so with the explanation that they were afraid it would interfere with horse racing in the country parishes. So far as we know, nobody is opposed to horse racing—the opposition is all directed against the gambling that goes with it. If racing is the sport that its ardent advocates claim it, let the dear brethren have races to their hearts' content—but let them do away with the gambling, which reaps its harvest of embezzlers, defaulters, and suicides every year. The gentlemen who so piously contend that racing—with its attendant gambling—is necessary to maintain New Orleans as the "Winter Capital of America," are guilty of gross fallacies in their reasoning. In the first place, New Orleans is not, and never has been, the "Winter Capital." We have lived in this city a good many years, all told, and we have never seen anything that would even suggest that it is entitled to such distinction; and a daily reading of all the newspapers of the city has not disclosed any ground upon which that claim can be based. In the second place, the horde of gamblers and disreputable characters that flock to the city each winter—followers of the racing game—bring the city into a most unenviable disrepute. Horse race gambling is an evil like the Louisiana Lottery; the Lottery was outlawed, and this gamble will be outlawed, in spite of those members of the present Legislature who disregarded the plain statement of the Constitution that gambling is a vice and the Legislature shall pass laws to suppress it. Whatever the interest was that lay back of their action—and some of them may have been self-deceived as to their duty—the good people of this State will yet be represented in the legislative assembly by men who will have regard for their constitutional obligations. As to the general character of the Legislature just adjourned, we refrain from quoting the opinions of the secular press—there were some good men there who tried to do their duty. We leave the others to the tender mercies of their consciences and their constituents. BUT HORSE RACE GAMBLING IN LOUISIANA IS DOOMED.

CONFERENCE IS COMING!

It may be hard for us to realize it—but the Conference year is fast drawing to a close. The North Mississippi Conference will convene at Water Valley on November 8, the Louisiana Conference will convene at Shreveport on November 22, and the Mississippi Conference will convene at Crystal Springs on November 30. This has been a busy year, and the meeting of the General Conference may have interfered to some extent with the usual plans for the spring and summer; but there is still time enough left for doing what ought to be done and coming to the close of the year with good reports. Whatever else may be done, the revival campaign in all our charges should be carried out. It seems to us there is an unusual responsiveness to the appeals of the gospel now, and every opportunity should be taken advantage of to get people to give their hearts to God. The recent General Conference fixed a million souls as the goal of our revival activities during the present quadrennium, and we should strive earnestly not only to attain that goal, but to pass it, with the help of the Lord. The usual collections should be carefully looked after between now and the meeting of our Conferences, and the pledges for the Centenary and the Educational Movement should be brought up to date as nearly as practicable. In spite of unfavorable conditions in some parts of our territory, we are expecting this to be one of the best years in the history of Methodism in Louisiana and Mississippi.

ARE THESE FIGURES CORRECT?

The Department of Records and Research of Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute, an institution for the training of colored young men and women, has just issued a statement concerning the number of lynchings for the first six months of 1922. According to this statement, there were 30 lynchings for that period. This is 6 fewer than the number, 36, for the first six months of 1921, and 18 more than the number, 12, for the first six months of 1920. Of the 30 persons put to death, 19, or 63 per cent, were in two States, Mississippi (7), and Texas (12). Of those lynched, 2 were whites and 28 were Negroes. Eleven of those put to death were charged with the crime of rape and 19 were charged with other offenses. Five of those put to death were burned at the stake, and 3 were first put to death and then their bodies were burned. The States in which lynchings occurred and the number in each State are as follows: Alabama, 1; Arkansas, 2; Florida, 1; Georgia, 4; Louisiana, 1; Mississippi, 7; South Carolina, 1; Oklahoma, 1; Texas, 12. We are not in position to say positively that the figures issued by Tuskegee are incorrect; but we have reason to believe that they are not always accurate. Last year, for example—if we recall correctly—no lynchings were charged against one of the far-Western States, although it was a matter of record that mob violence had resulted in deaths in that State. If the Department of Records and Research of Tuskegee proposes to give the lynching record every year, it should at least be absolutely sure that its figures are correct. Of one thing we are sure: even one lynching anywhere in the United States is a reproach to our civilization. Mob violence is a direct thrust at the constituted authority of law.

THE COST OF CARELESSNESS.

We were struck the other day by a statement in a publication issued by the National Board of Fire Underwriters to the effect that the total loss by fire in 1921 was $185,000,000, as compared with a loss of $51,653,690 in 1870. In 1870 the loss averaged $19 a minute; in 1921 it averaged $923 a minute. According to this statement, American carelessness results in a fire every minute. Not all fires are caused by carelessness, of course, but enough of them are to constitute a strong indictment against us as a people. Not long ago a careless employe disregarded the "no smoking" rule in his establishment, threw his cigarette stub upon the floor—and a $2,000,000 fire resulted. That is just one other indictment against the cigarette.

EASY HISTORY.

It seems that the Knights of Columbus have appointed a commission to rewrite American history from the Roman Catholic point of view. We do not know what the results of their labors will be, but we presume that they will undertake to show that the nation is indebted for all the blessings it enjoys, from its beginning to this good hour, to Roman Catholics. That is a pretty easy thing to do—write history to suit yourself, regardless of the facts. The only trouble is that it is not history.

SOME METHODIST EDUCATIONAL HISTORY.

By Elmer T. Clark,
Editorial Secretary of the Board of Education.

Methodism was an educational force long before it was an evangelical force. Its pre-natal influences were all educational. It came from a race of men who had been Christian scholars for five generations, and the world's greatest university was its birthplace.

It was in 1736 that the first Methodist school in the world was founded, this being a school for orphans in Georgia. It was established two full years before Wesley's evangelical "conversion" in the little Moravian prayer meeting in Aldersgate Street. The first building ever possessed by the Methodists was a "school-room" which was erected at Bristol in 1739. In 1740 George Whitefield laid the first brick of Bethesda School near Savannah, Georgia, and in the same year the famous Kingswood School for colliers' children was opened.

All of this occurred before Methodism ever had a church building—even before Wesley began his evangelistic preaching in the open air. It is thus established that Methodist institutions of learning were operating in both Europe and America before the so-called "evangelical revival" was under way.

When the Methodist Movement spread to America it carried its educational genius with it. Francis Asbury and John Dickins prepared the plans for a seminary of learning and secured subscriptions for its erection four years before the Methodist Episcopal Church was organized, and by the time the first General Conference met in 1784, $5,000 were in hand for educational purposes. The cornerstone of Cokesbury College was laid in 1785, while Ebenezer Academy in Virginia, and Cokesbury School in North Carolina, were in operation at approximately the same date.

Between 1784 and 1824 the church established about a dozen institutions of learning, and by the time the church was divided in 1844 the number had grown to about fifty. These institutions nearly all failed. None of the schools established before 1824 are alive to-day, while only about twelve of the fifty established before 1844 have survived.

These institutions of learning went down because the church had no adequate educational policy. It possessed an educational genius, but little educational statesmanship. In the beginning the General Conference attempted to prescribe the most minute rules for the government and discipline of the institutions of learning, but no thought seems to have been given to the problem of developing a well correlated system of schools which would serve the church systematically.

In 1820 there was the utmost confusion in the educational situation. Schools had sprung up in various sections of the country under the enthusiasm of local leaders. All were struggling for existence, there were no educational standards, the relation of the schools to the church was often poorly defined. The General Conference of 1820 made a feeble effort to clarify the situation, but failed to do so. The entire matter was at last turned over to the Annual Conferences with the recommendation that these bodies should establish literary institutions as they saw fit.

After the division of Methodism in 1844 the M. E. Church, South, continued this chaotic policy—which in reality was no policy at all. Our church did not establish a Board of Education until fifty years after its organization. There was no oversight on the part of the church. Local communities everywhere attempted to build schools and colleges in the name of Methodism. "Local enterprise and individual initiative were without restraint or guidance," declared Bishop Waterhouse, "and these did much not only to make confusion worse confounded, but to discount the church as an educational factor. Communities under the lead of would-be educators established schools in the name of the church almost everywhere. Many of them soon perished, and thus our whole territory was strewn with wrecks and became potent arguments against the competency of the church as an educator."

As a result of this lack of system in our educational endeavors, the M. E. Church, South, has lost ninety-nine colleges and universities and one hundred and twenty-six academies during the three-quarters of a century of its existence. Each year of its history three schools into which it has poured wealth and energy without stint have died or passed from Methodist control. Multiplied millions of money and still larger values in consecrated labor have been wasted in our unguided enthusiasm for the cause of Christian education.

Even to-day we may see the results of our policy. In the Carolinas we have fifteen institutions of learning and in Virginia and Texas we have nine each. On the other hand such strategic States as Oklahoma, New Mexico, and California are entirely neglected.

It was not until 1894 that the church took official cognizance of the situation and resolved to grasp the educational problems with a firm hand. In that year the General Conference created a Board of Education with the avowed purpose of welding all of our institutions of learning "into an harmonious system." It was a difficult task. Behind us there was a disastrous history of one hundred and ten years of mistakes and blunders. Jealousies existed everywhere on the part of our institutions. The schools and colleges were unclassified, and their scholastic standards were extremely low. The new Board of Education came into existence largely unwelcomed by the educators themselves, and its entire history is a record of thankless struggle in a chaotic situation.

It is an interesting commentary on the early difficulties of the Board of Education that no man ever originally elected to the secretaryship by the General Conference has been willing to serve. Dr. W. W. Smith served a few months without remuneration, but declined to give up his presidency of the Randolph-Macon system of institutions to become the permanent connectional educational officer. Dr. W. B. Murrah (now bishop) declined in 1898, and Dr. J. E. Dickey refused the position in 1910.

When Dr. Stonewall Anderson became the General Secretary in 1910, he found that only sixteen higher institutions of learning in the church maintained a scholastic standing sufficiently high to permit of classification, while forty-four remained unclassified. We even maintained, at that time, nine schools which did not meet the standard for B-class academies. The total income for all educational purposes was less than $2,000 per year for each institution. Many of the charters did not recognize the ownership or control of the church in any sense. Surely the task of perfecting "the union of all into an harmonious system" was a gigantic responsibility.

At the close of this the greatest quardennium for the cause of Christian education which Methodism has ever known, it is pertinent to inquire concerning the achievements of the Board of Education. Its history during the past four years is bound up with that of the eight years previous. The work of the present administration is a unity, and it will be of benefit to take a fleeting glance at our educational accomplishments during the past twelve years. These may be tabulated as follows:

1. The institutions of the church have at last been classified, harmonized, and correlated. There is to-day not a single institution in the church which does not fully meet the schalostic standard of its class. This marks the culmination of nearly thirty years of effort to carry out the instructions issued by the General Conference in 1894. The result was accomplished through the operation of two laws, both of which were enacted in 1914 on the recommendation of the Board of Education. One of these laws made it impossible for any unclassified institution to receive financial aid from the church, while the other forbade the establishment of any college without the consent of the Board, or the founding of any junior college or academy without previous consultation with the General Secretary.

To have reached this proud position in twelve years from the date when more than two-thirds of our colleges were "renegades" for which we did not even claim standardization—this constitutes a wonderful educational advance.

2. A department of Life Service has been developed and a full-time Secretary of Ministerial Supply and Training has been put in the field. The Board of Education is the pioneer in the work of securing ministerial and missionary volunteers and assisting them in securing an adequate training for their task. Other agencies and Boards have followed its lead and have projected similar activities, but the Board of Education still remains the one and only body authorized by the General Conference to conduct a Life Service Department.

3. The present administration has also cleared and adjusted the titles of our various institutions of learning, so that the ownership and control of all of them are now vested in the church. Just as our schools sprang up in haphazard fashion, so was there much carelessness displayed in the matter of their legal ownership. In many cases Methodism had no relation to institutions save the right of patronage, and of course this right was enjoyed by every other person and body.

During the quadrennium 1910-1914 the Board of Education adjusted all titles, and the General Conference of 1914 expressed its hearty gratification at this achievement. "This is a healthy condition," declared the Conference, "showing that the great body of our colleges and their trustees are thoroughly loyal to the church."

4. One of the most significant accomplishments of the present administration of the Board of Education is the establishment in each college of the church a strong chair of Religious Education devoted to the production of trained workers in every field of church service. There is to-day not a single college of the church that does not offer a course in Religious Education. Many of them have well-manned departments and one of the most prominent features of the Board's present policy is the continued development of this indispensable branch of study.

5. There has been started a program of work among the Methodist students at the various State universities in our territory. This movement is still in its infancy, but its importance gives assurance that in the future it must assume larger and larger proportion. There are about fifteen thousand Methodist students at the State institutions of college grade in the South for whom no courses in Religious Education are available. The church has a responsibility here and this responsibility has been placed upon the Board of Education by the General Conference.

In the Christian Education Movement two of the greatest enterprises of the greatest enterprises of the country in connection with State institutions were included—the Berkeley Educational Church at the University of California, and the Tucson University Church in Adizoni. Activity among Methodist students is also being carried on at the University of Texas and the University of Missouri.

6. The Board of Education has also been responsible for raising the educational standards of the ministry. On its recommendation the General Conference has passed a law to the effect that the requirements for admission on trial into an Annual Conference are the same as for college entrance, namely, a high school education, except "under special conditions clearly recognized as unusual," when persons not so qualified may be admitted by a two-thirds vote. While this proviso nullifies the standard in many instances, it is nevertheless true that a considerable advance has been made in our ministerial standard. A progressive step has also been taken by making it obligatory upon young preachers to pursue their courses of study under the direction of the correspondence school or at a preachers' institute.

7. But the greatest achievement of the present administration of the Board of Education is the harmonizing and unifying of the educational forces of the church, resulting in the projection and carrying through of the Christian Education Movement. The greatness of this wonderful movement is well known to the church and to the nation. It is not so well known, however, that preliminary to this Movement were twelve years of unceasing toil in an endeavor to secure a cooperation among all schools and agencies, so that concerted and united action in a common cause would be possible.

The Christian Education Movement was not an unrelated incident. It did not "just happen." Twelve years ago it would have been an impossibility in the M. E. Church, South. The schools and colleges themselves would not have tolerated it. As they grew up without system, so they worked without unity of purpose. Before there could be any sort of united action these institutions had to be welded into an essential oneness.

This was done largely through the formation of a Methodist Educational Association which was authorized by the General Conference of 1918 and organized the following July. Then for the first time the educators of every school and every Conference were brought together. In this Association they looked into each other's eyes and saw things face to face. They came to see that over and above the petty individual interests of isolated institutions there loomed the great cause of Christian Education. A new day dawned in the field of Methodist Education when these educators realized what Christian Education really meant. Then the Christian Education Movement became a reality. Then the instructions which the General Conference had issued thirty years before were carried out, and the institutions of the church were brought together "into an harmonious system."

MEETING OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON CHURCH BUILDING IN EDUCATIONAL CENTERS.

The Joint Committee on Church Buildings in Educational Centers, consisting of W. F. McMurry, T. D. Ellis, and W. E. Brock, representing the Board of Church Extension, and R. L. Russell, J. W. Perry, and Louis Boeger, representing the Board of Missions, met on call of W. F. McMurry and R. L. Russell, at 10 o'clock in the office of R. L. Russell, Missionary Annex Building, Nashville, Tennessee, June 28, 1922. All the members of the Joint Committee were present except W. E. Brock.

W. F. McMurry called the Committee to order and requested Rev. W. G. Cram, D.D., to lead in prayer.

Organization. On motion, W. F. McMurry was elected Chairman of the Joint Committee, and R. L. Russell, Secretary.

Visitors. Bishop W. B. Beauchamp, former Director General of the Centenary Commission, and Rev. W. G. Cram, D.D., the Directing Secretary of the Centenary Commission, were introduced.

Bishop Beauchamp made a statement to the Committee concerning the need for church buildings in some educational centers, he being accorded this privilege at this time on account of his plan to be absent from the United States after tomorrow for several weeks.

Statement of Funds. Rev. W. G. Cram made a statement concerning the amount of funds in the hands of the Centenary Commission and subject to appropriation under the action of the General Conference. He advised that this statement was hurriedly taken from the books of the Commission, and was submitted with the understanding that a statement approval by the Auditor of the Centenary Commission would be filed with the Joint Committee as soon as it could be gotten ready.

War Work Commission. A letter from Rev. E. O. Watson, D.D., of Washington, D. C., concerning the closing up of the business of the War Work Commission, was read by the Chairman and made a part of the files of this Committee.

General Conference Action. The Joint Committee examined carefully the action of the General Conference, which action was based upon requests from the Executive Committee of the War Work Commission, the Board of Missions, the Board of Church Extension and the College of Bishops, and instructed its President and Secretary to advise the Centenary Commission that the action of the General Conference making the balance of the War Work Fund (after proper care for Soldier and Sailor Welfare Work, which amount is not to exceed $30,000 per annum for the quadrennium) available for church buildings in educational centers, with special reference to State and independent foundations, to be administered by the Board of Church Extension and the Board of Missions, is clear and unmistakable; and that representing the two Boards named, this Joint Committee has appointed its Chairman, W. F. McMurry, and its Secretary, R. L. Russell, to make proper communication of the action of this Joint Committee to the Centenary Commission, and to receive, in the names of the Boards represented, from the Centenary Commission and from Mr. John Victor, Treasurer of the War Work Commission, funds on hand to the credit of the War Work Commission, and unexpended by it, and to hold same subject to the direction of this Joint Committee.

Soldier and Sailor Welfare Work. The Joint Committee recorded its recognition of the obligations of the Board it represents under General Conference action to use an amount not to exceed $30,000 annually in the interest of the Soldier and Sailor Welfare work, and for the four years of the quadrennium. The Committee voted to set aside $30,000 of the funds now on hand for this Soldier and Sailor Welfare work for the first year of the quadrennium, and authorized and directed that the members of this Joint Committee representing the Board of Missions be appointed a special committee with authority to study the Soldier and Sailor Welfare work, and to bring to this Joint Committee from time to time recommendations as to the amounts needed for the several items connected with this particular work. This action is based upon the fact that the administration of Soldier and Sailor Welfare work is naturally and properly a Home Mission task.

Treasurer. The Joint Committee voted to select for the Board of Church Extension and the Board of Missions, a joint Treasurer, whose duty it shall be to receive, hold, and invest, under the direction of this Joint Committee, the funds set aside by the General Conference for Soldier and Sailor Welfare work, and for church building in educational centers, and that the funds in the hands of this Joint Treasurer shall be drawn out only on two signatures, one representing the Board of Missions, and one the Board of Church Extension, to be hereafter provided by this Joint Committee.

W. F. McMurry, and R. L. Russell, were appointed a committee to bring a nomination for Treasurer to the next meeting of this Joint Committee.

Applications and Correspondence. The Secretary of the Board of Church Extension, T. D. Ellis, was directed to receive all applications for aid for church building, and to conduct all correspondence in connection therewith, and to prepare all cases for presentation to the Joint Committee. The representatives from the Board of Church Extension on the Joint Committee were directed to make such change in the regular application blanks of the Board of Church Extension as may seem desirable, by adding a supplementary sheet, or otherwise.

The Joint Committee made record of its purpose to recommend to the Boards it represents, favorable action on such applications as come from communities that have demonstrated a willingness to do their full duty toward providing adequate church facilities for the students in their midst, and from no others.

The Secretary of the Board of Church Extension was instructed that funds invested are to be placed and secured on the same terms and conditions as those used by the Board of Church Extension in its regular work, and that no exception to this rule is authorized except on instructions from this Joint Committee.

Expense. The Committee recorded it as its judgment that the expense incurred in the administration of this fund by travel, or otherwise, should be borne by the fund.

Publicity. The Chairman and Secretary of this Joint Committee were instructed to send to the church press a copy of the Minutes of this meeting, or extracts therefrom, together with any additional statement that in their judgment should be made, that the church at large may be advised as to the organization and plans of this Joint Committee.

Next Meeting. The Chairman and one other member of the Joint Committee were authorized to call a meeting of this Joint Committee whenever in their judgment it was deemed necessary.

The Minutes of the meeting were read and approved.

On motion, the Joint Committee adjourned.

(Signed): W. F. McMURRY, Chairman.
R. L. RUSSELL, Secretary.

AN UNUTILIZED OPPORTUNITY FOR PASTORS.

A correspondent writes to the Federal Council of the Churches:

"Our mayor's mother recently died, leaving almost three million. She was a member of the leading Congregational church here. To it she left $1,000; the remainder, the entire estate besides, goes to her five children, all well off and well placed in life."

"In December a wealthy woman at the age of eighty-five passed away, a member for many years of our richest church, whose pastor, noted all over the State, speaks almost on every important occasion. He knew her very well and she was a most valuable member of his church, yet she left nothing at all to the missionary boards and over $400,000 to two sons in the fifties, one a rich bachelor and the other a richer Californian. I could have wept. Why couldn't Dr. ——— have gradually laid upon her heart a sense of responsibilities for starving Armenia, for our Board of Foreign Missions, for the schools for negroes doing such wonderful work in the South, for the struggling Protestant churches in France?"

The pastor, as the correspondent suggests, has the key to the situation. As the spiritual adviser of church members and the one who enters most intimately into their personal lives he has a unique opportunity to influence them to make bequests to the missionary and benevolent work of the churches. The secretaries of missionary boards seldom have the same free access or intimate approach. No doubt the pastor hesitates often to deal with this question in his contracts with his wealthy parishioners lest he should seem to be laying undue emphasis upon the material side of the church's work. To regard the matter in this light, however, is wholly to misunderstand the question. If discipleship to Christ involves the dedication of one's substance to His cause, it is a distinct spiritual service to people of means to influence them to consecrate their wealth to the purposes of the Kingdom of God.—Exchange.

There is nothing more important than the choice of friendship, for it both reflects character and affects it.—Selected.

ITINERATING IN BRAZIL—THE ANNUAL CONFERENCES.

By Dr. E. H. Rawlings.

Article VI.

There are three Conferences in Brazil, the Brazil, the Central Brazil, and the South Brazil, and the annual sessions of the two upper Conferences, the Brazil, held in Rio de Janeiro, and the Central Brazil held in Piracicaba, we were able to attend. We had traveled in South Brazil, visiting nearly all our work in Rio Grande do Sul, but the annual session of the South Conference was held too late for us to remain.

New Missionaries Arriving.

Perhaps no feature of the two sessions that we attended was more notable than the presence of the new missionaries just arriving. As late as his return to the United States from his third official visit in December of last year, Bishop Moore had pleaded with the Department to find him missionaries to take the places of those that had fallen out and to fill the multitude of new places opening up in the Centenary. Indeed, he seemed sometimes discouraged almost to the point of desperation when this far along in the development of the material plan of the Centenary in Brazil, so few men and women, although many were offering, were now ready to go out. But cooperating personally with the Secretary in a persistent effort to find men and hurry them off, he was able at the last to get for the field his full compliment of missionaries from the General Board for the year. Indeed in his last conversation before leaving the field he said that as many had gone out this year as ought ever to go out in any one year if we are to help without hindering the development of a really capable national leadership.

Well, these missionaries arrived on the steamship "Aeolus," eight of them, the Houstons, the Hubbards, Misses Morgan, Matthews and Best and Mr. Moreland, the Schislers coming on a later boat and Brother Saunders having come on the "Huron" that took the Bishop and Secretary down in June. Everybody was out to meet them, missionaries and friends of missionaries, because to these faithful workers who had waited so long for personal reinforcement the presence of Bishop and Secretary was hardly as significant as the arrival of these recruits. One of the older missionaries in an intimate conversation on the present situation said in a burst of enthusiasm, "You cannot possibly know what it means to the missionaries that so many new ones and so well endowed and trained have suddenly come to us." It meant much to these young missionaries to be present in the homes of the older missionaries, to see the work of the Conference, to meet the Brazilian preachers, hear their reports and to breathe the atmosphere of the work concentrated and characteristic as it is found in the Annual Conferences. Most of them were present in both Conferences, and go now, some to Juiz de Fora, some to the South, and one couple, Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard, hurry on away out into the wilderness of the great Northwest to a station where there is no missionary anywhere in thirty-six hours of them and only one family that speaks English. This far out they are to help a little in the new station, but mainly to give their time to the study of the language with instructions that whatever may have been our policy in the past, now the first year of the missionary, his primary and almost one business, is to break the back of the language and to study it so carefully as to get it like the natives. The further he goes into the interior and away from English speaking friends, trying as it may be, the likelier it will be that he will get the language.

Doctor Young In Brazil.

A most interesting and notable feature of both Conferences was the presence of Dr. W. J. Young, Professor of Missions in Candler School of Theology, in Atlanta. Dr. Young had been sent by the Woman's Council as the first to deliver the series of lectures on the new foundation known as the Bennett-Gibson lectureship. The course was given in Rio in the parlor of Bennett College and in Piracicaba in one of the class rooms of the Piracicabana. From his first lecture in Rio attendance was most gratifying, bringing together not only the missionaries of our own church but some of other Boards, quite a number of Americans in the city and a few English-speaking Brazillians. The work of these lectures was delightfully done, as everybody who knew Dr. Young expected they would be. The policy of sending outstanding men to the field abroad inaugurated this year with Dr. Young to Brazil and Dr. F. S. Parker to the East, Drs. Goddard and Sledd to Europe, will no doubt be continued by the Board of Missions and will form a vital bond of interest especially between the schools and the work abroad.

A Bishop in Action.

In Rio we saw Bishop Moore in his first Annual Conference. The work was done in two languages, and while he kept an interpreter by his side for the finer points, he understood most of what was said in Portuguese, and, while there were questions of an intensely delicate and difficult nature arising, he guided the work in both Conferences to a great climax of interest and enthusiasm. I wish I could trust myself to write of the work of Bishop Moore in Brazil without saying what might seem fulsome. A little incident, simple but touching, will illustrate the spirit of the service he is doing. Away down on the plains of South Brazil we had been traveling day and night for many weeks and were now far out in the interior. Weary and somewhat homesick, I said to him one day, "Well, we are a long way from home, aren't we?" With a touch of affection he replied, "No, no, this is my home. A man's home is where his friends are and my friends are in Brazil." He did not go to the Ecumenical Conference in London, although a delegate, because he felt that his first duty was to his task in Brazil. As we went together from place to place and I saw how completely he had wrought himself into the very structure of our forward movement in Brazil, and how much his skilled leadership is counting for at this crucial moment, in my heart I said, "It is worth a lifetime of preparation if he had never done anything else—and he has done much else—to be able to build one's life as effectually as John M. Moore is building his into the life of a people and country like Brazil."

A Strong National Movement.

In nothing has the skill of the Bishop in charge as an administrator been more manifest than in his dealing with what is known as the Independence Movement of the Brazil church. It is confined largely to the preachers. For some years past, as in other fields, there has been a measure of impatience on the part of the native leadership with what was felt to be the domination of the missionary and the rather rigid control of the Board of Missions. After the war the nationalistic impulse, everywhere stimulated, began to make itself felt in Conference discussions, newspaper articles and finally in a meeting called by the leaders to meet in Rio to discuss the whole question of the relationship of the church in Brazil to the Mother Church, as the church in North America came commonly to be called. The meeting was in fine spirit, the missionaries coming and going and taking part in the discussions at will. The result was a paper adopted by the Conference and forwarded to the Bishop and Foreign Secretary setting forth respectfully the aspirations of the national church in Brazil. The leaders declared for certain general principles of freedom, certain specific property rights and, as they announced, final emancipation for the Methodist Church in Brazil. The paper was helpful or harmful according to the interpretation that might be put upon the phrasing of these declarations of policy. At Rio the Bishop called a meeting of the Brazilian preachers with only two missionaries present as interpreters and after a preliminary statement setting forth the general attitude of the Board of Missions and the church in America to the churches abroad, invited the fullest discussion. We were together perhaps two hours in a discussion, the spirit of which left nothing to be desired and the understanding at the last was altogether satisfactory on both sides. However, a few of the leading Brazilians were not present in this Conference and we were not sure that the understanding represented all our national brethren.

When we came to the Central Conference we heard at once rumblings of dissatisfaction and agitation much more intense than in Rio, and finally in a session of the Conference, the discussion was precipitated in connection with the consideration of a memorial on the subject to the General Conference. The discussion was heated, frank and somewhat bitter, missionaries as well as Brazilians taking part. Some extreme things were said on both sides, and speaking in the two languages as they were, there were very serious misunderstandings. At first it was thought that we had gone as far as a discussion could get us, but later the Bishop called the Brazilians together as had been done at Rio. As in the other meeting, Bishop Moore made the preliminary statement, the Secretary also setting forth the attitude of the Board of Missions and both of us seeking to create a sympathetic atmosphere for the discussion. For two hours preacher and laymen said out their grievances and aspirations, apparently abating nothing of their former contention and getting before us their point oof view in an able and effective way. We answered their questions frankly, and without evasion, corrected their misapprehensions and interpreted the attitude of the missionaries and the church at home, in the end reaching an understanding that was even more complete than the other had been in Rio, and so, turning an embarrassing and hurtful factor of our work into a strong impulse toward national initiative and leadership. We came out of the conference with these brethren feeling that the Brazilian preacher knew his own mind, was self-respecting and independent in spirit, and was capable of that initiative and power of self-determination that constitute a real and capable leadership.

Coming to Self-Support.

The reports in the Conferences were gratifying on the material side, churches and pastors manifesting a decided disposition, amounting to little less than a definite movement, toward self-support. In other fields, what is known as the "bulk sum;" or the fund used for the support and development of the native church, had been increasing with rapidity that was little less than alarming, but to my great delight I found that the amount was being decreased in Brazil rather than increased. This had come about partly through our advantage in the rate of exchange, but also largely through the wise administration of the bishop in charge. When he came with the leaders to make the distribution of the bulk sum, and they asked him how much there was to distribute, he simply assured them that there was every cent that was needed, but that is was their responsibility to appropriate not one cent that could be raised by the native church under the impulse and quickened generosity of the Centenary. This appeal was made to pastors and laymen and so the bulk sum has been decreasing instead of increasing, a most unusual thing, especially in view of the rapid development of the work in connection with the Centenary, and a thing that bears most vitally upon the problem of maintenance confronting us at the end of the Centenary period.

Tokens of Revival.

In the matter of membership the increase has not been satisfactory. In both Conferences the increase was small, if any at all, for the year and there was some question as to whether there had been any increase. The Bishop asked questions, seeking to ascertain the cause, and strongly emphasied the importance of distinctly evangelistic effort. Several explanations were given for the small gains. They had been purging the roll in rather drastic and sometimes reckless way and for two years everybody had been engaged, if not absorbed, with building and the material side of our development. But it could not be doubted that the evangelistic gift was largely dormant. The hopeful aspect of this situation, however, is that the leaders are waking up and with real concern, not to say alarm, are coming to feel that evangelism in a definite form is the great need of the Mission in all the Conferences, and that the Centenary itself will be a failure if it shall not end in a great revival.

It was to this emphasis that the Secretary, as a visitor to the Conferences, addressed the messages he was privileged to give. I had the privilege of speaking to the Conferences several times as the representative of the Board of Missions, and while I sought to set forth various aspects of the Centenary Movement in all lands, all that was said in preparation for a simple, straight appeal that was made on the last night in both Conferences just before the appointments were read. I did not know the language and the best I could do was to speak through an interpreter. But the interpreters in both Conferences, Dr. Tucker in Rio and Brother Lee in Piracicaba, were men with flaming hearts and evangelistic gifts, and could admirably supplement the deficiencies of the visitor's appeal. For an hour together, I in English, and the interpreter in Portuguese, we poured out our hearts on the one great theme of the Gospel and its power to reach the multitudes. The response in Rio was hearty, while at Piracicaba it was notable. Brother Ferraz came to the platform at the close of the address, making a flaming appeal and in response more than fifty people came forward to the chancel in token of their desire to follow Christ. A little later another notable thing occurred. The same Brazilian preacher arose and said that he had been sent as a delegate to the General Conference, and that he was going because he wanted to get in touch with the evangelistic movement of which he had heard in America, but that he was not even prepared to make the most of that trip, earnestly requesting his colleagues among the Brazilian ministers to join him at the altar in prayer for the enduement of the Spirit in preparation. Many besides his Brazilian colleagues joined him, the Bishop, Secretary and missionaries going down in earnest supplication with the rest, and when, after a short prayer of dedication, the preacher began singing softly and in the incomparably beautiful accents of the Portuguese, "Children of the Heavenly King, as we journey let us sing," I felt that I was looking upon one of the great scenes and passing through one of the great experiences of my life.

This is written on the sea, and as I write nothing in all our visit to Brazil do I remember with such gratification as the tokens of revival coming in these two closing meetings, and the reports coming to me in the last days of my stay in that country, from all points, of little groups meeting together and praying for a great Pentecost, and unless all signs fail we shall be greatly disappointed if, in a year, we shall not find ourselves in Brazil in the midst of one of the great revival movements of the church.

I went to Brazil with the feeling that in no field was the situation more difficult or the work less promising. After nine weeks of as careful study as I could make, under the most favorable conditions, I returned with the conviction definitely fixed that for the immediate future, we had perhaps no field in which the situation is wider open or our work more promising.

SEVEN SCHOLARSHIPS.

During the recent collecting campaign for Christian Education in North Mississippi, the two colleges—Millsaps and Grenada—offered seven Tuition Scholarships, one to each district, to be given to the charge in the district that made the best percentage on amount pledged on quota and amount of quota raised in cash. This was to be taken 50-50. The results of the campaign show as follows:

Aberdeen District, Pontotoc Church.
Columbus District, Starkville Church.
Corinth District, New Albany Church.
Greenville District, Coahoma and Lyon Charge.
Greenwood District, To be decided.
Grenada District, Grenada Church.
Sardis District, Sardis.

These scholarships are for Tuition in the Literary Department and are to be awarded by the Board of Stewards of the charge securing these scholarships or by any way the Board may decide. They are in either Millsaps College or in Grenada College.

We want to thank the collectors and helpers for their good work. The North Mississippi Conference has done well under the present financial conditions. We anticipate a great collection this fall if conditions are any way near to normal.

J. H. HOLDER,
Conference Secretary-Treasurer.

July 1, 1922.

SUPERANNUATED.

By R. T.

The last word had just been spoken, and the Conference stood adjourned,
And a host of worthy preachers toward their homes their footsteps turned.
Some were young and strong, and anxious to be on the firing line;
Some had won their honors fairly, and were sent to stations fine;
Just a few were disappointed, in that busy, rushing throng;
They were silent while the others passed with eager haste along.

In the rear, with steady measure, walked a man with silver hair;
He had been a "faithful servant," faithful both in work and prayer;
But the years had pressed upon him, cooled his blood and quenched the fire,
So the presiding elder told him that he must retire;
So he turns without appointment, the first time in forty years;
He had crossed the dreaded dead line, that the aged pastor fears.

No more work for this old soldier, he must tarry with the "stuff;"
While the strong press on to battle, he will find it hard enough.
He would rather die in harness than to thus be put aside,
In the midst of some great conflict, where the battle-tide rolls wide.
In the rear must be his station, never at the battle's brunt,
For the message has been sounded, "He's not wanted at the front."

This old warrior built the churches where the people worship now,
And, amid privations many, kept his consecration vow;
And he sowed the seed of promise in hard fields, with pain and tears,
Where reapers, with rejoicing, get the harvest of the years;
But he is now almost forgotten, almost lost amid the throng;
No one sings of his achievements, some new hero gets the song.

In the Sunday school convention he's not asked to speak or pray,
For they need no "worn-out preacher" in convention halls to-day;
When the Epworth League assembles, he's not asked his views to state;
He did well in some past era, now, of course, he's out of date.
In his Conference he is silent, scarcely ever takes the floor,
For the brethren more progressive say, "We've heard all that before."

We are passing on, my brethren, to the place he holds to-day,
For unless we are translated, we will surely pass that way;
Learn to watch the younger pastors take the places we must yield,
Wait with patience without orders on the church's battlefield;
Wait till from the opening heavens comes the summons all obey;
And to all the aged servants this will prove a glorious day.

If you have a grey-haired pastor, brother, sitting in your pew,
Treat him kindly, as another may on some day care for you;
Listen to the words of counsel he will gladly oft bestow,
And he'll love you like a brother, and he'll bless you as you go
Out to where the battle rages, where the enemy is strong;
He will cheer you as you battle with the mighty hosts of wrong.

Soon his eye will see the limit of his little earthly day,
Soon the soldier, full of honors, will go up the shining way;
Then a host will meet this veteran, his co-workers in his time,
And a shout will ring through heaven, for the scene will be sublime;
For the "worn-out preacher" reaches all his heart has ever craved—
Home and friends and joy and heaven, souls that he on earth had saved.

CAMP MEETING

JULY 19th-26th

SEASHORE Camp Grounds

BILOXI, MISS.

ICH DIEN.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

"Give and it shall be given," says the Master of Life,
For what spent in Service mid the turmoil and strife,
Must ever abide, whatever the cost,
For in God's way of paying surely nothing is lost.

We measure our lives by the standard of men,
Which shuts out the "ever," with the "now" in its ken,
Forgetting the store and the treasure on high,
Which abideth forever whether we live or we die.

Oh, the beauty of Service, be it toil or large gift!
There is joy in its doing and a blessed uplift;
Like the chrism of morning breaking fair o'er the hills,
Drives back the night shadows and its glory infills.

Should the hand grow weary and the heart be cast down,
Since the day of rewarding seems slow and unknown,
Its crown and its jewels are in God's keeping;
And his hand shall not falter, nor is his eye ever sleeping.

Back of all giving is the heart of the giver,
Back of the gleam of the lake is the flow of the river;
For the glory of receiving lies in its gracious outpouring—
Be it the lake's sheen of silver or the heart's overflowing.

Then let the watcher be patient, as he stands at his post,
Though the day cometh faintly, its light is not lost.
For the sun of God's purpose will rise fully and fair,
And its welcoming splendor fill the earth and the air.

WHEN WE SHALL HAVE ENDURING PEACE.

By Robert Edwin Meek.

This is a period in the world's history in which there is much discussion devoted to the subject of how to preserve peace among the nations of the earth. Any talk along this line that fails to recognize God as the chief factor in the undertaking is worthless, for it is impossible for men to gain peace without His help. The enactment of legislating bodies and the agreements made between nations will not bring it, for God only can change human nature and rid it of discordant elements. Those who do not see God's governing hand in the affairs of this world and those who, knowing Him to exist, deliberately ignore Him, shall suddenly come to sorrow, and that without remedy, for, as it is written, "The Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men and giveth it to whomsoever He please." A study of the Bible shows that God punishes disobedient nations by permitting them to become involved in wars.

Peace, to be lasting, must be founded upon justice. Righteousness alone makes justice possible. Christianity makes for righteousness by inculcating right principles of living into human hearts. "Righteousness exalteth a nation," for it raises its ethics by putting its people on a higher plane of living. We have peace to-day, but throughout the world "man's inhumanity to man" continues to "make countless thousands mourn," and the only reason for this grievous oppression is sin in the hearts and lives of men and in the councils and policies of nations.

Because a nation is not actively engaged in a foreign or a civil war, it does not follow that it possesses a righteous peace. The crimes of so-called peace are often scarcely less than the crimes of war. Surely no one ought to want a peace that is not founded upon righteousness and justice and which will not make for the happiness of all good men.

The Christian world is looking for the second coming of Christ. The League of Nations, the Disarmament Conference, the Hague Tribunal, the peace palace built by that modern agnostic, Andrew Carnegie, and, in short, all movements in the interest of world peace are causing some to think that the time has come when men may "beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning-hooks" and when "nation shall not lift up sword against nation, nor learn war any more." But Christ has not come yet. St. Paul says (II Thessalonians, Chap. 2, Verse 3): "Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of pedition," etc. What makes for Christ's coming does not necessarily help the cause of peace. If justice is founded on righteousness, if Christianity alone establishes righteousness, and if it can only be obtained by the world fully accepting the teachings of Christ and being governed by them, then this "falling away" that St. Paul tells us about precludes any possibility of a lasting peace before the second coming of our Lord.

The best things that those who want universal peace can do to help the world get ready for it is to abide by God's Word in their daily lives and also earnestly, faithfully and unceasingly to pray that prayer which, among other matters of importance, contains these two great and timely petitions: "Thy will be done on earth as in heaven," and "Thy kingdom come." When God's will is done on earth as in heaven His kingdom will have come, and then we can have a peace that will last for all time, because of the fact that it is founded upon righteousness and justice.

Black Hawk, Miss.

FROM THE PELICAN PINES.

By Rev. S. A. Steel, D.D.

Have you got a home, Carley? If you haven't, get one as soon as you can. I never had a home until these clever Mansfield people gave us this cozy nest. I was well on the way to getting one in Nashville; and when you go to the hub, if you will get on a Glendale car, and go out to the park, you may see my dream in the big house that crowns the hill. But a big rich man over in North Carolina got mad at what I said about tobacco in the Epworth Era, and they upset the tripod, stopped my salary, and away went my home! We have always tried to feel that a parsonage was home; but it isn't. It isn't yours, and there is where the secret pleasure comes in, the sense of having something you can call your own. Whatever you do, you feel that you will get the benefit of it. These good people gave us this little home with no strings to the title. The only anchor that holds us here is the strongest of all anchors, the anchor of love. When I leave home, as my duties require me to do, I feel perfectly easy about Sister Steel and the girls, for all the town loves them.

It is not a big house. Its modesty becomes a man who has spent his life accumulating spiritual assets, laying up treasure in heaven. I have been hoping to get able to add a room to it for a study, where I may keep company with my blessed books; but though the cost would be only about $500, I have not been able to add it to the nest. I hoped to make my book pay me enough for the job; but, shucks, books don't sell, except such infidel trash as Wells's "Outlines," and so forth. I was tempted to feel very blue over the dullness of the public mind in not showing more appreciation of my literary effort to keep the kettle singing, when I got comfort out of this from the Atlantic Monthly: "Thoreau, for instance, was given as compensation for his first book the privilege of claiming for his own any copies unsold from an edition of one thousand. Three hundred copies were sold, and seven hundred were trundled in installments out to Walden, in a handbarrow. Thoreau remarked to a friend that he was the owner of a library of eight hundred volumes, seven hundred of which he wrote himself!" And that was in New England. I felt better when I read that, for my first book sold better than that. Bishop Tigert was a writer of books, and he laughed and told me once that before he started on a tour of the Conferences, he concluded he would see how his last book, then out for a year, had been selling. He found that two copies had been ordered in six months! And Tigert had brains down to his heels.

One of these "Applied Psychology" female propagandists has been in these "diggins" with her nonsensical verbiage. Sister Steel, who takes no stock in such dreamy stuff, says she said that if you want something you must think about it seven times a day, and "visualize" it, and it would surely come. It won't. I have thought about my imaginary study not seven times a day, but seventy times seven, and visualized it down to the minutest detail, and it has not come. But I don't give it up. It will come in some way, and my dear books will rest in order on permanent shelves; and I will have a big rocker and can stick my feet on the mantle, shuck off all superfluous rags, and read how the white-shoe clergy are getting on with the latest "Drive." And I will have a big desk, where I can write Pelican Pine letters, and keep in touch with my friends, and get ready for the chariot.

I hope the readers of the Advocate have kept up with Bishop Cannon's letters about his travels. They are intensely interesting and instructive. He has the happy art of telling what one wishes to know about a foreign land. I wish he would tell a little more about the scenery, and use our American terms for money; but you will enjoy his travelogue; and as he describes the countries where we are spending our money for missions, we should learn all we can about them. I hope they will send him to China, unless Bishop Boaz develops the same fine faculty for telling us about the country. I can "visualize" Africa and Mexico when I read after Bishop Cannon, but after all that has been written about China, Korea, Japan, and South America, I have only a dim idea of how those countries look. I want to know how far it is from one place to another, not in "hours," but in miles; what is the lay of the land; how the houses look; what sort of crops they raise; and all such things. Cannon tells us. Don't skip his "Notes."

I am writing this on the immortal Fourth, am at home, and only Sister Steel is here with me. She is a pacific patriot, or patriotess, for she has not taken on the modern type of women. When I jump up and kick my heels together and shout, "Sic semper tyrannis!" she says I may indulge the war-whoop on this day, but that I am getting too old to be always fighting. But what is a fellow to do when he reads Bob Shuler's paper, and the daily reports of the press! When I reminded her that it was Paul's consolation at the end of his life that he had "fought a good fight," she floored me by saying that had Paul lived to be as old as I am, he probably would have toned down his militancy and become mild-tempered like dear saintly old John. Maybe so. But if I don't get to be a gentle, patient, and sensible man, it will not be her fault. I am trying to learn to obey her, for I am sure I can safely follow her blindfold. My greatest earthly blessing is to have such a wife. I'll try to be absent from home when this reaches the ranch; for there is a rolling pin in the kitchen!

There has just come to my table a new book, "Breezes from the Blue Ridge, by Rev. J. M. Rowland," the spicy editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate. He wields a sparkling pen, and these chapters are full of the ozone of the Virginia mountains. Were you ever up there when the rhododendron is in bloom, and mountain meadows blossom with daisies, and the glens are musical with waterfalls, and the blue mists encircle the heights like scarfs, and the crystal air exhilarates like old wine, and you feel like jumping over the moon for very joy! Well, this book will bring it all back to you. Here are the titles of some of the chapters: "Bear Cove and Its People"—"Possum Hunting and Prohibition"—"The Hardshells"—"The Coming of the Doctor," and so on. The book gives an illuminating picture of mountain life and society, and its pages are finely seasoned with humor. My, don't the title sound well these July days: "Breezes from the Blue Ridge!" Why under the heavens did I ever leave Virginia! But here I am in the Pelican Pines to stay, and with every reason to believe that Providence located me here.

The Home Circle

THE HOLY BIBLE.

Genesis first in order stands;
Exodus gives the ten commands;
Leviticus and Numbers see
That Deuteronomy next will be.
Joshua, Judges, Ruth—each dwells
Before Samuel, Kings, and Chronicles.
Ezra and Nehemiah, then
To Esther point, the pious queen.
Job, Psalms, and Proverbs next appear,
With Ecclesiastes, while we hear
The Song of Solomon declare
What beauties in the Savior are.
Isaiah speaks in sweetest strain
Of Christ, and tells us all his pain;
While Jeremiah weeping bears
His Lamentations to our ears.
Ezekiel, Daniel then will come;
Hosea, Joel here find room.
Amos and Obadiah, too;
Jonah and Micah stand to view.
Nahum and Habakkuk make way
To Zephaniah and Haggai;
Then Zechariah's book is seen,
And Malachi concludes the scene.

This is the way the Gospels run:
Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John.
Then come the Acts inviting you
The apostolic church to view.
The Epistles next our notice claim,
Which in succession thus we name:
The Romans and Corinthians were
To cities sent renowned afar;
Galatians and Ephesians then
Wrote by the same inspired pen.
Phllipplans, Colossians stand
With Thessalonians near at hand;
Timothy leads to Titus on,
This brings us down to Philemon.
The Hebrews soon we gladly find,
And that of James comes close behind.
To Peter now our thought we give,
With loving John we wish to live;
Then solemn Jude will pierce the soul,
And Revelation close the whole.—Selected.

BRINGING IN THE BUCKET.

"O dear!" sighed Mary. "I really must write that letter to Mrs. Norton to-night. It's got to be done this week, or there'll be trouble."

"And this is Saturday, if I'm not mistaken," said Uncle Jim, looking up from his newspaper. "In fact, Saturday afternoon. Why not postpone it till to-morrow, if I may ask?"

"Why, Uncle Jim!" cried Mary. "That from you! 'Why not wait till to-morrow!' I should have expected you to say, 'Why did't you write it before?'"

Uncle Jim hid a quizzical smile behind his newspaper. "Well, since you suggest the question, why didn't you write it on Monday—or Tuesday—or Wednesday—or—"

"O, Uncle Jim—" Mary interrupted him. "Do stop! You make it sound so terrible! I've put it off because I haven't felt a bit well this week; and it's an awfully hard letter to write, and I dread it no end!"

"O, yes." Uncle Jim was politely sympathetic. "Well, I suppose it's a great deal easier to do to-night, of course."

"What in the world do you mean? It's harder, if anything."

"Oh-h! Harder? Well, at any rate, I suppose you don't dread it so much?"

"I dread it just as much!"

Mary's voice showed that she was becoming a little annoyed; but Uncle Jim apparently did not notice, and kept on with his questions.

"Then you're feeling pretty well again, are you?"

"I'm feeling tired to death! You know I said so at lunch. What do you mean by all these questions, Uncle Jim? Are you making fun of me!"

But every trace of the quizzical smile was gone from Uncle Jim's face.

"I was just trying to find out," he said, quietly, "just why any sensible girl waits a week about doing something that grows harder the longer she waits, and that she dreads more and more. Besides, the delay makes her every day more and more tired. No, don't shake your head, Mary. You would have felt a great deal better physically as well as mentally if you had got that letter off your hands earlier in the week. Did you ever hear the story about the little boy who was sick with all the symptoms of overwork? The doctor asked how much work he had to do. And they said: 'To bring in a bucket of water every day.'

"'At any particular time?' inquired the doctor.

"'Well, he is supposed to bring it early in the morning, but he usually puts it off till the last thing at night.'

"'And brings it in all day long!' said the wise old doctor. 'You make him bring that water in before he has his breakfast, and he'll be all right.'

"And he was!"

Mary laughed in spite of herself. "That's all very well for a small boy," she said, "but for a girl as old as I am it's different."

"How much older do you think you are than Mr. Howard Carpenter?" inquired Uncle Jim, with one of his surprising conversational changes.

"Older? Why, Mr. Howard Carpenter is as old as father! What do you mean?"

"Simply that he was the one who told me he used it for a watchword. I was asking him how he managed to get so much done without ever acting tired or showing strain as so many men do; and he said: 'I bring in my bucket of water the first thing in the morning.' Then he explained that for a good many years he had chosen the hardest thing in each day's work, or the thing he dreaded most to do, and had deliberately done that thing first of all— thereby losing neither time nor nervous energy in dreading it. I've determined to adopt the plan, Mary, and I respectfully pass it on to you. And now, since the sermon's over, how about a nice little walk through the woods?"

"Thanks, kind sir," said Mary, with a smile, "but that's no bucket. I'm going now to draw mine; better late than never."—Youth's Companion.

THE BEECH IS LIGHTNING PROOF.

Pedestrians have often been warned not to seek shelter under a tree when caught in an electric storm. The tree attracts the lightning, which passes down the trunk to the ground. Any person standing by the tree is sure to be injured. In fact, people have often been killed in this way, and also many cattle. But there is one tree under which it is safe to take shelter, for the lightning never strikes it. It is the beech tree. The Indians discovered this fact long ago, and whenever a thunderstorm approached sought shelter beneath its branches with full assurance of safety. The early settlers learned this fact from the Indians, and soon the saying was current among them that "a beech is never struck by lightning.

This popular belief has been tested and verified by the scientists. One writer says: "As a result of careful experiments it has been found that the beech really does resist the electric current much more vigorously than the oak, poplar or willow. The general conclusion from a series of experiments is that trees 'poor in fat' like the oak, willow, poplar, maple, elm, and ash oppose much less resistance to the electric current than trees 'rich in fat,' like the beech, chestnut, linden and birch. Of course varying conditions modify the practical working of these facts, but the Indians' conclusion was well founded."—Kind Words.

RELIGIOUS LIFE IN OUR COLLEGES.

It seems to have become the fashion with some good folk to level criticism at our higher institutions of learning on the ground that many of their teachers are unorthodox in their views and that, as a consequence, many of their students become unsettled in their religious faith. If this criticism were directed only against institutions not under control of the churches, we should not feel especially concerned about them, though we should want substantial proof that it is justified; but when it is assumed that the colleges of our own church—any or all of them—are leading our youth astray, we believe one of two things ought to be done—either charges should be formally preferred against those who are the objects of the criticism and their cases should be tried before the proper tribunal, or the criticism should cease and our schools should he allowed to go forward with their work without having to suffer from the attacks of those who make charges but do not back up those charges by action in the church courts. If there are men in any of our institutions whose teachings and influence are subversive of the faith of the students under them, certainly they should be got rid of; if there are none such, assuredly it is time to help and not hinder our schools in performing their mission.

In discussing this matter, the Christian Guardian, of Toronto, Canada, an official organ of the Methodist Church in Canada, cites and comments on an investigation made by the Continent, of educational institutions under denominational control in the United States. We do not know whether any of our colleges were included in this investigation or not, hut we feel sure that the situation in them would not be found different from that in the sixty-two from which answers were received. We quote from the editorial in the Christian Guardian, as follows:

"The Continent has undertaken an investigation of its own in this matter, and has corresponded with seventy-five educational institutions which are under denominational control, to discover if this state of affairs obtains in these Christian colleges. In a few cases the colleges have statistics dealing with the matter, but in most cases there are no complete records and the statistics are largely estimates, which are, however, based upon personal acquaintance with the students and are to be accepted as approximately correct.

"Sixty-two replies have been received and are published in the Continent, covering about three and a half pages, and the replies are just about what college men would expect. In all cases the college years are years of mental development and necessarily years of questioning and research, and this means inevitably that problems must be faced which the young man at home might never be called to face, yet which every student whether at home or in college must deal with. In the college, however, there is this advantage that the student has in most cases the help of a Christian professor, who himself has passed through the same period of mental questioning.

"It follows also that some students, who have come from homes or churches where ultra conservatism holds sway, find that beliefs that to them appeared to be foundation stones of Christianity, are made to stand the searching criticism which all truth must undergo, and some of these beliefs may be cast aside and stamped as error. Occasionally, it may be, a student is thrown off his balance in this process, and in headlong fashion repudiates all that he had been taught to believe. But usually such cases are few, and while the student learns to reject some things, he holds more firmly than ever before the truths which justify themselves to his awakened and inquiring mind. And so it comes to pass that the faith of the student, whether in college or out of college, is a more reasonable thing and a more firmly established thing, than it could possibly have been if he had accepted it unquestioningly as a matter of authority.

"And these sixty-two colleges which report, declare that the loss of faith to the students, so far as they can discover, is a very negligible quantity, while the active Christian movement amongst college students has succeeded in causing not a few students to become personally followers of Christ, while scores have been led to dedicate their lives to different forms of distinctively Christian activity.

"This is the experience of the Christian colleges in the United States, and we think it will be generally admitted by college men that it is the experience of all our Christian colleges in Canada. The college was not meant to unsettle, but rather to establish faith. And while it is true that in learning to think a man will inevitably question many of his early beliefs, it is not that he may destroy faith, but only that he may reach solid ground upon which faith can build more reasonably and more firmly. Thinking often shakes things, and some things fall when shaken, but the things which cannot be overturned remain. Truth is eternal and indestructible, and true faith never trembles for this Ark of God. Our colleges are helping, not to uproot the faith of the church, but to establish it more firmly."

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

A note from Rev. T. B. Winstead, of Carthage, Miss., informs us that all goes well on his charge.

The ninth World's Sunday School Convention will meet at Glasgow, Scotland, during the summer of 1924.

We appreciate post card greetings from Rev. C. E. Fike, written from Colorado Springs, Colo., July 5. Brother Fike sends greetings to the brethren.

A meeting of the new General Hospital Board will be held at the Piedmont Hotel, Atlanta, Ga., on July 19. Rev. J. R. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference, is a member of the Board.

We are indebted to Rev. J. L. Neill, superintendent of our work in Czecho-Slovakia, for a post card view of the historic village of Herrnhut, founded by the Moravians just two hundred years ago.

Dr. T. D. Ellis, the new General Secretary of the Board of Church Extension, is busily engaged with his work. He spent last Sunday in Bogalusa, La., looking over the new church building enterprise at that place.

A revival meeting will be held in the First Methodist Church, Greenville, Miss., beginning on September 17. Dr. S. W. Walker, of Sanford, Fla., will do the preaching, and Mr. P. M. Boyd will lead the singing.

Rev. John L. Ferguson has been appointed pastor of Millsaps Memorial Church, Jackson, Miss., and Rev. W. N. Ware has been appointed pastor of the Sharon charge. Brother Ware's address is now Sharon, Miss.

Rev. T. B. Cottrell, pastor of our Gibson Memorial Church, Vicksburg, Miss., writes that the "closed Sunday" in Vicksburg, of which much has been said recently, has been a great blessing. We believe such a Sunday would be a blessing to any city.

The work of the church at Natchez, Miss., is moving along splendidly under the leadership of Rev. C. C. Evans. The attendance at all the services is good, the prayer meeting attendance averaging about fifty thus far. The Methodist folk of Natchez are a fine people—and they have a fine preacher.

Rev. S. A. Steel, D.D., of Mansfield, La., has been invited to deliver the baccalaureate sermon for the Teachers' College, Springfield, Mo., on July 3. There are over two thousand teachers in attendance on this college. All the churches in Springfield call in their evening services for this occasion, and the meeting is held in the open air.

We learn with sorrow of the death of Brother J. W. Richardson, of Corinth, Miss., on June 3, 1922. He had been ill since October, 1921. He was 78 years old. He had been a reader of the Advocate for many years. His daughter, Miss Falla Richardson, who gave up her work as deaconess to be with her father during his illness, will now return to that work.

The Methodist church at McLaurin, Miss., is a neat structure, as is indicated by a post card picture we have received. Its erection was made possible by the efforts of Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Cox, who were very liberal contributors to the building fund. Mrs. Cox is superintendent of the Sunday school, which has a membership four times as large as the membership of the church.

One of the features of the morning service at the Algiers Methodist Church on the first Sunday of the month was the presentation of a set of collection plates by the board of stewards, through the chairman, Capt. C. J. Zatarain. These plates have a sentimental as well as a real value, as they were made from some of the material from the old pipe organ that was wrecked when the old church was destroyed by the storm in 1915.

The Gift Chapel at Fort Sam Houston, San Antonio, Texas, has recently been completed after a period of thirteen years, during which it was in an unfinished state. It is one of the finest buildings for religious and social purposes in army posts in this country, and much of the credit for its completion is given Chaplain A. F. Vaughan, a member of the Louisiana Conference. The San Antonio Light of July 2 gives a full account of the chapel, with pictures of the building and of Chaplain Vaughan.

We are in receipt of the following telegram from Rev. Waldo W. Moore, Biloxi, Miss.: "Dr. Rolfe Hunt held meeting at Wesley Memorial. He preaches well—God is with him. Bishop Candler dedicated Back Bay church June 17. Catholics recently placed five workers there. Methodists have me for half time. The work needs brand new Ford car. Forty-seven dollars already donated. Crisis on—help us." This work at Back Bay is worthy the help of those who are in position to assist it. Brother Moore is doing a great work.

A long-distance telephone message from Rev. A. J. Coburn, our pastor at Ponchatoula, La., gave us the good news last Monday morning of a fine meeting in progress at Ponchatoula. The meeting began the latter part of the preceding week, the preaching being done by Rev. L. W. Cain, of Franklinton, La. At the time of the message, ten members had been received, and great interest was being manifested. The congregations are unusually large, additional seats being necessary to take care of the crowds. We hope to receive a full account of the meeting later.

We are very sad over the news from Rev. W. M. Williams, of Purvis, Miss., that his wife is seriously ill, little hope being entertained of her recovery. She has been in bed for three months, and is steadily growing worse. Many a prayer will ascend in behalf of Brother and Sister Williams. Two of their children, Frank Starr and Mrs. Lillian Beanland, are unable to be at the bedside of their mother, one of them being in China and the other in Africa. The sustaining grace of God is the only comfort in such an hour.

We have read with a very great deal of interest the booklet, "Incidents in the Life of a Bible Missionary—Ten Years on the Firing Line for God," written by Mr. G. A. Perkins, a colporteur of the American Bible Society now stationed in New Orleans. It is a thrilling account of the experiences of this consecrated man as he has engaged in the distribution of the Bible in many of the cities of this country and in Mexico. A wide reading of this book would do much good. The price is 25 cents, and it may be had of the author, 902 St. Charles Street, New Orleans, La.

We have just received a copy of the Church Extension Handbook for 1921-1922. In our judgment, this book is an ideal record of the work of this great agency of the church, and a copy of it should be in the hands of every preacher in the connection. It may be had, free of charge, upon application to the Secretary, Dr. T. D. Ellis, 1115 Fourth Avenue, Louisville, Ky. The first pages are adorned with pictures of Bishop W. R. Lambuth and Bishop H. C. Morrison that are fit to be framed. The book is an exhaustive summary of the work of the Board from its beginning to the present, and all its information is presented in a most attractive and interesting way. It is a volume worth having.

THANKS TO OUR FRIENDS.

We desire to express our thanks to the following friends who have sent us two or more subscriptions recently: Rev. H. J. Moore, Forest, Miss., 2; Mrs. Jno. W. Meacham, Scooba, Miss., 3; J. J. Davidson, Lafayette, La., 2; Rev. P. M. Caraway, Sicily Island, La., 3.

PRAYER MEETING ATTENDANCE.

We have received the following reports of prayer meeting attendance last week: Algiers, C. C. Wier, pastor, 53; Jackson, B. D. Watson, pastor, 22; Ruston, N. E. Joyner, pastor, 34; Mangum Memorial, J. Cude Rousseaux, pastor, 53.

DIGGING FOR GOLD IN JAPAN.

By R. S. Stewart, Jr.

Letter V.

We spent four busy days in Nakatsu. Our missionaries there are Rev. and Mrs. H. L. Hughes, of Texas. They have just moved to this, their first appointment, and have brought with them an evangelistic enterprise and zeal which promise much for the future development of the church among the great numbers in the town and surrounding villages. Our congregations averaged hardly more than seventy-five people, but the small church was well filled and the power of God was present.

There has gone abroad a notion that the Japanese are not a people whose emotions are responsive. In my first work among them I was influenced by this hypothesis. I have come to know, however, that the Japanese are a highly emotional people and that the same power which melts hearts in America will cause tears of sorrow and shouts of joy over here. One of the things that has had a deadening influence on the Christian movement in Japan has been the thought that the church is fundamentally an educational institution; and that saving spiritual truth may be apprehended through intellectual processes. Some of the truest and best among the Japanese evangelists have gone forth to their meetings greatly hampered by this thought and their direct objective has been to enroll enquirers rather than to get men born of God. This has in effect juggled the evangelistic message, "Repent and be saved," into "Educate and be saved." Happily there is now a reversion from this idea. A very prominent Japanese evangelist who hitherto has been content to enroll enquirers for study of Christianity, has now announced a change of objective by which he proposes to drive for direct and definite spiritual results. There is a great and increasing hunger for spiritual things and an increase of emphasis on the evangelistic in preaching and prayer.

The meeting at Nakatsu showed some deep convictions and happy conversions. I remember with interest a visit in a home where the wife, who was from a very conservative Buddhist family, was definitely saved. She had recently married a Christian and was ready to listen to our message. Our conversation was being continually interrupted, however, by her little stepchild, who was persistent in his efforts to absorb the mother's attention. I did not know how we were going to manage, but Brother Hughes was equal to the situation. In a litle while he had captured the child and was entertaining him in another part of the house. And while the missionary took charge of the youngster my Japanese helper led the woman into a clear and happy knowledge of God. On the following day the testimony at the church was full of power and many were affected by it. The older son in this home took a decided stand for Christ also.

Sunday was a day of power and blessing. We began with a six o'clock prayer meeting. At the morning preaching service the altar was filled with seekers for holiness. In the afternoon Christians and enquirers met again and we preached and prayed. Conviction for sin and heart hunger was intense with many. One young man startled the company by jumping to his feet and running from the house sobbing aloud. We did not find out what had happened to him until the next evening. At the night service one bright young student came to the altar as having been called to preach. After him about fourteen came forward applying for church membership. In this company were two school teachers, one kindergartner, the wife of a prominent doctor, a trained nurse, students and others. An invitation was made to the church and many Christians gathered around the altar to offer themselves in consecration and to receive the Holy Ghost. I trust that some were blessed.

The following afternoon we left for the next appointment. A number of Christians were at the train to say goodbye. There was a new joy in the hearts of many. Just as the train was pulling out I was surprised to see a young man running towards my window. It was the student who had rushed from the house in such agitation the day before. His face was now shining with joy as he called after me that he was "saved by the grace of God."

My interpreter in this meeting was Brother Ono, who is one of our young pastors in Kyoto. He left me here to return to his church. He and his like are the hope of Japan. I quote from a letter which I had from him a few days after we parted: "I came back home safely last evening and began work. I found some hungry souls were waiting for my return and I had an opportunity to speak to and pray with three women as soon as I got home. There is no greater happiness than to be used for His glory and in the service of our fellow men." Amen.

SEASHORE CAMP MEETING.

After consultation, the presiding elders of the Mobile District, the Seashore District, and the New Orleans District, have set the time for the Seashore Camp Meeting for the week beginning July 19 and closing July 26. The preaching will be done by Dr. Henry T. Carley, editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and the music will be conducted by Rev. Frank Collins, pastor of the McDonoghville Methodist Church. Let all our people attend this meeting so far as practicable, and let them pray that much good may result from the meeting this year on this historic spot.

J. G. SNELLING,
Presiding Elder of the New Orleans District.

NOTICE.

If the presiding elders and pastors of the Mississippi Conference can recommend twelve young men, of limited means, studying for the ministry, we can assist them in their education.

The fund I have has been contributed by many friends. I hope some day to assist twenty young ministers each year to attend college.

The greatest need of Methodism is an educated ministry.

THE STRONG SHOULD SERVE.

Very clearly and very emphatically our Lord taught his disciples that their mission in life was not to be served, but to serve, and in that strange, humiliating, symbolic ceremony of washing his disciples' feet, He aimed to fasten forever upon the mind of the church the wholesome and epoch-making truth, that the strong should evermore serve the weak, and the greatest of all should be in deed and truth the servant of all. Yet this truth penetrates but slowly, even the thought of the church, and only too often ecclesiastical greatness demands service instead of rendering it.

Lyman Abbott wrote recently that "a community in which the rich make the poor serve them, and the strong make the weak serve them, and the wise make the ignorant serve them, is pagan; and a community in which the rich serve the poor, and the strong serve the weak, and the wise serve the ignorant, is a Christian community." This may seem to some little short of revolutionary and yet it seems to embody the very spirit of our Lord. The poor, and the weak, and the ignorant are with us on every side, and the rich, and the strong, and the learned are also with us, and the attitude of the latter towards the former stamps our civilization as either Christian or pagan.

If this be true, and it seems hard to deny it, what must the verdict be concerning our own community, and oven concerning ourselves? It is not agreeable to become our brother's keeper, and we build walls about ourselves to shut out the disagreeable poverty, and weakness, and ignorance of our neighbors, and we forget that in shutting out these we are also shutting out the Lord. We aim to shut out sorrow and pain and to live carefree lives, but in closing our doors against the woes of the world, we close them also against the Light of the World. Strength is God's gift, and He meant it to serve the weak.

The strong man who refuses to use his strength to serve his weaker fellows is untrue to his God from whom he received his gift; and he is untrue to his fellows who have a right to expect his aid.—Christian Guardian.

SERIOUS.

The Bingville board of selectmen had held many sessions, and finally formulated a set of auto laws that was the pride of the country. So the constable felt no worriment when he stopped a motorist.

"You're pinched for violatin' the auto laws," he pronounced

"Which one," inquired the traveler.

"Dunno, but ye certainly hain't come all the way down Main Street without bustin' one of them."—Selected.

IN MEMORY OF MOTHER JOHNSON.

MRS. CLARA JOHNSON was born at Jimkoping, Sweden, May 3, 1833, and died at the family home at Clarks, La., June 3, 1922, at the age of 89 years and one month. Mrs. Johnson came to America from Sweden in 1863 and settled at Falconer, N. Y. She was married to Mr. August Johnson, August, 1872, who preceded her in death some four years ago. To this union were born two children, one of whom died in infancy, and the surviving one, Mr. A. W. Johnson, of Clarks, La., is one of Louisiana's most esteemed and useful Christian gentlemen. Mrs. Johnson, with her husband, came to Clarks from Grandon, Mo., in 1906, where she has lived a very beautiful Christian life, winning to herself many friends. She gave her heart to God at the age of 16, and ever thereafter lived a very beautiful Christian life. She attended church regularly until her health failed some three years ago; and always counted it a great privilege to attend the house of her Lord. Like the Psalmist of old, she delighted in the law of her Lord and in her last years the Bible was her constant companion. Mother Johnson was always first at the bedside of the sick and suffering, administering to their needs as only she could do. Her main object in life was to make others happy and to scatter sunshine along the way, and many a life has been brightened and cheered by her kind words. During her long and intense suffering she showed a beautiful Christian spirit, patiently waiting His will, and spoke of departing this life not as death but as going home. Her absence will be greatly mourned by the faithful son and daughter by whom she was most tenderly cared for in the declining years of her life, doing all that loving hands coould do to alleviate her suffering. She leaves a host of friends to mourn her; her life was not lived in vain. A Friend,

P. J. TREADWELL, P. C.
Clarks, La.

On June 22, 1922, the death angel visited the home of Brother R. H. Elder, and transplanted the spirit of his dear wife and loved companion, Sister EVA ELDER, to the heavenly mansions in the skies. All that mortal hands could do to relieve her bodily suffering was done. She was in her 51st year, and had been married over 30 years. She united with the Methodist Church in Cockrum in her early teens, and soon developed a strong Christian character. It can be truly said of her that she loved her Lord much, and was always happy when permitted to attend public worship. She was held in high esteem by a large number of relatives and friends, who were present to give their sympathy to the heart-broken loved ones. After funeral services, conducted by her pastor, the Rev. T. L. Oakes, her body was laid tenderly to rest in the Cockrum cemetery to await the resurrection of the just. The new-made mound was fully covered with beautiful flowers, which attest the esteem in which she was held far and wide. Sleep on, Sister Eva, and take thy rest, God called thee—he knew best. Her pastor,

T. L. OAKES.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, an all-wise Heavenly Father has seen fit to call to her reward our good friend and a teacher, MISS WORTLEY VIRGINIA ERVIN, after a short period of illness, necessitating an operation for appendicitis, under which she succumbed, conscious to the last, and expressing herself as ready and willing to go and dwell with Jesus evermore; and

Whereas, Miss Ervin has for a number of years been one of our most consecrated church members, one of our most faithful and efficient Sunday school teachers, and a shining example of a sweet Christian life, possessed of so many traits of beautiful Christian character, endearing herself not only to the Beginners' Class, of which she was the beloved teacher, but to all the members of Central Church, therefore, be it resolved, by the Central Church Sunday School, of Columbus, Miss.:

First—That we shall treasure in our hearts the memory of the life she lived among us, and the lessons she taught both by precept and example, which will be an inspiration to us for years to come.

Second—That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved father, and other relatives, realizing that "He who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb" will comfort them, and that "He doeth all things for the best," and that they will bow submissively and accept the injunction, "Thy will, not ours be done." Most especially our hearts are touched with tender solicitude for her father, D. L. Ervin, the patriarch of our church and official board, who, by his long years of faithful service, daily consecration, and upright walk with God, has blessed and cheered the lives of younger and less devout men, with whom he comes in contact.

Third—That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Brother D. L. Ervin, a copy to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, a copy to the Columbus Commercial Dispatch for publication, and a copy to the Secretary of Central Church Sunday School, to be spread upon the records.

Signed by: Mrs. S. F. Hindsman, Miss Bessie Herron, Mrs. T. E. Thornley, Committee.

WHY THIS?

All over the country we find the Masons laying cornerstones to churches. They do the same to school houses, city halls, etc. But I'm concerned with the Masonic Order laying cornerstones of church buildings in this article. It is not right. The Masons will reply, "We do so only when invited." Of course! Why should they be invited? The Discipline makes no provision for delegating this sacred rite to a less institution than the church itself. I protest. It exalts the Masonic Order and in the same degree places the church on the same level of the Masonic Order. The church has its own ritual. It is a divine institution. The Masonic Order does not claim to be a divine institution. Therefore I say it is not right. I have nothing against the Masons, I do not talk against them or preach about them. Preachers who are Masons should not ask this of the Masons. When did the Masons ever ask the church or another order to lay a cornerstone for one of their halls? I never heard of it. I have no objection to any Mason's taking part, even delivering the principal address, if asked to do so. But I protest against turning over the sacred service to any fraternal order. What right have the Masons to place their emblems on a cornerstone of a church? I admit that it all stands for good. The members of the church are not all Masons and they do not see the right in the church turning this over to this order.

This is the way one preacher feels about it who has been connected with ten church buildings and other property of the church, as pastor.

LETTER FROM REV. W. C. HARRIS.

Dear Dr. Carley: I have recently been quite sick. On the night of Sunday, April 9, to my very great surprise, I had a considerable hemorrhage. This was followed next night by a severe one, which left my entire system almost completely exhausted. The doctors thought it was from the same lung that has been so badly crippled for so many years. They encouraged me to believe that I would regain my strength and that my health would perhaps be as good for quite a number of years as it has been for a number of years past. This is June 29; I am now able to sit up more than half the day and can walk over the house some, but have not been out of doors. I am still very weak and exceedingly nervous. I am hopeful, however, that the doctors were right in their prophecy, and that improvement will soon begin to be more rapid. At the same time I realize that my condition is such that there could be no cause for surprise if I should at any time be taken away very suddenly. The Lord's will be done! Living or dying my trust is in him. I would be glad to have letters from any of my friends who might feel inclined to write. W. C. HARRIS.

Epworth League.

EPWORTH LEAGUE NEWS, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Alexandria District.

Nace Crawford, President of Winnfield League, has determined to start after the gold seal immediately. He began by calling council, business and committee meetings, at which plans for a busy year were made. Go to it, Nace. Its a great life if you don't weaken.

Alexandria League plans to hold vesper services during the summer similar to those held at the Assembly.

Last year Alexandria District had a dozen Leaguers present at the Assembly; this year twenty-seven. They represented eleven out of sixteen chapters. Let the other five wake up and send representatives next year so as to help their district yell.

Oakdale and Bunkie Leagues are the proud possessors of gold seal certificates. It is hoped that they will spur others on to do as well.

Alexandria District makes the claim of having a larger per cent of their membership enrolled in the Quiet Hour Covenant than any other district.

The Leaguers of this district pledge their support to their pastors and ask their help in return to make this the greatest year in the history of their League work.

Echoes From The Assembly.

A few days in the League Assembly in Mansfield would have cured any pessimist who could have been in attendance. The enthusiasm and earnest purpose of this host of young Methodists from the various districts of Louisiana, gathered not primarily for recreation but for hard work in preparation for service, are sure forecasts for the future. The Assembly this year was a great success in every way. R. H. WYNN.

Shreveport, La.

The thing that impressed me most about the Assembly this year was the fine spiritual tone that pervaded all activities. With very rare exceptions, the soil of the hearts of the young people who came was so prepared as to be in readiness to receive the truth. It did not seem at all necessary to overcome the worldliness that usually creeps in, but, as a unit, they stood before the Lord, ready for His blessed commands.

It is a great pleasure and privilege to be even an onlooker at such a meeting and one of our leading ministers was heard to say, "This is going to rebuild the Methodism of Louisiana."

MRS. R. H. WYNN.

Shreveport, La.

I have attended each annual session of the Louisiana State Epworth League Assembly at Mansfield since its organization, and I heartily believe that the session just ended, June 13-20, 1922, is the best yet held. The class work along various lines was thorough and calculated to make better Leaguers and better Methodists of our young people who attended; the spiritual life of the group of young people as manifested in the group prayer meetings, the vesper services and otherwise, was inspiring and promises much for the revival of spiritual life among the young people throughout the State; and the great life service consecration movement with which the Assembly consummated, indicated the presence and guidance of the Spirit of God. There is nothing better in Louisiana than the Epworth League Assembly.

W. WINANS DRAKE.

Shreveport, La.

Oh! for the gift of discernment; that we may have a more acute vision and appreciation of excellence in rough envelopes, in simple lives, in lonely places. To see the saintly is to believe in saintliness, to be stimulated by it. The daily vision of the great, the good, the beautiful, is a daily uplift and transfiguration. Let not some mean curtain or other hide from our eyes the masterpieces of the Spirit of God.—W. L. Watkinson.

A GREAT MEETING AT WINONA, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: Brother J. Tillery Lewis has just held a great meeting of two weeks' duration. The services were held in the church auditorium, which had just been made comfortable by the installation of fans. Brother Lewis did the preaching, holding services twice on Sunday and only in the evening during the week.

In undertaking this work his idea was to give his congregation a series of sermons on the fundamentals of Christianity and in such a way as to establish a continuity of thought and reasoning concerning the great foundation principles of the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ; this he did in a profound and concise way that all could grasp and all must needs remember.

All through, he showed the guiding of the Holy Spirit in the delivery of these messages, with peculiar power, and every message was received with sincere appreciation by not only his people, but also by numbers of friends from the other churches of the city.

This was a great educational and uplifting effort in teaching people to understand and appreciate the deeper spiritual things of the Kingdom and the absolute dependence of humanity on a personal experience of salvation through Jesus Christ.

We know that lasting and inspirational influences were set in motion that will redound to the benefit of the community and to the glory of God. Brother Lewis is a great preacher.

Yours fo rthe cause,

Many Mothers Left in Weakened Condition

Many, many letters similar to the following recommend the Vegetable Compound as a wonderful medicine for bringing the mother back to normal health and strength.

It is an excellent restorative, contains no harmful drugs and can be taken in safety by a nursing mother.

Thousands of mothers who have regained their strength by taking it are its best recommendation. Very likely you know some. Why not take it yourself?

Will Gladly Answer Questions

Olney, Ill.—"For over a year after my boy was born I was troubled with weakness of the female organs. Also my stomach would bloat up and I had heartburn, headache, backache, and simply could not do anything. I saw your 'ad.' in the papers and read what your Vegetable Compound did for others, so gave it a trial. After the first few doses I could tell a change. (Some might think this impossible, but it is true.) I took two bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and felt so fine that I neglected to take any more for about a year. This last winter I had pains again so I have been taking it to relieve them. I tell everyone I hear complaining of female troubles that it is grand. If any woman asks me questions about the medicine I will gladly tell her what I know."—Mrs. CHARLES VAUGHN, Olney, Ill.

Baltimore, Md.—"I first used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for general weakness following the birth of my first child. Later on the advice of my mother I used it for a dull pain in the small of my back and for a bearing-down feeling. These pains had an effect on me to such an extent that very often I was unable to stand on my feet to do my housework, and at times I was compelled to lie down for short periods. I found Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound very helpful and recommend it highly."—Mrs. LORETTA B. SIMONS, 645 S. Belnord Ave., Baltimore, Md.

"Cannot Thank You Enough"

Allentown, Pa.—"After my last baby was born I lost weight and was in a very run-down condition. After taking the second bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I began to gain strength and flesh. In the past four months I have done all my own housework and do an extra wash besides. Sunday School

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The enrollment in the Corinth District Training School reached 100 including these who came to visit the different classes. The work being done is serious, earnest, and is striking in deep. Rev. J. B. Randolph, presiding elder, Rev. Mellville Johnson, pastor, Mr. J. G. Houston, superintendent, and the church at New Albany have given hearty support to this undertaking. The New Albany people have given free entertainment to all visitors for the entire time. Eighteen schools have students taking the work. With such intelligent, sympathetic cooperation as we have received in this district it will not take many years to give trained leaders in every church. To illustrate: Mrs. Randolph and Mrs. Patrick have recently organized two training classes in churches near Corinth and these good women are teaching these classes. Rev. Frank McGee has organized a class at Sunflower and another at Blaine.

One object of these schools is to train leaders who will train the leadership of the local churches. We thank God and take courage.

SCHOOL FOR PASTORS AT BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

Dear Brother Carley: For a long time I have felt the need of something for pastors who, by the constant grind of the pastorate and demands made upon them, needed recreation, stimulation, inspiration. I found it in the "School for Pastors," at Birmingham, Ala.

The preacher who did not attend one of these schools can never know what he missed. Coming in touch with the men of the faculty was helpful of itself; and then the association of the brethren of the five patronizing Conferences gave freshness to mind and thought. And my heart was made to leap for joy as I saw all these men seeking to know God's will, and earnestly trying to better equip themselves for more efficient work.

But it is not my purpose to tell about them or the course of study, as some of the other brethren will tell you about them. But I do want to say just a word or two about the "Demonstration Forum," held each day from 12:30-1:00. Some of the subjects that were discussed were as follows: Special Approach to Evangelism, by Dr. C. N. Clark, Pastor, of Lafayette Park Methodist Church, St. Louis, Mo.; Readjustment of Life and Labor as Between Men and Women, by Dr. H. W. Odum, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N. C.; How Develop a Binder Between City and Country-Conscious Folk, by Dr. E. L. Earp, Drew Thelogical Seminary, Madison, N. J.; Policy as to the Ku Klux Klan, by Rev. John Pearson, Pastor First Methodist Church, South, Mansfield, La.; The Dependence of the Cities on the Farmers, by Mr. T. O. Walton, Director Extension Work, College Station, Texas; and last but not least, New Developments in Race Relationships, by Dr. W. W. Alexander, Secretary Inter-Racial Commission, Atlanta, Ga. This to me was the most outstanding of all the Forums. At this time Dr. Alexander, after a few brief remarks, introduced as the speaker of the hour, Prof. George W. Carver, of Tuskegee, Ala., who, after just a few words as to his faith and confidence in God, made the statement that if the land were to become too poor to produce anything but sweet potatoes, or that if during the World War Germany had destroyed all food-stuff but the sweet potato, man could have lived on the potato alone. He has produced from the potato over one hundred different useful products, and has not yet finished with the potato.

He said that there was no more excuse for a sweet potato to rot than there was for corn to rot; that if you would only cure them, they would keep for years. This wonderful man was once a slave; he is a pure-blood Negro, born in Missouri, educated in Kansas and Iowa. To me one of the most wonderful things about him is his deep sense of duty and his loyalty to his God-called work. Mr. Edison offered him more than $50,000 a year for his services, but he refused the offer because he felt that God wanted him to do the work that he is now doing. He feels that his work is just as much a divine calling as that of preaching the Gospel. He gives God all the glory.

But my paper is growing too long, yet I must say that the Forum hour was one of the most profitable of each day's work. No man could attend it without being a broader, bigger, and better man.

I am sure that every preacher there got a clearer vision of the many great problems that are facing the church to-day, and which the church must solve if she holds her place as she ought. I trust that our great Mission Board that has made possible these great schools may be enabled to launch such a campaign as will carry every one of the pastors in Southern Methodism to one of them during the year 1923. Those who were at Birmingham this time will not need punching to get them to go—they will only need the money; but those who were not there will need to be told about the schools, and made to see the wonderful lot of good that they are doing, before they are going to become interested.

As you listened to Dr. Clark on Evangelism, you could not help but rejoice, and shout Amen. Time would fail us to tell you all. One thing I am sure, and that is that every preacher there sees the rural church in a different light.

Brethren, let us get behind the church in the country and make it glow, go, and grow.

PEACE.

By E. Leigh Mudge.

A lone tree creeps to the brink,
And clings to the rocky ledge—
A wisp of birchen phantasy
Close to the water's edge,
Where the current smoothly glides
And sweeps to the mist beneath,
To the roaring, ravening vortices
Of the cavernous deeps of death.

On a slender birchen spray
A bird has built a nest.
Close to the thundering waterfall
Her downy fledglings rest.
And the turbulence all around
At the rim of that nest doth cease;
For calm is the life in the midst of strife
Where dwelleth the bird of Peace.

One of these Philippian saints was a merchant-woman, another was governor of the jail, another a recent victim of demon-possession, still very likely the chattel of the slave owner. Yet to this whole company Saint Paul gives without reserve the glorious name. Then and there, in the thick of their Philippian life, they were all the saints of God.—H. G. C. Moule.

FROM ZWOLLE AND NABORTON—AND THEN SOME.

Dear Brother Carley: This has been the happiest year of my life. More members have been received on profession of faith than ever before in my ministry; we have the best people to live and work among that it has ever fallen to my lot to be associated with.

We had a great meeting at Zwolle in May and we had three of the finest assistants that can be found anywhere. I did all the preaching, and these assistants did almost everything else. We had the church behind the whole move, every organization responsible for the unsaved of their group. We had Rev. Jas. B. Grambling to lead the singing and work among the young people. Those who know Grambling, know how well it was done. The greatest assistant was the Holy Spirit, who came in great power from the very first service, in answer to a praying church. With such a combination — RESULTS? Well, I guess!

Of the 27 who volunteered for life service at the Epworth League Assembly, four of the girls were ours—all we had there—and they wrote after their names, "ANYWHERE." They are already living up to their pledge.

These young folk have charge of the mid-week service, and it is always a go—not a dull moment. They have secured a vacant lot and are planning for a community center, play grounds, story-telling, etc. Brother preacher, if your young folk need a vision, be sure to send them to the Assembly at Mansfield, and you had better go with them, or they may be ahead of you. I had to go, or they would have left me behind.

Naborton is in the oil field, and has been a struggling church during its existence of ten years, but they have caught a vision and to-day we have the largest membership in its history, of the most enthusiastic Methodists to be found anywhere. As the result of a meeting held by our Baptist friends, where they attempted to take over our whole church, some of our folk were converted, and we received 27 members as a result of their efforts.

To "make Methodists" out of them, we had Rev. J. W. Pearson, of Mansfield, to give a course of lectures on Methodism; and if Mansfield would consent to spare him, which I doubt, he should be employed for full time to go over this State preaching Methodism. He is the greatest exponent of it that I ever heard.

Brother A. M. Shaw beat me to it last week, in his article with reference to the malicious propaganda that is being scattered abroad in our State. I wonder if our leaders realize what we in the rural districts are contending with along this line. I believe that if the time never was before, it has come now to let our people know where we stand upon things fundamental. I just wonder if our presiding elders could not help out along this line, indoctrinating our people. At the Assembly at Mansfield we had 150 young people studying Methodist Armor. I wish that each of these would teach a class in this book as he returns home. I believe the Methodist Church is nearer the Bible than any other, and we have not a single thing to apologize for, and our people called Methodists ought to be so strong that they can meet any criticisms of those who claim the earth, "with a fence around it."

We have a typical run-down country church on this charge—Bayou Sele—and Brother Williams, P. E., and I are planning to make a demonstration in this community. It will take some time to do it, but if it can be done here, it can be done anywhere; then we will tell you all about how it was done.

Do you wonder now why we are happy? We have a man-sized job, and the support of some of the best people on earth. "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." Yours truly,

W. F. HENDERSON, Jr.

FROM VILLE PLATTE, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: On June 12, Brother Martin Hebert came to hold a week's meeting for me at St. Landry, La. He brought Brother Alsey Martin along to do the singing. We started the meeting in the schoolhouse, where Brother Hebert preached Monday evening, Tuesday and Wednesday morning, then left to go to Gueydan, where he was to open a meeting on the evening of the 16th. So Brother Alsey Martin preached the balance of the time twice a day, closing Sunday the 18th.

On Wednesday the 14th, the schoolhouse being too small for the congregation, the Baptist folks were generous enough to offer the use of their church to us, which we gratefully accepted for the comfort of the people.

We had an excellent meeting for the short time that we were there. Ten came into the church on profession of faith, and, not a one having been baptized, I performed that sacrament according to the Methodist Discipline, which is based on the Holy Scripture, by applying water from above, to the person. I also baptized a little baby girl (an angel sent from God), at the Baptist altar, without any comment from any of the members. St. Landry can boast of having broad-minded Baptist folks. I believe they have religion. "Blessed are the peace makers, for they shall be called the children of God." It is time for us to learn to work and pull together, if the kingdom of God is ever to be established. Let us move out of our world into God's world, and supply the need of God's children.

At the close of the meeting we organized a church with fifteen members, five having come in by certificate. The prospect for a church there is good, and one is very much needed. We have enough young people there to have a Sunday school, if we had a leader. Oh, how we need leaders! If I had a run-about to go myself, I could lead them, but I have no conveyance. I have been praying that some of our rich folks would supply that need, but it hasn't come. I shall hope and pray on.

I have received into the Methodist Church seventeen since Conference on profession of faith.

I am going to Houma, La., on the 10th of this month to take charge of the boys' week at the Community Home, and will remain there for our district conference, which will convene on the 25th.

After the district conference I will immediately leave for the Missionary Conference at Lake Junaluska, N. C., that convenes on July 28th and lasts till August 6. Pray for us.

Fraternally,

These enervating days are fraught with danger to people whose systems are poorly sustained. This leads the makers of Hood's Sarsaparilla to say, in the interest of the less robust, that the full effect of this good old family medicine justifies calling it, not only a blood-purifier but also a tonic. It is sustaining. It gives strength, aids digestion, promotes refreshing sleep, and will prevent much sickness at this time of year.

FRECKLES

Now Is The Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as Othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of Othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength Othine as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE

Children's Work.

Mrs. R. P. Nehlett, Superintendent.

The Corinth, Greenville, Greenwood, Grenada, and Sardis Districts have been held. There was a fairly good attendance of Junior superintendents and Juniors from each district. A demonstration of work was given at each meeting by the Juniors. We are praying that the seed sown may bear fruit a hundredfold.

The second quarter is drawing to a close. Last quarter one-half of the superintendents failed to report to me—please do not disappoint me again. Be sure to send report by July 1.

Please enroll every child in your church between the ages of 6 and 14 years in your Junior Missionary Society. Enroll every baby under six years of age in your Baby Division.

Plan a meeting of the mothers and babies some time during this month, if you have not already held one this quarter.

The Mite Box money is applied to our Pledge, and we fell behind on our pledge the first quarter, so we must redouble our efforts this quarter.

Those of you who have not the regular report books, please order a set for fifty cents from Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn. Then answer in full every question asked on these reports.

WHY ORGANIZE THE CHILDREN OF THE CHURCH?

The best time is at the beginning. "The minister's wife was making bread for the Saturday's baking. All at once she gave a little exclamation of impatience. She had forgotten something, and the bread wouldn't rise. That which had been forgotten was an insignificant little cake of yeast, but that lump of inert, unambitious dough refused to do anything without it.

"Why not put it in now?" asked the minister, who was hovering about the kitchen.

The minister's wife gave him a look of pity.

"Don't you know?" she asked, "Some things have to be put in at the beginning?"

"O, they do, do they?" cried the minister, a very great thought shining suddenly in his face. "O, they do? And they won't amount to much without it? O, but 'tis more than breadmaking we are talking about! Thank you, my dear, for helping me to know what to talk about to the Cradle Roll mothers—you know they meet here this afternoon, and you asked me to say a few words. It's the church's business, the Woman's Missionary Society's business, and my business if we want religion in this church, to set right to work and try to put it in at the beginning."

If we fail to train our children in intelligent organized service, we are definitely training them for irresponsibility, indifference, and inaction in the face of the need of the world for salvation.

A LETTER FROM AFRICA.

Wembo Niami, Congo Belge,
May 1, 1922.

Dear Mrs. Montgomery: I can't tell you how glad I was to get that nice, newsy letter. And it was such a surprise! Yours was the newsiest letter I have had from New Orleans since I left there. * * *

I have been having a fight for the last ten days with malaria—that dread of the tropics. To-day I'm all but drunk on quinine, but have taught school anyway. There were 138 in my school to-day. I'll average about that number this term.

In connection with that I have the management of from 75 to 90 mission boys and they are just as "boyey" as any other nationality of irresistible, irrepressible boys from ten to eighteen years. I love them dearly, but they surely take every ounce of ingenuity as well strength from their leader. Then I also have my housekeeping—for you surely have heard of my marriage ere this. * * *

Mr. Harris has the industrial work here, which means the supervision of about 60 native workmen in carving lumber—all by hand—building houses, fences, roads, brickmaking, syrupmaking, and, it seems to me, hundreds of other jobs. Suffice it to say, he is busy all the time and likes it all—natives, country, etc. Mr. Harris has had such splendid health, but he dared the sun too much one day and had fever several days; then last week the malaria gripped him for several days. I was so uneasy in the face of the fact that there is no doctor here. Our only doctor left about two months ago on account of the ill health of his wife and they will not return. You know how helpless we feel, as it would take two weeks to get a doctor here. If only some doctor with the knowledge of surgery would hear the call and come quickly! We pray so hard for one, but our prayers do not seem effective. I wonder if the doctor's are afraid? It is not a bad country. Since I've been here it has never been as warm as an ordinary summer day in New Orleans. Of course the sun's rays are fatal, but in the house it is always pleasant and at night I usually use a blanket, and wear a sweater to sunrise prayer meeting. Our work day begins at 5 a.m. and we are pretty much on the go till ten or ten-thirty at night. * * *

The lion came so near last night, that, the natives were quite frightened and did not sleep much. Mr. Harris did not hear him but declares he is going after him to-night with his rifle—a monstrous German mauser. We have a few milk goats and have to keep a man to guard them in the daytime from the leopards and lock them in a strongly built house at night. * * *

We have an interesting Woman's Missionary Society, of which I am secretary. We have about 75 members and they are quite interested in doing charity work among their sick and poor. It would do your heart good to see their earnestness and hear their prayers. How all the people love Miss Wilson! She is by far the best loved worker of all. We are rejoicing over her return. Hope she gets here in August as she leaves Belgium the 18th of this month. * * *

Please write me again—you can't know what life-savers letters are out here—and just to know that the friends back at home have not forgotten us—oh! it means so much more than they think. * * *

Give my love to all of them and don't forget that we need your prayers.

With love,
ELIZA ILES HARRIS.

GREAT REVIVAL AT SUNFLOWER, MISS.

We have just closed one of the greatest revivals it has ever been our privilege to attend. The power of God was evidenced from the beginning. We had more than one hundred conversions and renewals. More than forty joined the Methodist church and about that number joined the Baptist and the Presbyterian churches, making eighty in all. Most of this number were adults. The Spirit worked with such power that practically all out of the church were brought into the kingdom of God. Brother W. M. McIntosh did the preaching, assisted by Rev. Edd. G. Phillips. They make a splendid team and God used them to His glory during our meeting at Sunflower.

We think we have the finest people in the North Mississippi Conference here at Sunflower. We are planning a new church in the near future. The pastor and people are happy over what the future promises for the kingdom of God. The Sunflower church has given the pastor a trip to Junaluska for the Sunday school training school, July 13-27. Fraternally yours,

F. H. McGEE, P. C.

OFF DUTY.

Usually you can take the grade of a man by his employment of his idle hours. Not the things he does, on duty, but the things he permits himself, off duty, tell the kind of man he is. Never before was there so great need for relaxation, and never before so many ways to relax. But it is well to remember that the tiredest part of a man is not his body, but the soul of him. And we need to inquire, oftener than apparently we do, whether our diversions really rest the soul. There was Luther with his favorite musical instrument; and Ole Bull hanging over a cliff that he might catch the deep overtures of the sea; and Gladstone chopping trees in the forest at Hawarden; and Tennyson climbing to the eyrie of his favorite house; and my mother with her open Bible and the far-away look in her eyes. Always need for a place of retreat and repair. Personally, I do not think the Atlantic City way is the best way to restore and rest a jaded spirit. Recreation is there, but not true rest. Better a brook to sprawl beside, or a hill to climb, or a good book, or a friend to commune with—and God. The old invitation is unannulled: "Come unto me and I will rest you."—George Clarke Peck.

GIRLS! LEMONS
WHITEN SKIN AND BLEACH FRECKLES

Squeeze the juice of two lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of Orchard White, which any drug store will supply for a few cents, shake well, and you have a quarter pint of harmless and delightful lemon bleach. Massage this sweetly fragrant lotion into the face, neck, arms and hands each day, then shortly note the beauty and whiteness of your skin.

Famous stage beauties use this lemon lotion to bleach and bring that soft, clear, rosy-white complexion, also as a freckle, sunburn, and tan bleach because it doesn't irritate.

"MR. METHODIST, MEET YOUR GREAT-GRANDFATHER."

By Robert B. Eleazer.

Most of us do not think of ourselves as products of missionary effort. Nevertheless, we are. If it were possible to introduce to any one of us some remote ancestor—a great-great-grandfather from the fourth century, say, we would not pause long enough to acknowledge the introduction. Facing a savage clad in skins, armed with sword and spear, with a skull, perhaps, dangling at his belt and the blood of some raw feast upon his lips, our only concern would he to get out of the way as quickly as possible. We would he loath to admit that we are of the same flesh and hlood. Yet history tells us we are, and we must accept its testimony, however distasteful it may be.

They even tell us that some of these ancestors of ours were accustomed to offer human sacrifices. We have seen pictures of the sacred oaks of England, hung about with the skulls of men and women slain by our progenitors as sacrifices to their gods. We are told also that great wooden figures or cages were made and filled with human beings. Archers then stood at a distance and shot arrows into the bodies of the quivering victims, that the priests might watch the flow of the blood and therehy determine the will of the gods. Or perhaps the whole was set on fire and consumed, while our pious ancestors stood around with hands uplifted in prayer.

Yes, these were our own people, much as we dislike to admit it. There is only one thing that differentiates us from them—the fact that some missionary went to them in those early days, unsought and perhaps unwelcome, and told them the story of Christ, for on that story has heen huilt all the splendid twentieth-century civilization in which we revel. Without that message our ancestors would have followed in their steps. All that we have and are that they had not and were not, we owe to the missionary and his message.

Obviously, we cannot pay that deht to the missionaries of old who carried the gospel of deliverance to our forefathers. Our only chance is to send it to somebody else's grandfather who is to-day in the same deep darkness as were our own in the distant past.

Faith joins us to God, just as companionship joins a boy to a friend in whom he believes and trusts.—Selected.

THE BEST SERVANTS OF CHRIST.

By Bishop Frederick DeLand Leete.

The hest two servants of Christ are Ready and Steady. Saint Paul is our authority, and there is no better one.

Ready.

The great apostle and leader wrote to some Christian folk in Corinth, "I know your readiness." This was high praise!

Ready does not have to he cajoled, teased, earnestly persuaded to get in line with the plans of the church. Certainly he never needs to he forced or compelled hy influence to do his duty.

Ready may have no more strength, ahility, resources than have others. He may he possessed of far less than have some. What he is and has is availahle now, and prompt, willing action is what counts.

Ready may not carry any heavier hurden or make any greater sacrifice than his neighbor feels required to assume in the end. But Ready has a splendid time doing his part. He costs no one else any trouble or worry. And he helps get things going. He is a selfstarter. Christ must rejoice in him. Doubtless He does rejoice.

Steady.

A still better church member, Methodist, Christian, is Steady. The last word in a mighty passage—the "finally," is, "Be ye stedfast."

Steady is reliable! He "fainteth not, neither is weary," or if, heing human, he does faint and grow weary, he keeps on.

Does anybody think that exhortation, "Quit you like men," means to he a "quitter?" Steady knows better, and he acquits himself as a good soldier, a constant servant.

Steady will keep on paying, whether the pastor and members of the church stroke him the right way or do not. He will be sustaining the benevolences after as well as during the Centenary period.

Steady does not need re-converting, and is revived without exceptional pressure. He grows on his own root, because his "life is hid with Christ in God."

Ready and Steady.

Would that their families might increase. May every church possess many of their kin and nature!—Exchange.

WANTED: A NEW AMUSEMENT.

By Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, in the Christian Herald.

No matter what defense may be made of three forms of amusement which command the largest following—card-playing, dancing and theatre-going—it is a fact that all of them have very serious and questionable features. In other words, the three forms of amusement that more people in the United States seek more than any others have such stigmas attaching to them that the Christian disciple seeking to do the things that the Master would do finds himself embarrassed very often in seeking his amusement along these three lines. This ought not to be the fact if these amusements are what they ought to be.

The question now raised by these facts is simply this: Is it possible to invent or discover some form of amusement that will have as great an attraction as card-playing, dancing or the theatre and at the same time have no questionable features about it? Or is it true that any amusement that people seek will always have about it something that will create suspicion, because people (that is, some people) will persist in making a wrong use of it?

Acting on the helief that a healthy form of amusement may he found or invented that will attract as many people of hoth sexes as the card-playing, the dance, or the theatre, I would suggest that a hig money-prize he provided and given to any one in the United States who will invent such an amusement.

The terms of the offer should include these points:

(1) The amusement must he different from any that the people now have.

(2) It must have the ahility to create the same enthusiasm on the part of both sexes that is created by card-playing, dancing or theatre-going.

(3) It must he an amusement shared by hoth sexes, but without any questionahle features, such as now go with the dance.

(4) It must be tried long enough to prove to the people who enjoy it that it is not a passing fad, but evidently as lasting as card-playing, dancing and theatre-going seem to be.

(5) It must be an amusement that can not be ruined hy commercialism, as many of the people's amusements are heing ruined.

FROM LONGSTREET, LA.

Dear Dr. Carley: We have just closed a very successful revival at Keatchie church. Dr. Brooks, from First Church, Shreveport, did the preaching. As a result of the meeting we had six additions to the church.

Prominent citizens of the Keatchie community asserted that it was the hest revival meeting that had been held in the town of Keatchie for many years.

Our meeting at Longstreet is to begin Thursday night, July 13. We are putting forth a strong effort to make this a genuine revival of old-time religion. Rev. R. A. Bozeman will do the preaching.

The pastor will conduct the other two revivals on this charge. The work on the entire Longstreet charge is progressing nicely.

WHERE RIGHT IS.

If the industrial world is always to be exposed to the risk of turmoil and trouble caused by strikes, we might as well admit that men have not yet come to the place where right can take the place of force, and begin with renewed energy and zeal the task of teaching the world the principles of righteousness as laid down by Jesus. The contending parties in strikes—as in the railway strike, for example—maintain, of course, that they and they only have right on their side; but when the issue comes to be fought out, it is too often simply a question of force—often of physical force. As a rule, the right lies somewhere between the claims of the opposing parties, and disinterested adjudicators ought to be able to discover that right and proclaim it in such way as to do substantial justice to both sides. The idea that unprejudiced men cannot be found to reach a just conclusion in such cases involves too pessimistic a view of human nature for us to entertain—certainly justice and fair dealing have not perished from the face of the earth. If some sort of compulsory arbitration measure, backed up by all the authority of the Government, cannot be worked out, we shall have to continue to endure the economic loss that every strike brings; and our civilization will be held back for as many centuries as men prefer might to right. We are still longing for the reign of the Golden Rule.

WHAT TORONTO THINKS ABOUT IT.

The claim that horse racing is an asset to New Orleans has force only with those who measure values by dollars. Even then we believe it can be shown that the races actually cost the city more than it gets out of them; we are sure no one who is really concerned for the moral welfare of the community would claim that the races add anything worth while to the city. The Globe, a leading newspaper of Toronto, Canada, has this to say about the matter: "Toronto is to have another race track. The facilities for gambling under the law are apparently insufficient to meet the demand. There are only forty-two days of legalized gambling during the racing season. The promoters of the new venture say it will be highly profitable to provide fourteen days more. * * * A fourth race track, if the expectations of its promoters are realized, will yield them about half a million a year, and the provincial treasurer an equal, or perhaps larger, return. What of the other side of the ledger? There will be fourteen days more of anxiety and unhappiness every year for the gambler's wife. There will be an increase in the number of cases of theft and embezzlement, which we shall be told lightly by the crown prosecutor began through playing the races. There will be two weeks more of inattention to business by the men and women who seldom see a horse race, but whose confidence in their ability to pick the winner remains unimpaired after all their money has been lost on the 'also rans.' * * * We must fight the evil with every weapon that can be made available. The people of Ontario, if given the opportunity, would vote out legalized gambling by a 5 to 1 majority."

GOD CANNOT BE LEFT OUT.

Dr. W. G. Henry, one of the distinguished scholars of Southern Methodism, has recently brought from the press a little volume, "The Organization of Personality," which is well worth reading by all those who are concerned about the development of Christian character. The assumption of some men that God can be left out in the making of a good life is false on the face of it; but it is helpful now and then to have that assumption conclusively denied and thrown out of court. Dr. Henry does that in the following words: "It requires God's power, added to man's effort, to make a personality that is satisfactory. The human personality must possess love for the Divine before the work of the new life begins. Noble purposes and all spiritual entities are born of the heart. They do not necessarily arise from the will. It is as foolish and absurd for man to disregard God in the effort at perfecting personality as it is absurd for a manufacturer of steel to ignore mineral substance or for the carpenter to attempt to erect a structure denying his need of building material. God cannot succeed without us and we cannot succeed without Him. Nothing less than the best in help, the purest in ideal, the noblest in pursuit, the holiest in attainment can satisfy man when at his best. God is the answer to all these needs. The man who would forget the immortal will in himself and the inevitable soul-thirst for God, and God's increasing effort at a revelation of Himself in the life of man is fundamentally defective in his life-building scheme. He is likened to a painstaking sculptor who chisels his creation on a block of melting ice. He is as stupid as a skilled artist who paints his creation on tissue paper. 'Without me ye can do nothing,' is John's statement of our Lord's commanding position in human affairs. 'Paul may plant, Apollos may water, but only God can give the increase.' Man may conform, but only God can transform. It takes oxygen and hydrogen to make water. It requires man and God to constitute life at the highest level."

ANTS—AND ELSE.

For several years Argentine ants have been a great pest in New Orleans. In countless numbers these insects have flourished all over the city, and the damage caused by them annually has been estimated—and we think conservatively—at hundreds of thousands of dollars. There seemed to be no way of getting rid of them, the most diligent efforts of the householder resulting in only temporary relief. But the apparently impossible has been accomplished. A city-wide movement was started last fall, under expert direction, to place a properly prepared poison throughout the city with the hope of exterminating the pest. There was a good deal of doubt on the part of a great many people as to the possibility of exterminating; but, at comparatively small cost, the experiment was carried out. This spring very few ants appeared, and thus far their number has been so small as to prove conclusively that they can be completely wiped out. Plans are already under way for finishing the work so splendidly begun. Now for the "else:" If millions of pests as small as ants can be exterminated, why is it not possible for the centers of moral pollution in our communities to be got rid of? These plague spots are known, the evil they do is recognized by everybody; the remedies for their cure are at hand. Yet year after year we allow them to continue their work of destruction. Can it be that we are more concerned about the financial loss caused by ants than we are about the moral degradation caused by these places of evil? We get rid of one—why not get rid of the other? It can be done.

KILL THE ALLIGATORS.

Our eyes fell on this news item in a great daily newspaper a few days ago: "What to do with three alligators, one of them seven feet long, is the problem that confronts E. G. Sweppenheiser, a farmer, at Lime Ridge, near here. The alligators were sent to him by a friend in Florida. Sweppenheiser is keeping the reptiles in his barn, but they are too fond of the chickens." So far as we can see, there is no news value in the item, but it does contain a suggestion that is worth while. A great many people seem to be greatly perplexed by the simplest kind of situation. If Mr. Sweppenheiser thinks more of his chickens than he does of his alligators, he should promptly get rid of the alligators—that is no problem at all. Too many of us try to keep our alligators and chickens both.

SERVES HIM RIGHT.

In a Massachusetts town recently a man charged with cruelty to his horse, and with not supplying proper food and shelter, was tried in court and sentenced to spend two nights in the stall and let the horse have the liberty of a pasture. We do not know by what warrant of law such a sentence was passed, but we do know that it was an appropriate penalty for a man who would cruelly mistreat one of his best friends. Cruelty to animals is both a sin and a crime, and those guilty of it have to answer to God as well as to man. We have great admiration for the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

MY DOOR.

By Donald A. Fraser.

My door is open, shall I close it now,
And shut its latch upon the great wide world?
A moment wait. Out, Envy! Out, Despair!
And Superstition, Ignorance, and Lust,
And proud Ambition, Pompous Pride, and Wealth!
Out, out, I say, for I'd be happy here.

My door is open, shall I close it yet?
Come, Friendship, Knowledge, enter my abode,
And Plenty's smiling face, and sweet Content,
And Virtue fair, and Hope, and Love, and Christ.
Come in, my home's complete; so now I'll close
This inch of wood between the world and me.

LEAVES FROM MY NOTEBOOK.

By Bishop James Cannen, Jr.

January 7, 1922. I awoke at 6:30, and was so sleepy, turned over and slept until the steward gave the "last call" for breakfast. We entered the mouth of the Congo about 10:30. The water changed in color to a yellow similar to that of the James at Richmond, average weather. The volume of water discharged by this mighty river is so great that its effects are felt for four hundred miles in the ocean.

As we approached Banana, we met in the river a steamer loaded down with black stevedores. As the steamer was tying up to us, I had my first sight of Congo negroes in the mass. Most of them were naked except a loin-cloth wrapped around the hips, which with some circled the waist, extending nearly to the knee. A few were wearing their "glad rags"—gaily-colored cotton draped from armpits to ankles, which, however, they carefully removed before they began work. Three white women and four white men, company employes, in their white clothes and helmets were in the midst of the black nakedness, and while the women were not really above average white women in general appearance, they must rank as beauties in that neighborhood. The negroes swarmed over the rail to the lower deck of the Anversville and immediately set to work getting the cargo to be unloaded at Boma out of the hold. The custom officials also came on board, and called for a minute statement of your stuff, for although the Congo is a Belgian Colony, duty must be paid on certain articles, even though already passed by Belgian officials at Antwerp. In addition to the black stevedores and white officials, some fresh African fruit appeared: mangoes, pineapples, avocado pears. The pears served at dinner were very large—from four to six inches in diameter—and were fully ripe. They were not served as a salad as I had seen them served in Mexico, but were cut in half and served like cantaloupes. I treated mine liberally to salt and vinegar, and think I might learn to eat them with composure, but without hilarity, for I believe they are what we call "healthy" fruit; indeed, the taste reminds me continuously of the castor oil which in my childhood occasionally caused unpleasant, mournful scenes between my mother and myself, which sometimes ended with base deception and oil surreptitiously wasted, but more frequently with my nose being held by my mother (to shut out the odor, of course!) and oil thoroughly absorbed into my protesting system.

I have chatted occasionally with a very attractive young woman, who speaks no English, but unusually good French. I thought until to-day that she was French, and was marking up a better average for the French women, but to-day I found out that she is a native Swiss from Lausanne—Protestant Switzerland—and that she is a good Protestant, as is her husband, a forestry engineer, who is to be the head of the forestry division at Stanley Falls in the upper Congo. The Belgian Government send most of their officials as we do our missionaries, for terms of three years and then a furlough of one year, and there is always a large group of them going and coming on these Congo ships. They are divided into three classes: the chief officials of districts, of which there are twelve or fifteen in the Congo; the secondary officials, who are assistants or clerical helpers, and the more distinctly artisan or mechanical class. These distinctions are observed pretty generally, especially by the women, who flock in bunches. There is a very interesting, pleasant set of about twelve on board, who have given me a much better idea of Belgian family life than I have had. They all drink their beer and wine, and dance with each other's wives, and seem to be fairly moral in their own personal actions, but they look with rather a light or indifferent air upon those on the ship who are known to be immoral, and will permit such men to dance with their wives, although the wives will not permit their husbands to dance with the loud women if they know it. For example, the man who was elected Chairman of the Committee on Fetes during the voyage, an Italian, who was openly taking charge of a married woman who was going out to her huband, did not hesitate to go boldly and continuously with the woman, but acted as President and led out in the balls with the wives of the officers, and then daneed with the other woman. The officers of the ship did not exercise any sort of authority over the personal conduct of passengers. Men spent the night in the state-rooms with women, and women eame from the second class into men's state-rooms on my hall, but the officers cared for none of these things. In genuine Latin fashion, they shrugged the shoulders and said, "It is for them. It is their affair. Why should I meddle with them?" I am wondering if the husbands of these women returning will learn what has been the conduct of their wives on board.

We have been sailing up the river for about five hours, and it has gotten very hot by now—4:30 p.m. We have passed many villages on both sides of the river, Belgian on the north, Portuguese on the south. We are just passing the fort, which has fired a salute in honor, I suppose, of Colonel Olsen, the Commander-in-Chief of the Congo militia, who is standing near me on deck. Boma has ben in full view up the river for some time. It does not look as hot as it is said to be on the hills, but there are some mosquitoes in the valley. Dr. Stexrud, the Presbyterian doctor, has received some mail sent December 18, which intimated the steamer Lapsley might not come to Kinshasha owing to sickness of some of the missionaries, and also urging him to hasten his movements. He investigated, and found that the French steamer would leave at 6:15 in the morning, so we packed our stuff and had it put on the steamer that night. As soon as the ship landed, I went ashore and took a walk. I met Messrs. Cobb, Stoddert and Williams of the Christian Missionary Alliance, founded by Simpson. He told me the head of their movement now is Paul Rader, of the Moody Bible Institute, who is the son of Dr. P. L. Rader, former editor of The Pacific Advocate, who died several years ago. Mr. Williams stated that Rader "now had found the Lord. You know he used to be a Methodist, the son of a bishop." I did not reply to his reflections upon the Methodists, but meekly denied the accuracy of the ecclesiastical history, as Rader was not elected bishop; he was the brother of Perry S. Rader, a lawyer of our Missouri Conference. He was fairly gracious, however, in his action, bringing me a copy of the Findings of the Conference of the Congo Missionaries, which was held at Bolenge, a station of the Disciples of Christ between Stanley Pool (Kinshasha) and Stanleyville. I found my stewards and told them I was leaving in the morning, and having tipped them, they made a wish for the rest of the party lest they might forget them.

January 8, 1922. We were called at 4 a.m. by the night watchman of the Anversville. Tea had been provided and bread and butter, but the dining room was so hot and stuffy that none partook to any great extent. The tips are small in this section. The franc is eight cents, and it is a good tip for a native carrying baggage half a mile. As the voyage out was eighteen days, I thought the tip to the table steward should be equal to that on the North Atlantic ship—seven days—so I gave Felix Jacobs, my able steward, sixty frans, about $5; to Henri, my cabin steward, fifty francs; to the bath steward, a very clever boy, ten francs; to the lounge steward, ten francs; to the deck steward, fifteen francs. I had given all of them but the bath steward five francs each on Christmas morning, and had secured their general good will by that act. Felix Jacobs speaks English, French, German and Spanish, and was employed by the English secret service men during the war.

We left the ship at 5:10. Just before we left, a great swarm of gnats came out from the shore, attracted by the electric light which was right at the gang-plank. They were so thick that you could not open your mouth without swallowing them, and deep breathing through the nostrils was impossible. We rushed through them as best we could, but I found them in my pockets and hair hours afterward. We went down the road in the starlight, and found the boat waiting to take us to the ship—Saint Vincent of Havre, a tramp freight steamer of 4,500 tons. The captain was very pleasant and tried to make us comfortable. We had few chairs on the upper deck, so after awhile, when we were steaming up the river, I went down to the cabin, opened up the windows, which were tightly closed, stretched out on a comfortable sofa, and slept two hours. Mrs. Stexrud came down and said the children were crying and hungry, so I took the cheese sandwich I had brought up from the table the day before, plus the orange and some nut candy left from Lura's New York present, and this quieted them.

We reached Matadi about 11:15, and because the officer said we could not go ashore until we had cleared the customs, which would not be until morning, Dr. Stexrud said we would have to stay. I said that I was going ashore to the hotel and get something to eat and a room. The officer agreed that would be all right if we left our baggage. I asked him if the suitcase for the baby and children could not be taken, and he agreed to that. I carried along my portfolio, first putting in it my toilet case, night-shirt and the rest of my Christmas candy. The black soldier on the pier wanted to be important, but he could not find any liquor or tobacco, and not enough candy to tax.

I had not suffered with the heat before, but to walk from the steamer to the hotel at noon, with my kodak and portfolio, was painfully hot, especially when the sun hit me between the shoulder blades. But we reached there immediately after dinner, and upon insistence secured rooms. Likewise, after much protesting, we secured some lunch. I was fortunate to get a room by myself, so that I could undress and thoroughly relax for awhile. There was a fine breeze, and while the sun was hot, it was far more comfortable than I expected. About 4:30 I heard a bell ringing across the hill, and, looking out, finally saw a little belfry where I located the sound. I dressed quickly and proceeded to find the chapel, but I could not go by a staight line, as there were wire fences in the way.

When I arrived I found a plain wooden chapel similar to many negro churches in the South, thirty negroes of varying ages from seventy to two, all exeept some boys on the baek bench much better dressed than average country negroes. They had an organ, and used a sort of combination Church of England, non-conformist service in English. The preacher of the evening was an English Baptist, Rev. J. H. Starte. He preached a good sermon on "In all thy ways acknowledge Him and He will direct thy paths." I thought much of it was above the heads of the negroes, but they listened very well, and he got in some good shots at the close. I sang out of the book with an old negro man, who must have been a "crack singer" in his day. He knew the words and the tunes of some rather unusual hymns to us. I shook hands with many of the negroes, and all of them said they came from the Gold Coast, where they speak English. Mrs. Starte asked me if I would go out to their Mission Station, and I gladly accepted the invitation, and walked with her and Mr. Starte to the Mission, about three-quarters of a mile. It is beautifully located on a high hill at a bend in the river, with the town of Matadi in full view on the right and a long reach of the river on the left, with hills directly in front across the river. The buildings, which are of native stone, are roomy and comfortable, with wide verandas, with shutters that can be opened or closed as the sun may require. The church is directly behind on the hill, and is built as I have built in Mexico for a school chapel. There are houses for two missionaries (they have three at the Station, but one is on furlough all the time), and a large, comfortable Rest House for workers passing through. This is a wise provision, for Matadi is the port of entry for most of the missionaries, and the tax on the local missionaries would be too great to care for them. The Rest House furnishes lodging and meals at a fair rate. I went back to what we would call the Quarters, where I found about thirty negro men and boys in various stages of nudity; some of them preparing their evening meal. It is probably about as clean as they can get them to keep it, but I should try for something better.

They insisted on my staying to supper, and although I should probably have gotten more heavy food at the hotel, it would not have been nearly as appetizing. The soup was peanut (cream), and I was much pleased with it. The bread is not quite as white or as light in weight as ours, but was fair. They use fermented rice instead of yeast. The meat was chicken and tongue, cold, both well cooked; the dessert was a compote of mangoes, figs, apples and very good custard; then Norwegian cheese and fruit. After supper they walked back with me to the hotel. Mr. Starte was out alone at first. The second time he came out alone, but she followed in a few months, and they were married at the British Consulate. The Mission is one of the British Baptist Congo Missions, which is one of the strongest in the Congo. They told me, however, that the Baptists in England were now nearly all believers in open communion, that the close communion people had not been able to hold the younger generation. Will the Southern Baptists ever learn in their close communion teaching they are as narrow and intolerant as the Roman Catholics, and as far removed from the Spirit of the Master? He thought that the educational work was necessary to make the evangelistic work more effective. He said that they had settled the polygamy question on the following basis: When a man wanted to join the church, who had married his wives before he had heard the Christian standard, he was permitted to do so and to retain the wives he had, if they wanted to stay with him, but he could not marry other wives unless his wives died. A man who had married other wives after he had become acquainted with the Christian standard could not be received as long as he had two wives. He must try to find an acceptable husband for the wife he had last married, or she must consent freely to give up all claim to him, otherwise, while he could attend the church and he thought well of, he could not become a member. He further agreed that there was no special hardship to the woman in taking another husband, as she had been allowed no choice in the first marriage. I was better satisfied with his statement of the case than any I had ever heard. To bed at 10:30.

JACKSON DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Jackson District Conference met in regular session at Harrisville on the Harrisville charge at 9 a.m., June 27, 1922, with the Rev. M. L. Burton, presiding elder, in the chair.

The conference met within the bounds of the first Rural Demonstration Charge in the Mississippi Conference. It was with great pleasure, then, that the members of the conference could witness the operation of the plan set on foot a year and a half ago by the General Board of Missions.

Brother I. H. Sells, the pastor-host, and his people are doing a wonderful work in this charge.

Most of the preachers of the district and a large delegation of laymen and visitors were present.

The different interests of the church were represented as follows: The Orphans' Home, Mrs. Riley; Millsaps College, Dr. A. F. Watkins and Professor J. Reese Lin; The Educational Campaign, Rev. J. M. Morse; The Centenary and Epworth League, Mr. W. D. Hawkins; The Laymen's Movement, Dr. J. M. Sullivan, Conference Lay Leader.

The preaching was done by the following: Rev. E. K. Means, Rev. W. J. Ferguson, Rev. W. J. Dawson, and Rev. John L. Ferguson, Jr.

Two young men were licensed to preach: John Ford Gibson, and Vernon E. Chalfant.

The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: J. A. Lindsay, J. M. Bush, C. S. Bennett, O. H. Wingfield, H. O. Middleton, W. H. Bradley, I. O. Brown, O. N. Sebren. Alternates: Dr. J. T. B. Berry, G. L. Harrell.

The following Licensing Committee was appointed: Rev. E. K. Means, Rev. H. F. Tolle, Rev. F. L. Applewhite, Rev. J. L. Ferguson, Jr., Rev. O. H. Wingfield, Dr. J. M. Sullivan. Rev. O. H. Wingfield was elected District Lay Leader.

Bolton was selected for the meeting place of the next conference.

The conference was an unusually good one. The presiding elder is a master in the work. No interest is allowed to suffer because of haste, yet he pushes forward in such manner that the entire business of the conference was finished within two days.

Dinner was served on the ground both days.

G. L. HARRELL, Secretary.

VACATION AND ELSE.

By Rev. Carroll Varner.

I believe religiously in a vacation—and not for preachers only, but also for every one. There is no better tonic than to turn your back upon your work and shut up the home for a few days or weeks, as circumstances will permit, and hie away to new and different surroundings and let down the tension and forget everything behind. Would that every housewife and mother particularly, could take a real vacation amid new surroundings at least once every year!

My official board got together sometime back and told me to lay off and go away for five or six weeks and not to show my face in West Point during that time. To be sure I jumped at the chance, and getting out my Maxwell—Brother Wilson, not knowing any better, prefers a Ford—my family and I set out for Bristol, Tenn.-Virginia, and the mountains. And I soon found we were not the only ones out thus on pleasure bent; for we passed many autos on the trip, filled with people and camping outfits, going in every direction on vacation trips. It is surprising that with all the cars we have in this country and the long-time agitation for good roads, we should have so few suitable roads for autos. We crossed Alabama, Georgia, and went diagonally across Tennessee, yet in much of that great distance the roads were not suitable for wagons even, much less autos. They are being built, but slowly. But we made the trip safely and got to see far more beautiful scenery and fine farms than we could ever have seen from the windows of a train. One strikes the mountains down in Georgia some distance below Chattanooga, and from then on he is rarely out of sight of them, and all the while they rise higher and higher.

At the present I am away up here in the beautiful and far-famed Southwest Virginia country—that country of which one editor I know never tires of writing. And well he might sing its praises, for it has the happy combination of magnificent scenery, high altitude, and splendid farms such as would be hard to find this side of Southern California. These lofty hills, and even the mountain sides far up in many instances, are either covered with corn and wheat or carpeted with blue grass and grazed with thousands of fine export cattle. Get on these highways up here and travel in whatever direction you like, and you see beautiful homes and magnificent farms and towering mountains for a background. And what delightful streams! I cannot think of anything much more refreshing than just the sight of these small mountains streams. The water is decidedly cold, clear as crystal, and flowing over a continuous bed of rocks with so much fall as to make them an almost unbroken series of miniature rapids.

Methodism is very strong in this section and we have pretty churches and splendid parsonages all through here. By the way, old Emory and Henry College, of which Dr. Steel likes to write, is just now without a president. Dr. Stewart French resigned the presidency after he came back from the General Conference, and at this writing they have been unable to secure a suitable man for the place. Dr. French becomes presiding elder of the Knoxville District, in Dr. Perry's place, the latter going to Nashville to take up his duties as one of the Home Mission secretaries. I also understand that Dr. S. D. Long, who was in former years a member of the North Mississippi Conference, is soon to sever his connection with Martha Washington College.

I picked up the current issue of the "Pictorial Review" the other day and found the very first article to be a thought-provoking one by Corra Harris on "Has the World Conquered the Church." It may be she is inclined to be a little too pessimistic over the situation, but one cannot successfully deny all her assertions. She thinks the church to-day has left her first love and become wedded to the world. It will mean much if the ministry will read her charges with open mind and think seriously thereon. She is a brilliant woman and commands a wide hearing; and I believe she is jealous of the true glory of the church. This brings to mind something the author says in that wonderfully popular novel, "If Winter Comes." One of his characters, in a serious conversation with another about the church and its work, says that people do not care to go to church for entertainment, picture shows, etc.—they can get that out in the world, more of it and better—but that they go there hoping to learn of God and that which ministers to the soul's eternal welfare. I believe he is quite right. The church cannot compete with the world in the matter of entertainment; that's not its function. It is here to minister to the souls of men, and in that field it has no competitor. We preachers must never lose sight of that fact, however, great and varied are our duties. I wonder if the world isn't about surfeited with sensual pleasures, anyway, since the war, and if it isn't on the eve of turning to the church for better things? Will we have the message for it when it comes!

Bristol, Tenn.

DO YOU WANT $10?

The Commissioners of our Western Assembly, on August 10, will consider a permanent name for the Assembly or for East Mountain where it is to be located, and Rev. J. R. Abernathy, presiding elder of the Tulsa District, offers a prize of $10 in gold to the person who submits the name that shall be chosen by the Board. If you wish to submit a name in this contest, inclose your suggestion with argument for it in an envelope, and address it to Name Contest, Western Assembly, 221 East Capitol Avenue, Little Rock, Ark., before August 5.

REV. J. H. BROWN.

About five o'clock, April 23, 1922, James Henry Brown passed to his reward, after a lingering illness caused by paralysis. Brother Brown was born in Claiborne County, Alabama, July 22, 1849. He was seventy-two years, seven months, and one day old. He was converted when about eighteen years of age, and first joined the Presbyterian Church, but soon after becamc a member of the Methodist Church and was licensed to preach on Moss Point charge, Seashore District, Mississippi Conference, in 1878, Rev. Charles Caihoun, pastor in charge, and Rev. Mr. Price, presiding elder. He served as a local preacher and colporteur, both in the Mississippi and the North Mississippi Conferences. He was admitted on trial and elected to deacon's orders in the North Mississippi Conferenee, December 2, 1883, under the presideney of Bishop H. N. McTyeire. He was also elected to elder's orders in 1889. He served the following charges in the North Mississippi Conferenee: Marietta, 1884; La Grange, 1885; Hickory Flat, 1886; Panola, 1887; Water Valley, 1888-89-90. He transferred to the Louisiana Conference December, 1890, and was stationed on the Evergreen charge in 1891; Many, 1892; Farmerville, 1893; Plantersville, or Bonita, 1894; Gansvilie, 1895-96-97-98; Gihbsland, 1899; Vernon, 1900; back to Gansville in 1901; Gilbert, 1902. His health failing him, he gave up his work in August and took the supernumerary relation in the Conference. In 1903 he went back on the effective list and was sent to Sibley in 1904. His health failing him again, he took the superannuate relation in the Conference, which relation he sustained until God took him.

No pastor ever served his people more unselfishly and untiringly than did Brother Brown. He was a man who possessed many splendid traits of character. He was loved by all who knew him, and especially by the children. When the Prince of Orange died, it is said, "The children cried in the streets." When Brother Brown died the children with others gathered flowers until they were literally banked on and about his casket. Brother Brown did not have the educational advantages that many have had, yet he lived a big life among those with whom he came in contact. He was cheerful and bright, always more thoughtful of others than of himself. His loyalty to his church was untiring, a constant attendant upon her services, thoughtful of his pastor and his family. There was constant sunshine in his life. He leaves to mourn his loss his devoted wife, three sons, Walter Brown, Jena, La., Reid Brown, Jonesboro, La., John Brown, of Hodge, La., and two daughters: Miss Edna Brown, of Los Angeles, Calf., and Mrs. Bessie Calloway of Jonesboro, La.

IS IT "A BAD DAY FOR IDEALISTS?"

An Amerlean scholar lecturing before one of our colleges recently said that it is. And he went back to the dismal disillusionments and disappointments of the war to fortify his statement. But he is not right. As a matter of fact it is a high day, and a good day, and an inspiring day for the idealist. A dreadful night is past, but a new day dawns. The heart of humanity has been hurt grievously, but a new hope has sprung up. The fields of the world have been shriveled by the breath of the sirocco, but new life breaks forth everywhere.

In the political world the day of the idealist is now. Was there ever a better time to proclaim and to practice the principles uttered, for instance, by those fathers who "brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal?" The seething world needs that sort of teaching this day, and is responding to it.

The conference held last winter in Washington under the guidance of our own President and his counselors, what was it but the lifting up of the torch of the idealist, the proclamation of his high teaching, the sounding of the bugle of a new and better day for humanity and civilization? That was a supreme opportunity for the idealist—the Christian idealist—and he seems to have made much of it. It was not a "bad day" for him, but a great and glorious one.

In the religious world—the world of Christian thought, example, and activity—was there ever a better time than now for the inculcation of the teachings of that greatest of idealists. Jesus Christ, in every corner of the world? The war—how the pessimists delight to hark back to it and make the church responsible for it, and lay at its threshold the shattered fragments of their fiue ideals! But the war has created wider opportunities for the Christian idealist than ever before enticed him. The whole world is his field in a truer sense than it ever was. He has but to keep himself in tune with the Master's Great Commission to behold the fields of the world break forth into fruitage. It is a royal day for the Christian idealist who goes forth in the name and for the sake of the Christ and His cause.

It never was a good day for the man who is an idealist—and nothing more. But for the idealist who is eager, ready and able to put his good ideal into operation, every day has been a good day—and none has been better than to-day. The ideal—if it is worth anything—is worth struggling for, and sacrificing for, and dying for. That is the way in which Jesus measured the vitality of His idealism. He put it to the test, even the test of the cross. And He demanded of His followers that they, too, should meet the test of the cross, for He said that the man who did no deny himself and take up his cross was not worthy of the Fellowship and was, therefore, untrue to the ideal that the Fellowship represented.

To-day, with the recurrence of our chief national anniversary, it may be worth while to give careful thought to the relation of the Christian ideal to our national ideal. It will indeed be "a bad day for idealists" when the teachings of Jesus cease to have a dominant place in their peculiar propaganda; but it will always be a good day for them when that teaching, emphasized and made effective by right example, holds sway in their thinking, program and practice. The idealism of Jesus was incarnated in Him, and found expression in His wonderful declaration: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto myself."—Christian Advocate (N. Y.).

"A FEW SCATTERING REMARKS."

Dear Brother Carley: I want to make a few scattering remarks. First, I want to speak to the tenth question of the quarterly conferenee, "What has been done by the pastor and his assistants to put our Christian literature into all the homes of this charge." I think this is one of the important questions of the quarterly conference: (a) Because our paper should have a large circulation; (b) I think one of the greatest difficultics in the way of the progress of our church is ignorance as to its doctrines and polity. They do not read the papers, hence they are disgruntled and hard to please. I think that an effort to put the papers in every home would be one of the best investments that the pastor and people can make.

Second: "What are we doing for the cause of education?" I believe that every preacher should have a good sermon on Christian Education. This is a great theme and one of our best sermons should be on this theme. We should not discount the public schools and State schools. They are doing great work, but we should speak out for Christian Education and for our colleges. Many people do not distinguish at this point. Some even go so far as to think that church colleges are weak. This is not the case. Being connected up with omnipotence and omniscience is not a sign of weakness. We have in our Conferenco two colleges of which we should be proud.

I am not posing as a worker who "needeth not to be ashamed." I am only telling myself and others that we should do more for these colleges. There is joy in this kind of work. Some years ago I was in Rev. H. N. Brown's charge and he said to me, "There is a young lady in my church who has finished high school and is thinking of going to college." We went around to the home, saw her and her mother, and took them some literature from Mansfield College. She decided to go there and after she graduated her mother thanked me for suggesting Mansfield College for her daughter. And there was "joy that no man knoweth, saving he that receiveth it."

About a year ago Rev. J. L. Lay and I went over with a young man who wanted to enter Centenary. The young man's opportunities for an education had been limited. His finances also were limited, but he felt called to preach and wanted an education. We found Dr. Sexton in his office, told him our business, and discussed it with him. After arranging the financial part, Dr. Sexton put his arm around the boy and said: "You are my boy now. There will be hills to climb, but we will climb them." The young man is making good.

Third: The preachers of the Monroe-Ruston District are in harmony with their people and the outlook is fine for a great year on the district.

Fraternally yours,

K. W. DODSON.

BISHOP CANDLER'S STATEMENT.

In an Associated Press dispatch of several days ago, it was stated that Bishop Candler and other church leaders, had given their endorsement to a plan providing for the use of $1,000,000 of Centenary and Christian Education funds to install radio outfits in Methodist churches throughout the country. It was known in Nashville that Bishop Candler had not endorsed any such proposition, yet, to have an authoritative statement from the senior Bishop, Dr. W. G. Cram, Directing Secretary of the Centenary, wired Bishop Candler for a statement. The Bishop replied at once, giving assurance that he was in no sense responsible. He sent, also, a statement published in the Atlanta Journal the day following the publication of this wild rumor, concerning the purchase of radio outfits for Methodist churches. This statement by the Bishop was in part as follows:

"The Centenary and Educatlonai funds were subscribed in response to very definite appeals for specific and urgent objects. Not one penny of these funds can be, or will be, applied to any other objects whatsoever. The use of them for any other purpose would be a misappropriation of sacred funds, and no such use of them has ever been considered for one moment by any responsible person in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

"I am not sponsoring any radio mission whatsoever, and I doubt the other gentlemen named are sponsoring, or are aiming at launching any such movement.

"For my own part, I do not believe a 'radio mission' of any kind would be useful. It would for a season gratify popular curiosity concerning a scientific novelty; but I cannot believe it would promote piety. But whether my view of the matter be correct or incorrect, it remains that the statements that I have anything to do with 'sponsoring' a 'radio mission' is without the slightest foundation in fact."

A REQUEST FROM SIBERIA.

Rev. J. O. J. Taylor, of our Siberia-Manchuria Mission, writes to Nashville headquarters asking that magazines and picture sections of newspapers be sent to him for use in the reading rooms provided for sailors and soldiers in Vladivostok. He says that there are 400 to 500 soldiers and sailors at all times in this city, and our mission there is serving these men. Plain copies of newspapers are not needed—picture sections and any kind of magazines can be used. He makes the following suggestions: Label the bundle "Newspapers and Magazines," and do not value the packages. Put enough postage on them. Do them up securely, and address, Rev. J. O. J. Taylor, Box 213, Vladivostok, Siberia.

ON LOOKING INTO A VOLUME OF WESLEY'S SERMONS.

By Rev. W. R. Lott.

In the Editor's Preface of Volume 1, Wesley's Sermon, he says, "No apology is needed for this edition of Wesley's Sermons;" so I hardly think there is any need for an apology by a Methodist preacher for giving his impressions on looking into the volume. Is it not required of him to open it, yea more than open it—to keep it open until he has found much truth?

The first time I looked into this volume was when a small boy in our home. It was a book not much used by any member of the family then, but certainly it had been used by some one in the time that had passed, for it was worn by use and was yellow with age. From time to time as the years passed, I would go to the library and take it down; but I do not remember to have been able to get much good from it. However, I noticed this about the sermons, that they were far superior to any I had ever heard preached. So the volume was only merely looked into and not digested.

In later years I sought admission to the Methodist Conference. To my surprise, whom should I meet but my friend, "Wesley's Sermons?" A brand new volume was purchased, the one now before me, and I turned as a candidate on trial to walk slowly into a knowledge of the doctrines of my church. On one occasion while visiting a brother minister, he asked as to my progress in the study of Wesley's Sermons and suggested that we take an hour or so and discuss the ones I had studied, to see if our interpretations were the same. That was a good suggestion, but the time was never convenient for that discussion. As I recall now, the impression made on my mind by the first study of the several sermons which I studied preparatory to being licensed was one of wonder and that on only one account—how could any preacher quote so much Scripture in his sermons. The doctrines preached were not clear to my mind then as they are to-day; as a result, I had to read them over and over to grasp the wonderful truths in them.

The first year of the Conference found me taking Wesley's Sermons for morning and evening mental and spiritual food. No light diet, that. It was standard and would stand one in hand well in a revival meeting or in a test of mental equipment. Where will you find anything better on the "Sermon in the Mount?" I challenge any man to find a more heart-searching discussion on vital Christianity than is to be found in these wonderful sermons. As I studied them during the year, they furnished much good preaching material for myself and, from what I heard, for others too. I secured the services of a young preacher in a meeting that first year and the way he explained and exhorted on Wesley's outlines was deserving of real praise. It is a good way to learn them.

The second year finished the compulsory study of these doctrinal standards. They were a source of a great deal of pleasure to me during the second year of study, for I had in some way grasped the great doctrines he preached. It was with a feeling of regret that I was forced to turn my attention to other studies which were vital, too.

These volumes are still on my book shelves, but they are often taken down to be read. In this day when there is so much being written which, if read continuously, might throw a Christian away from the vital doctrines as taught by our church, it is a safeguard to look into a volume of Wesley's Sermons. The very essence of experimental Christianity is taught. Here the text of the Scripture is exalted to its proper place. Such exhortation we seldom hear. A burning passion to make people see the truth as the Scriptures revealed it and as experience testified is written on every page. Next to the Bible, give me Wesley's Sermons for real spiritual food.

NOTES.

By George E. Bass.

This is an age in which the church is being dragged into far too many enterprises for which it has received no commission from the Master. The church has too great a task to perform for it to be crowded out by other things. And in point of importance its work is second to none. If it sticks to soul saving and works profitably in that field, it has all that it can do and more. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few." It hasn't time for things that can be done well by other agencies, though it does need to see that these agencies do not betray their trusts to the hurt of the people. Social reforms are all right so far as they go; but evidently God did not intend to save the world by this method or He would not have sacrificed His only begotten Son upon the cross.

Every human being receive so many blessings from God that he ought never to complain if he has to endure some misfortunes in the course of a long lifetime. "Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil?" Do we serve God merely for what we get out of Him? Or can we say with Job, "Though He slay me, yet will I trust Him?"

Constantine the Great said that if he caught a bishop in the act of adultery, he would not testify against him because it might hurt the church. All the Constantines are not dead yet. If the church has to be protected by shielding evil men, it will not be blessed by God.

Many people fall out with God because He does not do to suit them. How foolish they are! (Isaiah Chapter 55, Verse 8) "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord." They need to conform to God's ideas instead of trying to make Him conform to theirs.

If a church is as spiritual as it ought to be, it will not meddle in politics or boost politicians, because it will have more important things to concern itself about.

Job says: "Great men are not always wise." History proves his statement to be true. It also follows that the judgments of good men are not always sound, and for that reason that they are not infallible. A good man is as apt to make a mistake as a bad man, but he means to do right always and as soon as he discovers his error he will quickly correct it. The wicked man will often be governed by expediency in the matter of setting things right.

There are some people who are negative in their attitude toward questions that come up in the church for settlement. There is positively no middle ground when principles are at stake. Christ said, "He that is not with me is against me." Those who do not speak out strongly for the right, regardless of consequences, may expect to be considered on the wrong side. Those who are unwilling to make a personal sacrifice for a righteous cause can not be said to have it very much upon their hearts. In Revelation God said of the church of the Laodiceans, which was neither hot or cold, that He would spue it out of His mouth and that He would it were hot or cold. This shows God's opinion concerning those who are too faint-hearted to stand up for what they know to be right or who are too weak to choose a side and stick to it.

DIGGING FOR GOLD IN JAPAN.

By R. S. Stewart, Jr.

Letter VI.

The Japan Inland Sea challenges the world for the prize of scenic beauty. Surely God made this land for His own glory!

A trip by steamboat from Kobe through the Inland Sea for about thirty hours will take you to the most interior sections of our mission work. The sea is usually only a few miles wide, with mountain ranges and peaks sheltering either side. It is amazing to see the manner in which the Japanese have cultivated these mountains. Orange groves are terraced along the steep ascents and their golden fruit tempts the passenger on the steamboat. Fields of mulberry trees for the silk worm, and plots of rice find a resting place in locations that an American farmer would surrender to the wild goats. Along the shores every few miles, and sometimes appearing almost to be holding hands with each other, are picturesque villages of from one thousand to ten thousand population. Many of these villages are busy in the manufacture of silk and cotton products. They are also supply stations for hundreds of other hamlets and villages back in the mountains.

This village and interior population of Japan is reckoned as being thirty-seven millions. Missionary evangelism has not yet been able to deal with this great mass. So far our efforts have been about taken up among the twenty millions who live in the larger centers. The country problem confronts us in all of its appalling immensity. Think of a great Empire of thirty-seven millions of people who are not on the missionary map of the world. The country population of Japan constitutes almost that situation.

There are, however, chapels and preaching places in an occasional village and the success of the work abundantly justifies the undertaking. Yawatahama is one of these places. It is a town of 10,000 people and if they could commercialize the beauty of their situation and scenery, they would be fabulously rich. We have a church of some fifty or more members here, which represent the effort of faithful men since the days of Dr. J. W. Lambuth. We spent three days with these people and a few were baptized.

About five miles distant from Yawatahama is another village only a little smaller where we also spent three days. We made the trip in an automobile which plies regularly between the two towns. The car was an Overland, five passenger, but when we got ready to start I counted fifteen adults aboard. When I ventured to suggest to the chauffeur that we were rather heavily loaded, he assured me that he was carrying two passengers less than his capacity. We sped away up a mountain pass and arrived without mishap. Our trip was happier, however, from the fact that it was made in the night and we consequently could not see the precipices which were skirted by our narrow road. I made the trip later on foot and was able to appreciate our previous exploit.

A small chapel, packed with people, was waiting for us in this village. God seemed to speak very clearly to some of them and several openly accepted our proposition for Christ. After services, my helper and I were in our room at the hotel hastening to bed when ten young men walked in on us. We then had another hour of preaching and prayer and two of them were clear in their statement that they had received Christ. Before we finished breakfast the next morning another group of Christians and enquirers came to see us. It was refreshing to have the privilege of giving a definite answer to these enquirers about the age-old questions of God and salvation. There were a number who professed faith during these days. And as I was leaving the chapel on the last night I heard some one running up behind me. I turned to see a young man by my side. He said, "Sir, I want to tell you that from this night I have become a Christian." This was the last testimony I heard in this village. I shall not forget the happy faces of the little group of Christians who are fighting for Christ in this distant spot on the Inland Sea.

We must remember to be kind by the way, in the midst of our hurried comings and goings, or we shall miss the best opportunities for helpfulness.—Selected.

The Home Circle

HIS MOTHER'S FAITH.

By Florence Jones Hadley.

They said he would never amount to much,
But his mother said he would;
That he never could set the river on fire,
But his mother said he could.

They said of beauty he had not a trace,
But his mother vowed he had;
When they talked of future men of state,
She lovingly looked at her lad.

And it happened, as months and years went by,
This lad who was awkward and dull and shy,
Who never could set the river on fire,
Attained the goal of her heart's desire,
And he gave glad thanks, with eyes that were dim,
Because of his mother's faith in him.

NORA'S HASH.

Nora had applied for the position of cook. She was big and honest and wholesome lookin', and when we heard her tell how she had lost her husband and children in an epidemic we were ready to engage her at once. Still we asked a question or two.

"Are you a good cook, Nora?"

"I'm not sich an iligant cook whin it comes to the fancy dishes, but for plain, ivery day cooking I can git along." Then her Irish blue eyes twinkled. "Whin I was first married me mon says to me, 'Nora, me girl, it's a happy change I'm a goin' to have from the old boardin' house, and it's home cooking I'm after needin'. Only one thing, Nora; promise me on yer life ye won't feed me hash. I'm tired of hash, and I'm not carin' to see iny the rest of me born days.'"

Nora pronounced "hash" with the richest Irish brogue.

"'Yer right, Jimmy, me love,' says I. 'On me word ye'll nlver see hash in our home!'

"Well, the very first day we had a piece of a fine bit of shteak lift, bein' only the two of us, and I shtudied and I shtudied. Thin I made a nice stew of the scraps with a bit of onion and potato and gravy. Jimmy looked at it with both his sharp eyes, and thin he looked at me. 'Nora,' says he, 'ye promised me ye wouldn't be makin' hash.' 'Sure, and it's me word that's not broken,' says I, laughin'; 'that's not hash; that's Irish stew. Taste it for yerself.' Well, Jimmy helped himself till it was all gone. 'That's the bist meal I've been atin' for a month of Sundays,' says he. 'Nora, ye may be makin' Irish stew iny time!'

"After a spell I found some more scraps—and me not wastin' a crumb. So I fixed up the very nicest dish I knew. 'Nora,' says me mon, 'Nora, what's in that dish? It's suspicious, it is. Isn't that baked hash?'

"'Ah, Jimmy, me lad, be afther tastin' it for yerself,' I says. 'Didn't I promise ye I wouldn't make hash? That's not hash; it's toad-in-the-hole!'

"Well, there wasn't a mite of trouble about Jimmy's atin' at all, me havin' a bite, too, of course. Thin Jimmy wetted his lips, and he says, says he, 'Nora, toad-in-the-hole's good atin' iny day in the wake! But don't make hash!'

"He was a fine lad, was Jimmy, and who would have thought in tin years he'd be gone, and the dear childer and I left alone, alone."

The merry twinkle vanished in a soft mist in Nora's bright eyes, and we were all silent for a few minutes. Then with a brave sigh she shook off the gloom, and the generous mouth broadened into a laugh, even before the moisture was gone from the twinkling eyes.

"No," she said, "I niver broke me promise to Jimmy. I nlver gave him hash to his dyin' day. The nixt time I put me scraps on the table he had that same suspicious look. 'Now, Nora, this be hash for sure!'

"'And why would I be tillin' ye a lie, Jimmy? Just sample it for yerself, Jimmy,' says I. 'That's the dish the French men cooks make in all the fine, shwell hotels, me mon! That's French rag-out!'"

Though we doubted whether a French chef would have recognized the name as Nora pronounced it, we were firmly convinced that she knew the art of making excellent rag-out. She had stopped to laugh, but she was speaking again.

"Whin Jimmy looked into that impty dish, 'Nora,' says he, 'what for do people make hash whin there are so many iligant concoctions instid, and French rag-out the top of the heap?'

"Well, he niver pried into me cookin' ag'in, and I niver wasted a scrap of mate; but I niver broke me word. Jimmy niver had to ate hash!"—Youth's Companion.

A TRUE TALE OF AN ENGLISH CAT.

By S. Gertrude Ford.

This incident really happened in England only a day or two previous to the time of writing. The English Royal Humane Society ought to give the furry heroine its famous medal for life-saving, for she saved three lives at once by her prompt action and her readiness of resource in a terrible emergency.

It happened this way. One day an Englishman rose early to go to business and—being a good husband and knowing his wife was without help—lit the fire for her before setting out. It was an old-fashioned open grate, with an oven attached, not a bit like the typical American stove; and in this oven was a lot of oiled wood brought in from the "works" near by for kindling. And the wood caught fire!

Down-stairs there was nobody—no human being at least—to see what had happened. Up-stairs there were the mother and her boy and girl, Herbert and Doris, the boy a youth of seventeen and his sister one year older—all fast asleep.

Suddenly Herbert was awakened by "Nippy," the pet cat of the family, jumping on his bed and licking his face all over. He woke to find the room full of smoke; the house, evidently, on fire! But before he could take action—before he could even attempt to rouse his mother and Doris in the next room—Nippy had forestalled him. Regardless of the danger to herself, she bounded to the dividing door, which opened outwards, and actually succeeded in pulling it open with her paw, jumping on the mother's bed afterwards and rousing her as she had roused the boy. The girl was speedily wakened in her turn, and within a few minutes all three had managed to make their escape, not forgetting, you may be sure, to take the faithful Nippy with them.

When they reached the open air, the cat, which had done such a wonderful work for them all, sank down, with the burning house behind her, and collapsed completely. After such a splendid deed on the part of an animal, who will say that our dumb friends are not worthy of the best we can do for them? Worthy, above all, of the defense of their helplessness from those who would treat them cruelly? To call such men "brutes" is to insult the brutes. The case of Nippy proves that cats, as well as dogs, are friends to the human race.—Our Dumb Animals.

THE LITERARY DIGEST POLL ON THE PROHIBITION QUESTION.

The Literary Digest is conducting a nation-wide poll on the prohibition question, having sent out ten million post card ballots upon which these questions appear: "1. Do you favor the continuance and strict enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment and Volstead Law? 2. Do you favor a modification of the Volstead Law to permit light wines and beers? 3. Do you favor a repeal of the Prohibition Amendment?" These questions are to be answered simply by a cross in a square opposite the policy favored, and are not to be signed. No obligation of any kind is incurred in filling out the ballot.

In the Digest for July 15, the first report is made of the ballots that have been returned. Comparatively few have been tabulated thus far, but it is interesting to note the sentiment as developed. Remembering that only a few votes had been counted when this tabulation was made, and taking into account the fact that many of those votes were from the great cities, where prohibition has its hardest fight, it is not discouraging to observe that the preponderance of opinion seems to be in favor of a modification of the Volstead Law that will permit light wines and beers. This is still less discouraging when we remember that those who are opposed to a strict enforcement of the law are altogether likely to take quick advantage of any opportunity to let their views be known, with the hope of creating sentiment in their favor, while those who are strong believers in the law are likely to be slow in recording their votes—as is so often the case when moral issues are at stake.

There can be no doubt that the result of this vote by the Literary Digest will have an appreciable effect on public opinion and possibly on Congressional action; and we earnestly urge every friend of prohibition in Louisiana and Mississippi into whose hands one of these votes has come, to lose no time in putting the cross opposite Question 1, in order that the total in favor of prohibition may be rapidly increased. Of course this vote is not to determine the question as to whether we shall have prohibition or not—that is already settled by the Constitution—but it may have something to do with a modification of the Volstead Law. The friends of prohibition and law enforcement must not take it for granted that the victory has been completely won—much yet remains to be done. Eternal vigilance must be exercised in dealing with the wet propagandists.

DEATH OF MRS. W. M. WILLIAMS.

It is with very great sorrow that we record the death of Mrs. W. M. Williams, wife of our pastor at Purvis, Miss., on Sunday morning, July 9. She had been sick for several months, growing steadily worse until the end came. A short service was held in the church at Purvis on Monday morning, after which the body was carried to Mt. Olive, Miss., for interment. The service at Purvis was conducted by Rev. J. T. Leggett, assisted by Rev. W. W. Graves, Rev. J. E. Williams, Rev. J. M. Corley, and Rev. S. C. Moody. The burial service at Mt. Olive was conducted by Dr. A. F. Watkins and Rev. M. L. Burton, assisted by Rev. J. L. Greenway, Rev. J. M. Lewis, Rev. O. S. Lewis, Rev. B. F. Lewis, Rev. L. F. Alford, and Rev. A. S. Byrd.

Sister Williams was a most lovable Christian character. We knew her in the home, where we have enjoyed unstinted hospitality and where we were cheered beyond measure by her cheerful and happy disposition. How hard it is for us to realize that such a friend is gone! She died in great peace, as was to be expected, and left comforting messages for her loved ones, especially her son in China and her daughter in Africa. Their homecoming next fall will be a sad one—yet they will know where to find her at the end of another journey which we must all make sooner or later. Our deepest sympathy goes out to the bereaved husband and the sorrowing children.

We hope to have a suitable memoir for publication in due time.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Sunday school of First Methodist Church, Laurel, Miss., is making a fine record this summer. The attendance has been averaging over 300 recently.

Rev. J. F. Waltman, of Elizabeth, La., is diligently circulating the "Methodist Armor," having recently put out thirty of them. In his words, "They are doing the work."

Rev. James H. Moore, our pastor at Picayune, Miss., expects to spend the month of August visiting his old home, for the first time in eight years, and in visiting his wife's home. His pulpit will be filled by various brethren during his absence.

Mrs. H. N. Brown, wife of the pastor of Parker Memorial Church, this city, will leave this week for a visit to her parents, at Napa, Calif. She will be accompanied by her daughter Helen. Brother Brown will join them the latter part of August.

Rev. C. D. Atkinson, Sunday School Field Secretary of the Louisiana Conference, and Miss Caroline Hess, Elementary Superintendent, accompanied by a part of eight, left for Junaluska, N. C., on July 11, to attend the meeting of Sunday school workers.

Rev. R. A. Bozeman, Pleasant Hill, La., requests us to say that he has an open date for the fifth Sunday of this month, which he would be pleased to give some of the brethren. He has just closed a good meeting at Manning, Texas, and is now engabed in a meeting at Longstreet, La.

Rev. C. C. Wier, pastor of the Algiers Methodist Church, was invited to address the striking railroad shopmen in Algiers on Saturday of last week. The request of the shopmen was that he give them a message from the Scriptures. Brother Wier is held in high esteem by his parishioners across the river.

Rev. J. H. Bell, Field Secretary of the Board of Finance of the North Mississippi Conference, presented his cause at the First Methodist Church, Greenville, Miss., on Sunday morning, July 2. About $4000 was pledged for the superannuates, $100 being in cash, with other cards to be heard from.

Rev. James M. Smith, Mississippi Conference evangelist, requests us to say that, on account of a change of date for a meeting, he has the first Sunday in August and the week following open, and that he would be glad to give that time to any brother who can use him. He also has two weeks in November that he can give some one. Brother Smith's address is Poplar Springs Drive, Meridian, Miss.

The following, taken from the Baltimore Southern Methodist of July 13, will be of interest to our readers: "Bishop John C. Kilgo came to Baltimore Saturday morning, July 8, spent Sunday at Dr. Kelly's Sanatorium, where he took the radium treatment, and returned to his home in Charlotte, N. C., on Monday. He was accompanied by his son. Bishop Kilgo is reported to be much improved."

Rev. H. M. Ellis, presiding elder of the Brookhaven District, Mississippi Conference, accompanied by his sons, Hicks, Jr., and John, made the trip to Cincinnati, Ohio—986 miles—in his Buick car in four days and a half. Mrs. Ellis had preceded them by train. They are visiting their youngest daughter, Mrs. Harry C. King. On July 12 they left in the Buick for Niagara Falls, which will complete a trip across Uncle Sam's "main patch."

We take the following from the Big Brother, of Greenville, Miss.: "The pastor and his wife were in Memphis for three days the past week attending a reunion of the family. The four brothers and their wives had a wonderful time together. Like the sons of Job, we feasted together in the eldest brother's house, but did not have the same calamity to befall us that overtook them. Our spirits were refreshed and we set our hands to the tasks before us with renewed energy and purpose."

Rev. J. B. Randolph, presiding elder of the Corinth District, North Mississippi Conference, has recently announced a few changes in quarterly conference dates, which appear in his round as published this week. The attention of all concerned is directed to these changes. Brother Randolph gives a fine account of the District Standard Teacher Training School, held at New Albany, July 3-8. There was an enrollment of 105, and 68 credits were given. All the work of the district is moving along nicely.

We take the liberty of quoting these words from a personal letter recently received from Brother F. H. Murphy, of Ridgeland, Miss.: "I am in my 73d year. My father was a subscriber to the Christian Advocate, and I have been reading it more or less ever since I was old enough to read a periodical of any kind. I may have a little more time ahead of me, and I shall continue to read the Advocate. I guess I have worn out more Bibles than any other one man. The Lord has been very gracious to me and caused me to live with a glad heart. I cease not to thank Him." The clear-cut testimony of a devout Christian is worth a great deal in days like these.

Rev. J. E. Cunningham, our pastor at Aberdeen, Miss., has arranged for a very splendid series of services during the period of July 16-August 13, consisting of lectures on Sunday evening by the presidents of some of the leading colleges of Mississippi. On last Sunday evening, Chancellor J. N. Powers, of the University of Mississippi, spoke. Other addresses are as follows: July 23, Dr. A. F. Watkins, president of Millsaps College; July 30, Dr. J. R. Countiss, president of Grenada College; August 6, Dr. D. C. Hull, president of the Mississippi A. and M. College; August 13, Dr. J. C. Fant, president of the Mississippi State College for Women. We cannot imagine a series of lectures which is likely to prove of more value to the church, especially the young people, than these addresses by eminent educators. A special feature of these meetings will be music by a choir of forty male voices.

Bishop W. B. Beauchamp sailed for his new field of labor in Europe on July 4. He will make his home at Brussels, Belgium.

Dr. George R. Stuart will be one of the speakers at the Winona Lake Bible Conference this year. William Jennings Bryan will be another speaker.

Dr. W. E. Arnold, the efficelnt and brotherly editor of the Central Methodist, has announced that he will retire from that position at the expiralon of his term, August 31.

Mrs. I. W. Cooper will not teach classes at Whitworth College hereafter, but will have charge of the courses of study. She is pre-eminently qualified for this important work.

We learn from the Nashville Christian Advocate that Dr. M. N. Waldrip has accepted for the present the pastorate of the Community Church (non-denominational) at Ridgetop, Tenn.

The record of prayer meeting attendance for the month of June as published in the Advocate shows that Lafayette, La., Rev. Leon I. McCain, pastor, led. This is a fine showing for that fine church.

The Men's Bible Class of Trinity Methodist Church, Ruston, La., has secured the use of the theater for its meetings. Thirty-nine were present the first time in the new meeting place.

Rev. A. Inman Townsley, formerly of the Louisiana Conference, but now pastor at Columbus, Texas, is engaged in a great open-air revival meeting at Eagle Lake, Texas. The Eagle Lake Headlight devotes much space to an account of the meeting.

We understand that the Commission appointed by the recent General Conference to meet with a Commission from the United Brethren to consider unification of the two churches, met on July 13 in Columbus, Ohio. We have seen no report of the outcome of the meeting.

Rev. W. H. Lewis, our pastor at Brookhaven, Miss., is the father of three splendid daughters, all of them graduates of Whitworth College. Two of them, Misses Alice and Josephine, will teach in Hiwassee College next session. Hiwassee is a Junior College in Tennessee.

The Fondren Lectures, delivered by Bishop John M. Moore before the faculty and students of Southern Methodist University, have now been brought out in book form by the George H. Doran Company, of New York. The general theme of the lectures is, "Making the World Christian."

Rev. L. W. Cain, our pastor at Franklinton, La., began a meeting at Franklinton last Sunday, in which he is being assisted by Rev. E. H. Cunningham, of Okolona, Miss., and Rev. J. B. Grambling, of Shreveport, La., who will have charge of the music and the services for the young people. Brother Cain will assist our pastor at Tylertown, Miss., in a meeting to begin on the fifth Sunday of this month.

Bishop Ainsworth has lately dedicated a new church at Kissimmee, Florida, and laid cornerstones for new church buildings in Apopka, Auburndale, and Live Oak in the same State. He has also recently been making a trip through Mississippi, preaching in Corinth, Sardis, Sledge, and Pope—dedicating churches at the last two places. He also dedicated our new church at Richland, Georgia, on a recent Sunday.

We regre to learn that Rev. H. W. Bowman, our pastor at Dubach, La., is in ill health. He is spending a vacation at Pelican, La., his pulpit being filled during his absence by Rev. C. K. Smith, assistant to the pastor of Trinity Methodist Church, Ruston, La.

Miss Lois Cooper, daughter of Dr. I. W. Cooper, president of Whitworth College, will sail for China on September 7, where she goes to teach piano in the McTyeire School for Girls. Few missionary teachers are better prepared for their work than is Miss Cooper. She holds three degrees, and has been under leading teachers in Whitworth, Cincinnati, Chicago, Baltimore, and the University of Wisconsin. Since childhood she has dreamed of China. Her going will be a great loss to Whitworth. This great school for girls is rich in her missionaries, having representatives in Brazil, Cuba, and China. Thousands of college girls love Miss Cooper and will follow her with their prayers in her new field.

We have received the following note from Rev. W. D. Bass, of Corinth, Miss.: "Am just home for rest; have recently held great tent meetings with Revs. A. W. O'Bryant and M. W. Porter, of the Richton and the Avera charges in the Mississippi Conference; about 200 additions to the different churches. We had the greatest meeting in the history of the town of Richton. His circuit will easily pay a $3600 salary another year. A genuine revival develops a charge both spiritually and financially. Both pastors are much loved by their people. The fourth Sunday of this month I shall begin with Brother Moore and his good people at Morton, Miss. Owing to some changes in my plans, I have two open dates for tent meetings. I desire to place them where there are real opportunities for great meetings, for which pastor and people will always be grateful."

A CORRECTION.

In making mention last week of a very fine meeting, in which Rev. A. J. Coburn was assisted by Rev. L. W. Cain, by some strange lapse of memory we spoke of the meeting as being held at Ponchatoula, La., when, as a matter of fact, it was held at Kentwood, La. The error was altogether our own, and we beg the pardon of all concerned.

PRAYER MEETING ATTENDANCE.

We have received the following reports of prayer meeting attendance last week: Algiers, C. C. Wier, pastor, 63; Lafayette, Leon I. McCain, pastor, 81; Ruston, N. E. Joyner, pastor, 25 (bad weather).

McNair, Miss., M. L. McCormick, pastor, 22.

"RESTED UP."

"Have you rested up since the General Conference," inquired a friend of Bishop W. F. McMurry on his fifty-eighth birthday, June 29.

"Rested?" replied the Bishop, "I have preached the commencement sermons at Central College, Fayette, Mo., and at Wofford College, Spartanburg, S. C.; attended a meeting of a College Board lasting two days; attended a meeting of the Commission on the Methodist Foundation at Columbia, Mo.; attended a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Board of Finance, St. Louis, Mo.; attended three Executive Committee meetings of the Board of Church Extension at Louisville, Ky.; attended one meeting of the Executive Committee of the Centenary Commission, Nashville, Tenn.; attended one meeting of the College of Bishops lasting two days in Atlanta, Ga.; delivered four addresses and sermons at the Summer School of Theology in Birmingham, Ala.; attended one meeting of the Building Committee of the Board of Missions, Nashville, Tenn.; attended one meeting of the Board of Apportionment for Bishop Denny in Nashville, Tenn.; preached and raised a church debt at Messick Memorial Church, Louisville, Ky.; attended a two days' meeting of the presiding elders of the Missouri Conference at Moberly, Mo.; spent three days in Kansas City, Mo., holding conferences and preaching; spent one day in Chicago on church business; spent five days in St. Louis, Mo., at my desk in the Security Building and conferring with brethren; attended one meeting of the Joint Committee on Educational Centers in Nashville, Tenn.; have read a few new books and written several hundred letters. These things, together with some other incidental duties and privileges, including three ball games, have kept me pretty well occupied. 'Rested,' did you say? Yes, I suppose so."

CHARACTER ESSENTIAL TO TRUE GREATNESS.

By Robert Edwin Meek.

In the course of human history the world has had many so-called great men, but not a few of them have thought of self first and of their obligations to their fellow-men afterwards, if at all; and it is needless to say that humanity has not been blessed by these selfish lives. True greatness is not to be achieved by self-aggrandizement. Jesus Christ said, "Whoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant." Unselfish service is inseparable from greatness. None but men of character can render the most acceptable service. However talented a man may be, he is apt to use his gifts for unworthy purposes, to his own and others' hurt, if his character is not such as to cause him to realize his great responsibility to God for the use that he makes of his ability. What a pity it is to see a gifted man without character! It is nothing less than a dark tragedy. There is something lacking in the make-up of such a man that mars his whole worth and usefulness.

No man can obtain a good character if he does not value it above everything else. Christ said, "Seek ye FIRST the kingdom of God and his righteousness." He that loveth honor, reputation, position, power, money, or anything else more than the Lord Jesus is not worthy of him.

The world is learning to distinguish between men whose object in life is to seek all they can for themselves, regardless of the consequences, and men who are laboring in a self-sacrificing way for the good of mankind. It respects noble characters whenever it finds them because it cannot help doing so. The great difficulty is that it does not find them often enough. They are few and rare.

"Thus is it over all the earth!
That which we call the fairest,
And prize for its surpassing worth,
Is always rarest.

"Iron is heaped in mountain piles,
And gluts the laggard forges;
But gold-flakes gleam in dim defiles
And lonely gorges.

"The snowy marble flecks the land
With heaped and rounded ledges,
But diamonds hide within the sand
Their starry edges.

"The finny armies clog the twine
That sweeps the lazy river,
But pearls come singly from the brine,
With the pale diver."

Black Hawk, Miss.

We love to fancy that a flower is the point of transition at which a material thing touches the immaterial; it is the sentient vegetable soul. We ascribe dispositions to it; we treat it as we would an innocent child. Flowers have moods like men or animals. Some seem to smile; some have a sad expression; some are pensive and diffident; others, again, are plain, honest, and upright, like the broad-faced sunflower and the hollyhock. We find ourselves speaking of them as laughing, as gay and coquettish, as nodding and dancing. No man of sensibility ever spoke of a flower as he would of a fungus, a pebble, or a sponge. Indeed they are more lifelike than many animals. We commune with flowers—we go to them if we are sad or glad.—Beecher.

Obituaries

Obituaries not over 200 words in length will be published free of charge. All over 200 words must be paid for at the rate of 1 cent a word. Count the words and be sure to send the amount necessary with the obituary. That will save trouble all around. We cannot make discriminations. Memorial resolutions are subject to the same rule as obituaries.

MRS. W. W. MORSE.

The subject of this obituary, MRS. MAMIE COLEMAN LANIER MORSE, was born in Sumter County, Alabama, October 16, 1861, and died in the home of her son, W. H. Morse, in Tylertown, Miss., February 16, 1922. It will be seen that between these two dates there elapsed a period of time consisting of 60 years, 4 months, and 5 days.

In early life she united with the Methodist Church and was a faithful member and consistent Chirstian till her passing away. On December 20, 1877, she was happily married to Mr. W. W. Morse, of Kemper County, Mississippi. Five years later—some time in the year 1882—Mr. Morse was duly licensed to preach in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Four years later he was admitted into the Mississippi Annual Conference as a traveling preacher, and for twenty-four years he served faithfully the church in that relation. His faithful wife, in whose memory this is written, followed him with a glad heart and willing mind wherever the church appointed her husband, and I am quite sure, from what I have been able to learn, she was a great help and inspiration to him in his work as a pastor, never complaining of the hardships of the Methodist preacher's lot, and her husband served some very difficult charges.

I knew Sister Morse but slightly, finding her in bed when I came to Tylertown last winter, and from this affliction she never recovered, and she knew she was not going to recover. It was my very great pleasure as well as a privilege to be with her quite often in her last days, and I shall always be glad of the opportunity of knowing this good woman, for she was indeed and in truth a good woman, as was testified to by the kindness manifested to her and her family by the good people of the community. They all loved and appreciated her worth for her real character, as well as for the faithfulness of her husband, who served this charge four years as pastor, and died here and is sleeping the sweet sleep of the redeemed in the town cemetery.

Mrs. Morse was in many respects an unusual woman. She was a friend to everybody, loving everybody, and especially interested in the preacher and his family, inquiring every day while she was sick of the comforts of the folks in the parsonage just across the street from her home.

Everybody spoke well of her, and I am sure all who knew her longer and therefore better than I, know just where to find her, for she left with her loved ones just before passing away the comforting assurance in her own words, "I am going home to heaven." The constant attention of her children and especially that of her daughter-in-law, with whom she made her home, was a most beautiful picture to me as I, day after day, looked upon it for weeks in succession, all hours of the day or night, doing everything for her comfort without a murmur.

The funeral services were held in the Methodist church in Tylertown (the first funeral in the new church), at 10 o'clock, Friday morning, February 17, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. W. A. Roper, pastor of the Baptist church, and Rev. Mr. Davis, also of the Baptist church. A large congregation of her friends and loved ones gathered to pay her the last respects, the business houses of the town closing for the funeral service, all of which attested the esteem in which this good woman was held in this community where she spent so many years of her useful life.

We laid her to rest in the city cemetery to wait the resurrection morn. Good-bye friend, servant of God, mother, grandmother, neighbor. May we all so live that like you we too may see our Pilot face to face when we cross the bar, and be admitted into his presence where we shall meet again never more to part. God comfort the sorrowing ones is the earnest prayer of

Her pastor,
F. B. ORMOND.

Sister L. Z. WHITESIDES passed to her reward on June 30, 1922, after an illness of several weeks. She was born June 9, 1857, professed faith in Christ at an early age, and joined the Presbyterian Church. She later united with the Methodist Church when she became the bride of Brother Sam Whitesides, in which church she lived a very humble, consecrated, Christian life until her death. No one ever lived in any community who wielded a greater influence for good than Sister Whitesides. She was the mother of three sons and five daughters; one daughter has preceded her to the Glory Land to welcome her. She leaves the rest to mourn their loss, with the fond anticipation that they too shall soon go and join them. She leaves a host of friends and relatives who will miss her also. The church will miss her. Her presence was always an inspiration to her pastor, and her prayers were forcibly felt by all those who heard them. Her pew is now empty, but we feel sure that a mansion that has been empty in Heaven is now occupied by her. May we all live so as to meet her again.

Her pastor, J. C. NELSON.

JOHN A. VANDERWALL was born in Rotterdam, Holland, on December 12, 1857, and died in Moss Point, Miss., April 15, 1922. He left his native land in early young manhood, and, after sailing the eastern seas and elsewhere, he eventually came to America and to Moss Point, where he began his permanent career in 1880. On November 7, 1882, he was married to Miss Laura Clark, of which union two children were born—Jno. A., Jr., and Miss Lolla. The son died just as he was entering young manhood; the daughter, with her mother, survives. Brother Vanderwall deservedly bore the reputation of being one of the most thoroughly versed Bible teachers to be found anywhere. His life was one of unswerving fidelity to his church, his family, and his God. For many years he served most efficiently as secretary of the church conference, and as such has left a strikingly beautiful, minute, and accurate history of the Moss Point church. Brother Vanderwall also served most acceptably as Lay Leader, trustee, and teacher of a Men's Bible class in the Sunday school. To him duty never seemed a task. The church came first with him. He loved his pastors and was always dependable. His was truly a life of service, and now he sleeps the sleep of the righteous. In the presence of a large concourse of friends, we laid him away on Sunday afternoon, April 16. Peace to his ashes!

J. EARLY GRAY.

REV. J. D. HARPER was born in Shelby County, Alabama, March 19, 1846; converted October, 1859, at Alabama Camp Ground, two miles west of Alabama Church (Bernice, La.) charge; later entered the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in which capacity he served as a faithful servant until his departure, March 17, 1922. We, the members of Alabama church, desire to express our appreciation of our departed brother, and remember with pride the fact that he was called of God to the ministry from our community, and pray that others may follow. Brother Harper was loved by all who knew him; and while there is a sadness that comes over us when we think of his being with us no longer in the flesh, we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, realizing that his life was well spent, and that he now lives with the saints in glory.

ALABAMA CHURCH.

WINIFRED DAVIS, youngest daughter of D. R. and Florence Davis, was born at Lufkin, Texas, June 7, 1902, and departed this life on Thursday, May 11, 1922. She was converted and joined the Methodist Church at the age of eleven, and when we think of her life, we are sure that when her sweet spirit left its temple of clay, it went to dwell in the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. Several years ago she moved with her family to Shreveport, La.; this was her home at the time of her death, and there she was laid to rest. Though very frail in body, she was buoyant in spirit, and scattered sunshine among all who were in her presence on every occasion. Young and with life's prospect ahead of her, it was natural that she should want to live, and it seems to her loved ones a pity that one in the bright morning of life, so sweet and lovable, should have to go away; but God knows best and He wanted her with Him for some purpose that we shall understand when we no longer see through a glass darkly. Sweet, joyous spirit, farewell. Thou maker of sunshine in this dark world, wilt now revel in the sunshine on God's fair fields of light, and we pray that every heart that loved thee so tenderly may be comforted, and may beat with a new rapture when we meet thee again in that land where the shadows never fall.

Epworth League.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE EPWORTH LEAGUE ASSEMBLY.

The Twentieth Annual Conference and First Annual Assembly of the Mississippi Conference Epworth League was held in Whitworth College, Brookhaven, Miss., June 5 to 11. There were 145 delegates, who spent the six days in the most profitable meeting our Conference Epworth League has ever held.

Our classes in "Methodist Armor," "Recreation and the Church," Missions, and "Epworth League Methods," were held each morning, which resulted in the awarding of 93 Certificates in the Christian Culture Department.

The five addresses, "Heroes of Methodism," were very fine and proved helpful to our Leaguers. The afternoons were given to personal interviews on Life Service, under direction of Dr. Hounshell, assisted by Miss Gatewood, Miss Donnan and Miss Addie Greely. From 3:15 to 4:30 we had directed play, under the supervision of Mr. E. O. Harbin. We had Vesper Services each evening, and song service just before platform address, which was followed by steropticon views of the Mission field.

Saturday evening was given entirely to "stunts." Each district arranged its own stunt. This proved to be a most enjoyable evening. The committee decided Meridian District had the best stunt. At the same time, the winner of the Epworth League pin was announced, it being awarded for the best song submitted. Miss Louise Preston, of the Vicksburg District, was the winner of the pin.

Each night, 15 minutes after "taps" was devoted to prayer in groups, and the last meeting of the Faculty reported 100 per cent prayers.

The "morning watch" services were probably the greatest services of the day, which resulted in 40 life-service volunteers, with six signing up definitely for life work.

Following the address by Dr. Hounshell on the "Life of Bishop Lambuth," our subscriptions to the African Special were taken, amounting to $4015.

Our out-of-Conference visitors were: Mr. E. O. Harbin, of the Central Office, Nashville, who had charge of the First Department, Song Services, Recreation and the Church, and directed play; Miss Sadie Donnan, of Macon, Ga., who had charge of Junior and Intermediate work, and taught one of the Mission Classes; Dr. C. G. Hounshell, of the Board of Missions, Nashville, Tenn., who had charge of a class in Life Service, Class in Fourth Department, and delivered several addresses; Miss Grace Gatewood, San Francisco, Calif., leader in vesper services, personal work, and helped in solving all problems. All of these in their special work were at their very best. We could not have had a better representation than we did.

The entertainment given by the local Epworth League and the city of Brookhaven was fine. Dr. Cooper did everything possible to make our stay pleasant and profitable, so much so that by unanimous vote, our next Assembly will be held at Whitworth College.

The following officers were elected: President, W. D. Hawkins, Meridian, Miss.; Vice-President, Truman Lewis, Hattiesburg, Miss.; Secretary, Miss Erma M. Kile, Jackson, Miss.; Treasurer, Rev. L. F. Alford, Laurel, Miss.; Era Agent, Miss Janet E. Head, Natchez, Miss.

These officers were installed at the conclusion of the 11 o'clock service Sunday, June 11, by Rev. W. H. Lewis, pastor of Brookhaven church. Brother Lewis was really a pastor to the whole Assembly, and contributed a great deal to our pleasure while there.

Probably the greatest service of the Assembly was the closing service, Sunday night, June 11. Then the opportunity was given to our young people to answer the question, "What has the Assembly meant to me, and what I going to do with it?" This was a service long to be remembered by those who were present.

There was a question in the minds of some folks, of the wisdom of changing from a Conference to an Assembly, but that doesn't obtain any longer, as those who attended were so impressed with the value of the Assembly, not one would think of going back to the Conference plan.

Our goal for 1923, is 250 present, and we feel sure we are going to reach it.

Our Assembly is over, but the work abides and will tell in the future of our church as these consecrated young people go back to their various Chapters to render a larger service for the extension of the Kingdom of Heaven to the "uttermost ends of the earth."

W. D. HAWKINS, Pres.,
Miss. Conf. Epworth League Assembly.

EPWORTH LEAGUE NEWS, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

New Orleans, District.

On Sunday, July 9, several members of the Carrollton Avenue League went to St. Tammany and held a devotional meeting. About twenty-five of the St. Tammany people came to the meeting to see what an Epworth League was like. After the devotional services were over a brief explanation of League work in general was made. Some of those present expressed a desire to have a League organized in their church. After more discussion this was done and officers were elected. They are: Miss Christine Krentel, President; Mrs. Jesse Smith, Vice President; Mr. A. H. Gooding, Treasurer; Miss Zilla Smith, Secretary. Twelve names were secured for membership at this first meeting. We hope the St. Tammany Leaguers are in earnest about their organization and that their numbers will increase. Best wishes, St. Tammany.

The members of the Carrollton Avenue League spent a most glorious Fourth at the plantation home of Mr. and Mrs. Ahten in Shrewsbury. Not even a tumble in the mud of the batture or a few lost hearts could mar the happiness of the day. We already anticipate the joys of next Fourth.

The League of First Church spends the afternoon of the first Sunday of the month with a number of the patients at the Home of Incurables. These afternoons always prove an inspiration to the Leaguers, who always receive an invitation to come again.

Parker Memorial has chartered a Junior League with 25 members. This League, which has been organized only two months, is already doing good work. The children are caring for a pair of twins from the Mary Werlein Mission. They also have distributed garments. These things make us expect big things of the Juniors at Parker Memorial.

The Algiers League is having a contest to increase membership and attendance. Thirteen new members in two weeks speaks for the success of the campaign. The Algiers Leaguers have their own League Room in the new church. At present they are planning to buy a piano for their room. A play will be given in August to help raise this fund.

The New Orleans District Union met in business session Tuesday, July 11, at McDonoghville church. One matter of special interest that was brought up was the case of the girl that the Union is supporting at Vashti. After a spirited discussion it was decided to continue the support of the young lady. The Union was invited to entertain the ladies at the Fink Home on July 21. The invitation was gladly accepted and the third department superintendent given full charge of the entertainment. After the adjournment the Leaguers were invited out to the parsonage lawn, where they were served with glasses of "Methodist punch." The young people always enjoy this part of the meeting.

YOUNG MOTHER NOW STRONG

Her Mother's Faith in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compour Led Her To Try It

Kenosha, Wisconsin.—"I cannot say enough in praise of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. My mother had great faith in it as she had taken so much of it and when I had trouble after my baby was born she gave it to me. It helped me so much more than anything else had done that I advise all women with female trouble to give it a fair trial and I am sure they will feel as I do about it.—Mrs. FRED. P. HANSEN, 562 Symmonds St., Kenosha, Wisconsin.

A medicine that has been in use nearly fifty years and that receives the praise and commendation of mothers and grandmothers is worth your consideration.

If you are suffering from troubles that sometimes follow child-birth bear in mind that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a woman's medicine. It is especially adapted to correct such troubles.

The letters we publish ought to convince you; ask some of your women friends or neighbors — they know its worth. You will, too, if you give it a fair trial.

GIRLS! LEMONS

BLEACH FRECKLES

AND WHITEN SKIN

Squeeze the juice of two lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of Orchard White, which any drug store will supply for a few cents, shake well, and you have a quarter pint of the best freckle and tan bleach, and complexion whitener.

Massage this sweetly fragrant lemon lotion into the face, neck, arms and hands each day and see how freckles and blemishes bleach out and how clear, soft and rosy-white the skin becomes.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

The Sunday School Day Fund is coming in mighty slow. There are reasons for this, but still it would be of great help to the Board if we could get a quicker response and a more generous one from the whole Conference.

The following circuits are 100 per cent on Sunday School Day: Vancleave led off, Adams came next, Scotland being a close third. One or more circuits just miss 100 per cent by one school; among their number are Pleasant Grove, Barlow, Purvis, Matherville and Nebo.

I had a most pleasant stay at Pleasant Grove, teaching organization and administration. We had a good class and the folks gave a good response. There is a great opportunity out there. It will take long, patient toil, but the folks are there and will come in in time, I do believe. Brother Simpson is in great favor with his folks and has done and is doing a fine work.

Sunday was spent at McComb. One hundred and fifty people came down from Jackson to attend the Dunaway meeting and bear testimony for God. I have seen carloads of folks go to political meetings and lodge meetings, but to go on a mission of that kind was thrilling in the extreme. God will surely bless them and their work.

Help us with the Sunday School Day offering. Pray for the work and workers. Yours in Him,

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI

Rev. E. G. Mohler is using "The Metbodist Church and Its Work" for a series of prayer meeting talks. The people are delighted with the course so far. He expects to use this same text as a basis for a series of lessons when he holds revival meetings for his neighbor preachers. There is no doubt in my mind as to the outcome of his experiment.

We have three men and two women who are getting ready to teach in our training schools. When they receive notice of their acceptance we shall give their names.

Did you know that a progressive church working alongside of us is holding teacher-training schools in every county in the State? The church that teaches the people religion must be the leading church of the future and it ought to be. Our own church leaders are ambitious to give our people the best of instruction and they work and pray to the end that they may reach the last man and woman in the Conference with this idea of teaching the children the fundamentals of Christianity. A little more co-operation and less holding back upon the part of some of our leaders will help do the work more rapidly and effectively.

The Corinth District Training School held at New Aubany had the full backing of the presiding elder, the pastor, and the people of New Albany. One hundred and five were enrolled, sixty-eight received credits, twenty-one schools were represented, and four young people gave themselves to the work of teaching religion as a definite calling. The school at New Albany, under the leadership of Mrs. B. L. Coulter, gave the Pageant, "The Dawning," the last night of the school. This wonderful lesson made an indelible impression upon those who witnessed this scene. The presentation surpassed anything of the kind I have ever seen. What was done for the Corinth District can be done all over the Conference when we get similar co-operation.

The preachers of the Columbus District are interested in the school to be held for them at Ackerman, July 31-August 5. A steady pull together will give as great success as we had at New Albany. Mr. J. Lem Seawright, of Ackerman, is to be our Educational Director.

Interest is being manifested in the school to be held at Moorhead for the workers in the Greenwood District. Rev. S. L. Pope is to be Educational Director of this school. Rev. W. D. Bennett, pastor at Moorbead, is doing the hard work that will bring success. He has twenty-five people pledged to pray for its effectiveness as a soul-winning agency.

FROM VARNADO, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: We closed a meeting at Varnado, Bogalusa circuit, last Sunday night with 8 accessions to the church—5 on profession of faith, 1 by letter to our church, and 2 to the Baptist church. Our people there were revived, and promise to take hold of the Sunday school and church work with renewed zeal.

Brother J. E. Selfe, of Epworth Church, New Orleans, did the preaching to the delight and satisfaction of all. F. N. SWEENEY, P. C.

FROM SHUQUALAK, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: We have just closed a very fine meeting at our church at Shuqualak. We were assisted by Rev. G. A. Baker, of Myrtles, Miss., and Mr. M. L. Lifsey, one of our evangelistic singers.

The gospel messages delivered by Brother Baker, greatly stirred our people. Brother Lifsey is not only a great singer, but a personal worker. His special serviees for children and old people added greatly to the success of our meeting. To any pastor who needs assistance in revival work I heartily recommend the services of these men of God. As to the results: we have received ten members on profession, besides a number of reclamations, and some who will join the other churches of the town. One man about 75 years of age was converted.

We are looking forward to great revivals throughout our charge.

SEAMON RHEA, Pastor.

CORINTH DISTRICT STANDARD TRAINING SCHOOL.

Mr. Editor: May I tell your readers some things about the very unusual Standard Training School for the Sunday school workers of the Corinth District, which was held at New Albany, Miss., July 3-8?

It was unusual from the fact that the cltizens of New Albany opened their doors with unstinted hospitality and gave free entertainment to every one who came to the school. Second, in the large enrollment—105 being enrolled and most of this number took credit work. Third, the social fellowship was unsurpassed; every one seemed to feel that lovely comradeship which makes the whole world kin. Fourth, in the co-operation and interest shown by the other denominations of the town—the pastor of one took credit—also in the large number of schools over the district represented. Fifth. In the use of the splendidly equipped High School building so generously offered by the principal. Prof. Coulter—even typewriters being offered for free use. Sixth, the beautiful pageant, "The Dawning," given on Friday evening by local talent under the direction of Mrs. Coulter thrilled my heart as but few things do. Seventh, there was a deeply spiritual atmosphere which pervaded the whole school; at the closing devotional service four young people volunteered for part or whole-time service in the field of religious education.

Brothers Johnson, Randolph and Gladney, together with others who promoted the school, are to be congratulated upon the wonderful success of a school which has sent out such an influence over the district.

SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

The School of Missions to be held at Lake Junaluska, North Carolina, July 28-August 6, is a training school for leaders.

The importance of such a school cannot be overstated.

There will be opportunity for study and recreation which will be invaluable to pastors, Sunday school superintendent, leaders of missionary societies, adult and young people.

A strong programme will be put on. Leading men and women have been secured for the faculty, and strong speakers for the platform hours.

Home and foreign missionaries will be present.

There will be courses in the Principles of Teaching Missions and the Missionary Message of the Bible.

There will be classes in the new

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE

Columbus District Meeting at Ackerman.

The Columbus Distriet meeting was held at Ackerman, June 20-21, with fifty-seven registered delegates and visitors, and the following distinguished guests: Mrs. R. P. Neblett, Conference Superintendent of Juniors; Miss Corinne Rogers, Conferenee Corresponding Seeretary; Mrs. Susie Thomas, Conference Superintendent of Supplies; Mrs. Alma G. Riley and Miss Mende Lee, of our Orphanage; Rev. B. P. Jaeo, Rev. Guy D. Ray, and J. H. McKennon. Nothing was left undone by the Ackerman auxiliary for the comfort and pleasure of the delegates.

The opening service was held on Tuesday night, at whieh time Miss Julia Mason conducted the devotional serviee and took as her theme the consecration of self to the service of our Master. Generous words of greeting were extended by Mrs. J. H. Johnson, of the Ackerman auxiliary, the response being made by Mrs. Neblett. Mrs. S. Adams rendered a beautiful voeal solo, "Close to Thee." The remainder of this service was devoted to the Council message given by Miss Rogers; it was inspiring to hear of the reports of the missionaries from the various fields and know that we have a part in this great work.

The morning service on Wednesday was devoted to the reports from the District Secretary and the auxiliaries throughout the distriet, thirty-eight of the forty auxiliaries reporting, and all were most encouraging. The slogan for this district is the command, "Go forward."

Mrs. Susie Thomas, our own Conference offieer, was present, and gave a most interesting report of the work of her department throughout the Columbus District, whieh now gives ten times as much as the whole Conference gave the first year she had the office.

Mrs. Alma G. Riley was introduced and told of the work at the Orphanage and of some of the needs there. She appealed for the support of all our women.

The remainder of the morning session was given to Mrs. Neblett and the Junior work. She was assisted by Mrs. J. S. Boswell, Kosciusko, an enthusiastie Junior worker, and Miss Julia Wasson, who made such an interesting talk to the ehildren on the Chinese girls as she knows them in McTyeire School.

At the afternoon session, Mission Study and Social Serviee were diseussed and many interesting features of each brought out. Mrs. Neblett presented the Young People's work, assisted by Miss Carolyn Boggess, of Macon, who discussed the Standard of Excellence and how Maeon Y. P. attained it, and Miss Martha Long, of Brooksville, who gave such an interesting reading. The distriet pennant was presented to Macon.

Our Rural Worker was discussed by Miss Rogers and pledges taken from the auxiliaries more than made the district assessment. Miss Bessie Brand, the worker, expects to be in the field by July 10. Rev. B. P. Jaco addressed the Conference in a most pleasing way and asked that the women stand behind him in the Centenary work.

Louisville and Weir both asked to entertain the Conference in 1923, but Weir made sueh a strong appeal for it, that this new soeiety won out and will be our gracious hostess next year.

Resolutions of thanks for the many courtesies and the generous hospitality extended all delegates and visitors were read by Mrs. B. L. Smith, Jr., of West Point.

This most helpful conference was brought to a elose by a eonsecration service conducted by Miss Julia Wasson and the elosing prayer was offered by her. MRS. KEMP WILLIAMS, Seeretary.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

MacDonell Wesley Community House, Houma, La.

Each summer at the MacDonell Wesley House, Houma, La., are held three periods of training for the young people and ehildren of the Freneh seetion. The week of June 5 to 10 was for the older girls. A tent had been given the Wesley House by a friend in South Carolina and the use of this for sleeping quarters added greatly to the attraetions of the week for the girls. Twenty-one were enrolled.

The daily aetivities began with the morning worship after breakfast. This was followed by four fifty-minute periods of study, with a brief refreshment period in between. Two elasses were conducted by Miss Susie M. Juden, State Children's Division Superintendent of the Louisiana Sunday School Association. Her subjects were "The Sunday School Currieulum" and "Some Sunday School Methods."

Mrs. B. F. Key, Superintendent of Young People's Work in the Louisiana Conference Woman's Missionary Society, had eharge of the Mission Study Department. "Playing Square with To-morrow" was the book studied. One of the most popular periods was the 11 o'clock music hour, under the direetion of Mrs. J. H. Thatcher, a gifted musician of our own city. The training received at this period will be very vauable to the girls in their church and community singing.

The afternoons were spent in rest and reereation. Each day a talk was given by Mrs. Key on little social eourtesies. It was also our pleasure to have with us on Wednesday morning Mrs. R. W. Collins, who gave a demonstration and a talk on Hygiene, whieh was greatly enojyed and gave us many helpful suggestions.

The evening aetivities eonsisted of a soeial at the church on Monday evening; Tuesday, a Community Sing at the Parish House of St. Matthews Episeopal Church; and on Thursday and Friday evenings were given entertainments at the First Methodist Church correlating with the week's work.

The work of the week was of great value to each girl present, broadening the spiritual outlook and helping them to realize the depth, length, and breadth of God's love and to see the need of Christian workers. At the close of the last session each girl asked to be prayed for that she might grow in grace and be of servioe in God's work here among men.

FROM RICHTON, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: Just a few lines from the Richton eharge. We have just closed two very great meeting on this eharge. The visible results were 102 additions to the M. E. Chureh, South, all on profession of faith exeept eight. Rev. W. D. Bass, of Corinth, Miss., was with me in these meetings. He is the best help I have ever had. There is nothing sensational about him, unless it is his great faith in God. He is strong in faith. In addition to the 102 reeeived into the M. E. Chureh, South, 60 went to the Baptist ehureh, 3 to the Methodist Protestant, and 3 to the Preshyterian ehureh. Truly these meetings were great. Brother Bass has a large new tent, and has a few open dates.

We have just finished one new ehurch at Blodgett, that eost $2500. We will let contraet for another new ehureh soon. We are now the best circuit in the Mississippi Conference and within the next year will be the best in Southern Methodism. Yes? General summary: Members received by eertifieate during year, 12; on profession, 94; infants baptized, 12; ehurehes built, 1, cost $2500; "Methodist Armors" distributed, 20; pastor's salary, paid $1200; other purposes than above mentioned $1100. Total finance, first six month, $4800.

Come to see us.

president of the Epworth League conference of his territory, was among the representatives of the Central Office, and spoke at the evening hour Thursday, as well as met with one of the group meetings on "Organization" during the day.

Miss Ida Mallory Cobb, Junior Superintendent of the Central Epworth League Board, Nashville, rendered great service as one of the instructors in the Junior Department, in connection with Mrs. R. P. Neblett, Durant, who is the Conference Junior Superintendent.

Miss Adie Wilson, of Nashville, a student volunteer, conducted a series of group meetings in methods, and the "Mission Study" hour at 10 o'clock each day, with the entire conference assembled in the chapel. Miss Brown also enlisted several of the young people in the "Life Service Band," and met with them for instruction.

Rev. J. H. Holder, New Albany, conducted the devotional hour, at 6:45 each morning.

Is Your Blood Good or Thin and Watery?

You can tell by the way you feel. You need Hood's Sarsaparilla to make your blood rich, red and pure, tingling with health for every organ.

You need it if weak and tired day in and day out, if your appetite is poor, sleep unrefreshing, — for humors, boils, eruptions, scrofula, rheumatism, headaches, nervous prostration. It is simply wonderful to give strength to your whole body.

It is agreeable, pleasant and convenient to take and embodies a long-tried and found-true formula.

Cured Her Rheumatism

Knowing from terrible experience the suffering caused by rheumatism, Mrs. J. E. Hurst, who lives at 508 E. Olive St., B-355, Bloomington, Ill., is so thankful at having cured herself that out of pure gratitude she is anxious to tell all other sufferers just how to get rid of their torture by a simple way at home.

Mrs. Hurst has nothing to sell. Merely cut out this notice, mail it to her with your own name and address, and she will gladly send you this valuable information entirely free. Write her at once before you forget.

In the department groups Miss Vera Combs, Pontotoc, District Secretary for the Aberdeen District, had charge of the second department, and Miss Haidee Curd, Holly Springs, District Secretary for the Grenada District, taught a class in the third department.

Dr. J. R. Countiss, President of Grenada College, together with Mrs. Countiss, were most happy in their attitude toward the young people present and not only felt a deep interest in every step taken, on the programme or on the campus and class room, but entered into the social life of those present and watched very carefully the conduct of the delegates.

A business session was held each day just before the noon hour, at which reports, by the delegations, were made, committees appointed, and the necessary routine matters looked after.

The following Committees were appointed by Rev. S. H. Caffey, President:

On Policy: T. G. Pears, Miss Sadie Wilson, Mrs. T. B. Lewis, Miss Tryphena Rogers, Rev. W. D. Bennett, Miss Nancy Jaco; Committee on Standards: Mrs. R. P. Neblett, Mrs. J. M. Wyatt, Rev. W. R. Lott, Miss Ida Mallory Cobb, Rev. R. H. Holder, Mrs. Redmond Taylor; Committee on Nominations: Rev. R. P. Neblett, Miss Vera Combs, Miss Dede Carr, Rev. J. J. Garner, Bertram Brown, Mrs. Bolder, Mr. J. B. Warrener.

There will be classes on the City and Rural Church.

Not the least of the advantages to be derived from attending a summer school is the fellowship with other workers.

Such a school furnishes a rare opportunity for a discussion of plans and methods which have been used in developing the work in the local churches.

All persons who are interested in missions and who desire to become better informed on the subject, will find in the summer school just what they need.

INSPIRATION AT JUNALUSKA.

At the moment of greatest physical and mental lassitude for those who are forced to spend their summers in city or town, Lake Junaluska extends an offer not only by physical and mental stimulation, but of the most profound spiritual inspiration.

The delights of cooling breezes blowing fresh across the broad lake, the vision of glorious sunsets over tall mountains, the joys of long hikes which uncover the beauties of nature in constant succession are not more inviting to the worker in Christ's vineyard than the wealth of spiritual food which is spread with lavish hand on the program of the 1922 conference.

Perhaps never before has a program been arranged of more useful and purposeful significance to the Christian worker than the series of studies which are to extend over a period of a week in this North Carolina mountain retreat, from August 7 to 13. The general subject will be "The Social Principles of the New Testament," and the speakers who will present successive subjects are men and women who have plowed down into the subsoil of their different fields through years of actual experience and experimentation.

After a formal opening of the conference on Monday, successive days will be devoted to a special phase of the social problem. Tuesday will bring a general survey of New Testament principles applied to the social advance. Wednesday will reveal these principles in relation to the Southern racial problem. Thursday will produce a discussion of industrial relations and Christian principles by men who have actually envolved a Christian basis in industry. Friday will take up the most timely discussion of the Christian church and the abolition of alcoholism. The closing day will be devoted to Christianity and the public health movement.

Such is the material of the conference. To present this material, a remarkable gathering of Christian leaders in various lines has been provided. Dr. W. A. Smart, of Emory University, will lead the daily study, while Dr. S. C. Mitchell, Dr. Thomas Carter, Dr. O. C. Helming, Earle Deane Howard, Dr. R. R. Moton, Professor George Carver, Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington, Dr. Howard H. Russell, Dr. W. B. Wheeler, Rev. George R. Stuart, Miss Anna A. Gordon, Mrs. Luke Johnson, Will W. Alexander, Mrs. Mary Bethune, Dr. J. P. Faulkes and Burr Blackburn will lead the discussions on particular phases of the subject.

Not only for the duration of the conference but for as many weeks as can be spent on vacation should the Christian worker plan to spend at Lake Junaluska. Situated in the famous Waynesville country, it is unsurpassed for its scenery and health. J. Dale Stentz, Lake Junaluska, N. C., will furnish all necessary information and make reservations.

RESOLUTIONS.

In the passing to his heavenly home of our beloved friend and teacher, Mr. L. B. WILCOX, his family, friends, church and the entire community have suffered loss inexpressible. In all activities of the church he will be sadly missed; especially will this, his Sunday school class, miss his kind instruction in the great truths which were exemplified in his daily life, and will miss his leadership along the paths of peace. All who had the privilege of knowing this noble, consecrated Christian, will ever cherish in their hearts memories of good deeds performed and a life full of service to humanity.

In his family circle, he was tender and true; as a neighbor and friend, he was kind and faithful; as a citizen, he was the soul of honor and generosity; in the church and Sunday school, he was without a peer.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we extend to his loved ones our tenderest sympathy in this hour of grief; yet we know "they sorrow not as those who have no hope."

2. That we strive to emulate the example of his useful life, the memory of which will ever be a beacon light inspiring us to noble deeds and helping us to do greater works for the Master and for the church he loved so well. May we, when storms gather, look, as he did, to Jesus, to clear all clouds away.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to his family, one to the Mansfield Enterprise, and one to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed by: Mrs. T. T. Guy, Mrs. Jno. B. Williams, Mrs. George Wilson.

Not Equipment But the Man Makes the Difference.

Every great school, college or university has been built around the personality of some one man. The educated men of America who have accomplished great things and who stand well in professions look back on their college training and attribute much of their accomplishments to the dominating personality of the school in which they were educated. The dominating personality of Morgan School is that of Professor R. K. Morgan. His influence for good and better things does much toward the moulding of morals and stimulating of broader ideals in the students who are so fortunate as to attend Morgan School. Mr. Morgan has devoted his life to the training of boys.

The thoughtful, considerate parent feels that the school to which he sends his son must be equipped and its faculty chosen with the primary end of training the boy to become a man—to teach true Christian faith, to develop manly independence and self-confidence, to inspire high ideals of life and service, to strengthen and develop mind and body alike.

Such an institution is the Morgan School, which has been built up around the Christian character and wholesome, inspiring personality of Robert K. Morgan, who has been principal for 26 years.

FRATERNAL ADDRESS

Delivered by Bishop H. H. Font, Fraternal Messenger from the Church of the United Brethren in Christ.

(This address is especially significant in that it laid the ground for the appointment of a Commission to consider the question of the Unification of the two churches.—Editor.)

Bishops and Members of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South:

Dear Brethren: My colleagues have assigned to me the pleasant duty of bringing to you their cordial greetings, and of expressing to you the brotherly love and hearty good will of the church of the United Brethren in Christ. Grace to you and peace be multiplied in the knowledge of God and of Jesus Christ our Lord.

Our General Conference which convened in Indianapolis, Ind., a year ago was deeply complimented by your fraternal and assuring salutations conveyed by two of your distinguished leaders, Bishop Warren A. Candler and Dr. E. B. Chappell, the former addressing us by letter and the latter delivering his message in person. They brought to us great messages. We rejoiced in what they told us of your activities and your evangelistic victories. As they set forth these high matters—matters of deep interest to us as well as of great honor to you—we felt as never before that we were one with you in the Lord, brethren and companions in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ. When we remember your consecration to the gospel of the Son of God, your power of continued production of distinguished leaders, your religious affability and courtesy, your firm hold on the divine verities, your work of faith and labor of love, we are "bound to give thanks always for you, making mention of you in our prayers."

Owing to difference of languages which existed at the time of our origin, we differ in name. It is probable that the founders never thought of living and laboring in two separate connections. But doubtless the Holy Spirit guided them into this course, that wider and higher ends of the kingdom of God might be accomplished through them as separate organizations than could have been achieved otherwise. But, my brethren, there are at this time unmistakable evidences that the same divine Spirit is leading your people and ours into relations more intimate and affectionate than any of which we have dared to dream since the days of Asbury and Otterbein. It was this conviction that prompted my colleagues, the bishops of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ, to send me to you to say that ties between us were strengthened by your charming fraternal message of a year ago, and that every sentiment expressed in that message is most sincerely reciprocated. The good angels only know what may be the final outcome, but we have a dream that some day we are going to be one.

Providence indicates the present age as the time of union. Later I may take a moment to speak of why this tendency is so marked in our time, and to express the hope that the tendency may increase more and more until at least practical unity of all who have named the name of Christ is included in that divine event toward which the whole creation moves, and which, in spite of all that may seem to the contrary, is happily not so far off as we first believed.

But at this moment I wish to speak not of any proposed union in itself, but rather of those kindred principles which flow with equal fullness from the historic sources of your great Church and the company of believers I represent and with whom I have my task and place, principles so identical that they make us essentially one even though we should be forever twain.

As denominations we are united in a very similar origin. Asbury and Otterbein, both prophets of God, both pioneers in American Christianity, the one the largest factor in early American Methodism, and the other the human founder of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ, were not only contemporaries; they were personal friends. Expressing this friendship, Asbury gave this warm testimony concerning Otterbein: "Forty years have I known this retiring man of God, towering above his fellows in learning, wisdom, and grace, and yet seeking to be known only to God and to the people of God." At the special request of Asbury, Otterbein assisted in his ordination to the episcopal office; and at the special request of Otterbein before his departure, Asbury officiated at his funeral. Surely they were brethren. Although the records may add nothing to the probability, it is scarcely to be doubted that, in the warmth of personal friendship and in the sense of the oneness and greatness of their task in taking early America for Christ, Asbury and Otterbein more than once greeted each other as the former did when moved by the eloquence and unction of Martin Boehm, and said: "We are brethren." A friendship thus existing between the fathers should be perpetuated by the sons.

These prophets of God emphasized the same evangelical truths. They preached with the same emphasis the nature and power of sin, and the sufficient grace of God for the complete and instant forgiveness for the vilest sinner, and the result was a multitude of twice-born men. They taught with the same emphasis the necessity of regeneration and the sanctifying power of the Holy Spirit. The powerful declaration of these doctrines by Asbury and Otterbein and others who had drunk from the same spring created an epoch. They had the same power of God, used similar methods, were both mighty men of God, and held steadfastly to the same great purpose. While with the progress of the years we have caught new concepts of duty and had new visions of service, while our heart beat has quickened with the quickening tide of modern life and our sympathies have widened and deepened, we are still engaged in the oldtime mission of carrying the gospel of the crucified Christ to erring men and women. The passion of a race is still in our blood, and the springtime of the gospel is still in our hearts. Our ministry is for mankind. Equality in the love of God and in the sight of God and in duty to the world is our bewildering evangel. We stand by the ancient faith. We still believe in the existence of a triune God, in a personal Savior, in the deity of Christ, in the redemptive power of his shed blood, and in the immortality of the soul. We are still convinced that the only effective way of saving a man's soul is by conversion. There can be no substitute for personal religion. That is why a real seer has uttered the eminently wise words: "Christianity would sacrifice its divinity if it abandoned its missionary character." When the power of reclaiming the lost dies out of the church, it ceases to be a church. When that power remains there, whatever else is wanting, it may still be said that the tabernacle of God is with men.

Another kindred principle which flows with equal fullness from the historic sources of these two denominations, and a sacred possession to both, is that sacred flame which our fathers taught us to call experimental religion, that divine impulse kindled in the heart by the Holy Spirit and manifested in all the highways and all the byways of human life. When Israel was carried into captivity they were willing, if need be, to forsake all the outward symbols of worship. But they guarded with anxious zeal the sacred fire from off the altar of the holy of holies, that was kept forever burning, as a challenge at once to the power of iniquity and to the high places of idolatry. In our path of progress toward union, it matters little whether we carry with us the old candlesticks of the fathers, but it is a matter of the most vital importance that we shall guard safely the light that led their hallowed footsteps. We can do without the relics of the martyrs; we can do without the graves of the prophets; we can do without the wells of the prophets. But, men and brethren, we cannot do without the tongues of flame. The miracle of regeneration is the one continuous miracle by which God would save at once the man and the multitude, with every caravan of commerce, and every circle of society, and every throne of power.

In the forty-fourth chapter of Ecclesiasticus, a work little known and seldom read, there is a beautiful hymn to the men of old, beginning with the lines: "Let us praise famous men and our fathers that begat us." No, we must not forget our debt to the past and to the men who made the achievements of the century possible. All honor to the pioneers. They braved the dangers of the forest and storms of winter, fording icy rivers, sleeping often beneath the silent stars with saddlebags for a pillow, preaching wherever they could find a hearing. They were the true nation builders. This country was not made by statesmen; it was made by prophets of God. It was the circuit riders who turned mob leaders into class leaders and recreated the State. We applaud earthly heroes and build memorials in order that they shall not die. But when we have traced the moral heroes of the world as they have fought the battles of faith, all military glory pales and grows dim in the comparison. God grant that we may face our world as the fathers faced theirs, that we may advance upon our work with the same fullness of high life and resolution with which they walked into the Western wilderness and claimed it for the kingdom of God!

If time would permit, it would no doubt be of interest to you to hear something of our history since the days of our fathers—something of the life we are living to-day and our plans for the future. Some one has very wisely said: "We can understand human history aright only as we come to know that it is His history." It is from this point of view that the work of a church can be correctly interpreted and appreciated. Otterbein was not permitted to close his life work without

LEAVES FROM MY NOTE BOOK.

By Bishop James Cannon, Jr.

The whistle blew at 5 a. m. and Matadi awoke. At 5:30 the Negroes began to come into the main big road running into the heart of the town, pouring in from little paths, running down the hillside. I could see them as I sat on the upper veranda in the cool early dawn. At six, business began on the wharves, at railroad station, at stores; indeed practically everywhere, except in the bank and post office. Coffee was sent to my room at six, but I did not want it. I went out and strolled around watching the people. At seven I sent wireless home: "Love, well, hot;" and mailed some letters that were ready, although it seemed rather absurd to mail them ten days before they would go.

I went down to the Catholic church and found the service going on. There were 62 natives present, of all ages from 5 to 60, all women and children, except the Negro catechist and the priest. The catechist stood inside the altar rail and led a responsive service from a book. The service continued twenty minutes after I came, and the responses went on without a break, by young and old, for memorizing is the native forte. It was, however, as all the Roman Catholic services are. The priest, a fat, swarthy-faced man, walked up and down, crossing himself and bowing at various places until the exercises were finished. Then he took out a book and called the roll, and they responded by raising their hands. I had never seen this done before at a Catholic service. The church is architecturally Romanist, with gable roof and side transepts, with confessional boxes, and the usual shrines. It is located practically in the center of the town, while the Protestant churches are at each end of the town, and not conveniently placed to attract the Europeans who are working there, or who are passing through. But perhaps the Protestant location is better for permanent results.

The fare at the African Belgian Congo Hotel, commonly called the A. B. C., is not very appetizing. I am taking as little of the tough beef and goat meat as possible, and the bread is somewhat sour. I have definitely decided to use bottled water as nearly as possible, for while it adds something to experience, I have not time to tussle with the evils incident to varied and possibly infected waters.

Our party went to the ship and watched the unloading of our baggage and its passage through the customs, which occupied about an hour and cost me about 125 francs. I returned to watch the people.

The hours of business are from 6 to 8, 8:30 to 11:30, and 3 to 6. Nobody but cooks and waiters work in the middle of the day, and wisely so. As the days are about 12 hours long all the year round, there is no need to adjust the schedule to changing hours of sunrise and sunset. I went to the bank to get some checks cashed, but when I was told that dollars were worth only eleven francs, whereas they were worth 13.50 francs in Brussells, I declined to trade at a loss of 250 francs on the $100. The manager, after vain attempts at justification, finally said depreciatingly, with a characteristic shrug, that I could doubtless do better at Kinshasha, as they did not trade much in dollars at Matadi! Certainly he did not trade with me. I traded a little in the shops to ask questions. There are some people who have been in Matadi twenty years. One Englishman said that I could form no idea of Matadi from the present conditions; that it was the best summer since he had been there, as, owing to lack of rain, there had been few mosquitoes, and the heat had been moderate. He assured me most positively that in 1920 the thermometer reached 130 in the shade and 175 in the sun! I can only say that I was not bitten by mosquitoes at all, and the thermometer did not get above 85. In the afternoon there came up a shower, the first in six months, and a little water was caught for the cisterns. We secured our tickets for special car on goods (freight) train, and having gotten our identification cards, we were ready for the road. I went out to the American Baptist Mission Station after supper. It is the other side of Matadi from the British Baptist Station. It is now in charge of Dr. Joseph Clark, a veteran of forty years. He and his wife gave me such a cordial reception that I pounced upon them at once, and fired such a stream of questions that it was eleven before I realized it.

The alarm sounded at 5. In thirty minutes I had my bags down ready for breakfast. We went for the train with our string of Negro porters with packages on their heads and in their hands. Dr. and Mrs. Clark, and Mr. and Mrs. Starte came down to see us off, and Dr. Clark told me an interesting incident concerning Bishop Wm. Taylor on the occasion of his visit to Matadi. Bishop Taylor thought that the other missionaries in the Congo were opposed to his plans, so that when Dr. Clark met him at Matadi and offered to render him any possible assistance Bishop Taylor said he had made his own plans and was not going to change them. The missionaries insisted that he spend the time at their home while waiting for the next departure of the infrequent train. Bishop Taylor declined any assistance or advice and said he was going to sleep on the platform, right up against the side of the freight depot. Dr. Clark told him he might put his cot there but he would remove it before morning, or get thoroughly wet, as so much moisture condensed on the large warehouse roof that anything sitting under the eaves would be soaked by morning. Bishop Taylor very reluctantly changed the location of his cot, but would not change his determination to follow out the plans he had made for work in the Congo, without conference with the other missionaries.

The railroad is narrow gauge, the cars are first, second and third class, the third class being similar to those in Mexico, only smaller coaches. The first class holds twelve, having a middle aisle and a kind of chair seat on each side. This kind was secured, and as we had only seven grown people and three small children, we were comfortable, although we were on the train from 6:30 a. m. until 8 p. m. The lunch was sardines, canned tongue, sauce, sour bread and milk. But good fruit was plentiful on the way, as the natives flocked to the train at every station. Mangoes sold at three cents a dozen, bananas ten cents a dozen, pineapples two cents each, pawpaws four cents each.

The natives are fairly decent in their dress along the railroad; indeed, the crowds were not as ragged as along the line of the Mexican railroads, and the people are equally as intelligent looking. The switchmen are naked to the waist, from waist to knee a cloth, and thus have unimpeded action.

We had rugged hill scenery most of the way, climbing steadily to Thysville, crossing a few small streams emptying into the Congo, the right bank of which we followed up all the way. I read Stanley's "In Darkest Africa," the volume giving account of his trip from Zanibar around to the mouth of the Congo, and up the Congo to its headwaters in the neighborhood of Lake Albert, in the effort to rescue Emin Pasha. It was very interesting, as it described the trip along the route we were taking. We reached Thysville, 2,000 feet above sea level, cool and pleasant, about 8 p. m. The beds are good. There were no mosquitoes, and I slept very well. I should think this would be an excellent location for a hospital, or for a resting place for mission workers.

Jan. 11, 1922. Called at 5 a. m. from a most refreshing slumber, took quinine 4 grains, and suppose I will continue to take it daily, as practically all the missionaries state they do so. Breakfast poor, bread sour, but I ate a good pineapple and some bananas and survived. We started from Thysville to Kinshasha at 6:40 a. m., and arrived at 4:10 p. m. The trip was similar in most respects to the day before, except that grades were not so steep, and fruit was a little higher in price as we neared Kinshasha. I wrote many post cards and some letters, in order to be prepared in case the steamer was ready to sail to Lusambo. How foolish was I and ignorant! When we reached Kinshasha it was difficult for me to get any information. The "Confina," the company which acts as agent for both the Presbyterian and Methodist mission, had as its representative a man who speaks no English and who declined to understand signs. I found out later that he had no definite information to impart. Dr. Smith, Brother Stilts and myself had been assigned to a long narrow room with three beds. I declined to accept the room, and told the hotel man it was not satisfactory, and that I desired a room alone. He gesticulated in regular French style, but I finally conveyed to his mind that I would not stay for several days in a small room with three persons, that I was willing to pay more to room alone, and that comfort was the important thing. He suddenly rushed downstairs and presently returned and smilingly stated that he had a room, and took my Negroes with my bags to a second floor corner room with bath, in which I am alone, quite comfortable, and able to do my work. Refreshed by a good shower bath, I strolled around after dinner for a short while and retired early, as I was quite tired. To my surprise and pleasure, while there were mosquitoes on the porches and few in the rooms, my net is closely woven, and none could get through.

Jan. 12, 1922. I arose about 6:30. Good sleep, shower and shave. Poor breakfast; bad fare seems to be characteristic of the A. B. C. hotels—sour bread, jam, tea, sardines, bologna sausage. I hired two boys with "push-push," a chair mounted on a wheel, two poles running out in front and rear, and a boy or man at each end. I was determined to be no longer dependent upon the "Confina" for my arrangements, but to manage my affairs as I have done in other journeys. I saw the Vice-Governor and found him very agreeable—a very tall, large man, whose name is Leon Bereau. He gave me a recent map and sent his secretary to the steamboat office with me. There I discovered that all of the cabins on the steamer Yser had been taken, the "Confina" having utterly failed to care for us, so I engaged deck space to Mushi—four days—where I am promised cabin, to be vacated by passengers there. I would not have gotten this if I had waited for the local agents. I shall not mind the open deck if the mosquitoes are not too bad. The "push-push" landed me back at Kinashash by dinner time, and when I met the rest of the party they reported no accommodations. I told them I had secured mine on the deck, and thought all could make the same arrangements.

This evening the Western sky became heavy with clouds, strong wind, thunder and lightning, and it looks as though we would have a heavy tropical storm. Stanley Pool reflected the clouds, and I watched with great admiration, but it went down the other side of the Pool, simply cooling the atmosphere. Temperature, noon 87, at night 75. I went on to the British Baptist Mission and talked with Rev. H. R. Phillips, the Superintendent concerning the hostel, which is being built jointly by the various Mission Boards working in the Congo, for the entertainment of missionaries who, like our party, may be caught at Kinshasha and be compelled to stop at the high-priced, uncongenial A. B. C. hotel. Our Mission has paid $5,000 toward the total cost of $45,000. The site is very fine, and the building promises to be comfortable.

THE WAY OUT TO UNIFICATION.

By Stanley W. Wiant.

Unification of the two great Methodisms must be brought about through some channel not hitherto suggested. The old ways have been blocked.

There have been two main lines of planning, and the schemes following them have been wrecked. The first has been: unite the two churches into one union, such as existed prior to 1844; forget the past; come together once more on equal terms. Some of the leaders of the Methodist Episcopal Church have gone so far as to offer equal representation in the unified General Conference and on the great boards. But the Methodist Church, South, is afraid of direct union because her membership is approximately half of that which the Methodist Episcopal Church has. The Southern church demands the "protection of minorities." This conception of union which is so attractive to us cannot succeed.

The second scheme was laid on the shelf at our Des Moines General Conference. The basis of this plan was the reorganization of Methodism by dividing the entire two churches into regional Conferences, including racial distinctions. Our Methodism rejected this plan because it perpetuated division, and even accentuated it. The laboriously worked-out paper, transmitted but not recommended, by the joint commissioners, was never presented directly to our General Conference for a vote. The special committee found it impractical, and proposed a joint convention to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the purpose of further study. The Hot Springs General Conference of our sister church appointed a new commission on unification and gave these men practically complete freedom for action. But neither the Des Moines General Conference nor the Hot Springs General Conference attempted to offer a single suggestion as to a possible new plan by which the two churches might come together. Seemingly the two great branches of Methodism have reached an impasse, although commissions on unification are in the field. Unless those commissions can find some new way of procedure, there is little use of their meeting jointly. Old plans have passed away.

The Surrender of Sovereignty Difficult.

The crux of the whole situation is the surrender of sovereignty. Human nature is so constituted that no General Conference will ever vote itself out of entire existence. Men are tenacious of power already within their grasp. This is the fundamental principle to be kept in mind: How can we manage to secure the surrender of sovereignty?

In secular affairs, nations have surrendered their sovereignty mostly after bitter conflicts when the victor seized upon the reins of power formerly possessed by the conquered peoples. Occasionally nations have merged by intermarriage of their potentates, but even these unions have been cemented by bloodshed on the battle-field. These methods, one need hardly remark, are totally out of the range of possibility for Christian organizations.

Where and when did any sovereign entities yield their powers peacefully? We need look no farther than our own thirteen States in forming the federal government. These thirteen States were each sovereign in their own right prior to the adoption of the Constitution. They had their own laws, their own officers, their own coinage, and every other attribute of an independent civic community.

But for certain restricted purposes, they gave up small portions of their sovereignty to the new federal government. They did not yield all. They relinquished only a little at the beginning. The congress of the United States acts only on delegated authority. Within certain well-defined limits, congress is supreme, but beyond those limits the States are still supreme. The States have renounced claims to small bits of sovereignty one at a time.

A Supreme General Conference with Limited Powers.

The example of the thirteen States in forming a federal congress with restricted powers could be followed by the two Methodisms. What we propose is a Supreme General Conference, supreme in matters freely surrendered to it, but having no power over anything else.

Necessarily at the beginning the two great churches would be willing to surrender only very small portions of important business to this Supreme General Conference. But with the passage of time, one item after another of church affairs would be handed over to this new body, until for all practical purposes the two great Methodisms would be actually united. This process might require a century.

What might be some of the first matters of importance to grant to the Supreme General Conference? Undoubtedly the chief irritation between the two Methodisms is found in the location of churches. The Supreme General Conference might be given the power to pass legislation dealing with this unbrotherly and troublesome issue, and power also to enforce that legislation. Our joint commissions on comity have amounted to little, because the men on the commissions could report back to their respective church conferences. These commissions on comity have lacked "teeth." Let the Supreme General Conference have control of this question, as the congress of the United States has complete legislative authority over the army and navy. This organization could appoint committees to carry out its will, and also sit as a judicial body in case of appeal. We predict that if this single issue were thus settled, the work of God would go forward by leaps and bounds. Foreign and home missions, education, hospitals, publishing interests, Conference claimants, etc., could easily be handled by the Supreme General Conference.

Troublesome questions, like the position of the Negro, could await a more favorable time for action, and meanwhile the colored members of the Methodist Episcopal Church could continue on just the same basis.

During the future both General Conferences, as now organized, would practice their usual method of electing bishops and other officials, and legislating on hundreds of vital matters not delegated to the Supreme General Conference. Just as the States of the United States have their own legislatures, even though congress is kept rather busy, so the General Conferences would have a place in which to work and still be supreme in their own field.

Suggested Method of Organizing the Supreme General Conference.

Let it be distinctly understood that, in presenting a suggested method of organizing this new judicatory body, the major idea of some Supreme General Conference must not be placed in jeopardy. The basic conception must be given consideration. The details working out that conception will undoubtedly meet with varying opinions and opposition. These remarks following are only tentative, and made for the purpose of clarifying further the main idea.

Let us hark back to the formation of the United States federal government. Before the States were willing to concede a part of their sovereignty to the central government, they demanded that two different bases of representation be allowed: one on the basis of population, and the other on the basis of State units. Consequently we have the house of representatives, to safeguard large populations, and the senate, to safeguard the State principle.

Because of the disproportionate size of the two Methodisms, our own Methodist Episcopal Church will be interested in a representation based on membership. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will be equally interested in a representation based on church-organization units. Just as our fathers in the Constitutional Convention found no way of co-ordinating these two conceptions except by providing for two houses of congress, so the two Methodisms will have to face the same plan.

I suggest that the "senate" part of the Supreme General Conference be composed of 100 [illegible] fifty each from the General Conferences [illegible] churches. These fifty might well be [illegible] twenty-five ministerial and twenty-five lay delegates, with the possibility of having [illegible] the number. These delegates should be elected to serve for eight years, so as to give great stability to the body. In order to start on the organization, half of them would be elected for four years, with an eight-year term following thereafter. The bishops of both Methodisms would be nonvoting members of the "senate," with the privilege of the floor, and probably could act as presiding officers.

We suggest that the "house of representatives" [illegible] General Conference be elected by the regular General Conferences, the number of delegates being based on the total membership in the entire church. Perhaps Annual Conferences might be asked to do the electing. The "house" should be at least three or four times as large as the "senate" and serve only [illegible]. The possibility of choosing a Negro [illegible] members of the Supreme General Conference must be admitted; but this will not be a [illegible] task, since like-kind Negro representation has already been practically conceded by our Southern brethren in the past negotiations.

The body would of necessity move slowly—like congress does. But slowness will give safety. The Supreme General Conference will never legislate on a subject until given free authority to do so. In practice the "house" would probably initiate the most of the legislation, and the "senate" would accept or reject, or offer amendments.

The time of assembling is a difficulty, since the two General Conferences now meet four year apart, but each in the middle of the other's quadrennium. But such a small item could be easily handled in case the churches really desire unification.

This way out to unification is offered to the church for discussion, prayer, and development. The chief conception can be retained, even though the minor details are all radically altered.—Western Christian Advocate.

ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE ANNOUNCES ATTITUDE ON LIQUOR ON SHIPS.

National Anti-Saloon League officials at the Regional Conference at Atlanta gave out the following statement as to the position of the League relating to the sale and possession of beverage intoxicants on ships on the high seas. The statement was signed by Bishop James Cannon, Jr., Purley A. Baker, Wayne B. Wheeler, Ernest H. Cherrington, Howard H. Russell, Prof. H. B. Carre, and unanimously indorsed by the superintendents and delegates from the Southeastern States:

1. The League reaffirms its policy to have the prohibition law enforced within the territory subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. Ships carrying the American flag have been held to be American territory, and the laws of the nation apply thereto.

2. Inasmuch as the United States Supreme Court held it to be illegal to transport beverage intoxicants on any ship within the three-mile limit, and our treaties require that we treat the ships of all nations alike, we favor the adoption of a law to exclude all ships selling or possessing beverage intoxicants on the high seas from entering our ports, thus putting foreign vessels and American vessels on the same basis in this regard so far as it is legally possible to do so.

3. Rum-pilot ships hovering on the three-mile limit border are a menace to law enforcement, and we favor extending the jurisdiction of the United States beyond the three-mile limit far enough to make it impracticable for these rum-running vessels to conduct their nefarious traffic.

There is no happiness in having and getting, but only in giving. Half the world is on the wrong scent in the pursuit of happiness.—Henry Drummond.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

It was our privilege to preach the commencement sermon at Elizabeth, La. We found a unique system of school buildings, consisting of various bungalows with a main auditorium at the end. The graduating class was large and interesting.

The Methodist people of Elizabeth had a beautiful church presented to them for worship by the Industrial Lumber Co. Dr. Geo. S. Sexton preached the dedicatory sermon on the third Sunday in June.

We will get fine boys from the town of Elizabeth for Centenary College.

We assisted the pastor, Rev. J. F. Waltman, in revival services. Large crowds attended the services and there were six accessions to the church. But the main work was done in reviving the membership and organizing them for a larger service in the town of Elizabeth.

Roger W. Babson has said: "We must put religion back into education. This country owes what is worth while to the fact that our ancestors came to America three hundred years ago largely for the purpose of bringing up their children in the fear of God. Our public school system and the government were the products of religion."

Emphasis upon the need of at least a common school education for every American citizen was a feature of the Chicago Convention of the National Association of Superintendents, which has attracted much favorable comment in the newspapers all over the country.

It is becoming gerenally recognized that a democratic government must combat ignorance and illiteracy as its most dangerous foes. The statement made by Dr. Graves, New York State Commissioner of Education, to the effect that only forty per cent of school children in this country complete the eighth grades of common schools and only eight per cent complete high school courses, calls forth serious consideration. So that the question of the hour with us as a nation is the problem of education.

President Harding has taken his stand for a Federal Department of Education with a Secretary in the President's Cabinet. Those who have seen the President recently, however, both those favorable and those opposing pending Federal legislation on education, have been given clearly to understand that the administration will recommend to the Congressional Committee on Reorganization the creation of a "Department of Education and Welfare," in which education shall have the first place, and that the extension of Federal aid for the promotion of certain phases of education will be conceded. This will, no doubt, mean the passing of the Towner-Sterling Bill in due time, if the Jesuitical influence can be kept from defeating it.

The payment of your Christian education pledge is always in order. The cold and hardening love of gain has eaten the joy of giving out of a number of hearts. Avarice may make a man of splendid talents thoroughly mercenary and unscrupulous. The payment of your pledge will help you to keep religious. Don't neglect to do what you know you ought to do. Pay up now.

ALBERT S. LUTZ,
Conf. Secty. of Education.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

Near the manse which the people of the church and town have builded for the wayfarer is a row of cottonwoods. Their leaves are quivering and dancing fairy dances under the touches of the morning breeze. Only slender leaf-stalks hold the rustling greenery to the twigs, and so thousands of sound waves are flung abroad, falling on the ear like faltering rain-drops. There might have been some trees, like unto cottonwoods or aspens, along the numerous highways which the great apostle traveled, for he wrote of some that were "tossed about and moved by every wind of doctrine." I think these had a slender thread of faith by which they were clinging to the tree of life and were easily shaken and possibly made much useless noise in the churches. I am glad the Master chose a vine as his symbol of life. Vine leaves quiver but little and have strong leaf stems, and are so thick and close that they shelter and shield one another. The things which cannot be shaken are the saving grace of life and character. No man can move a world to action who is himself easily moved. The very essence of true heroism lies just here—in a wise discrimination to know right things and an unchangeable purpose to do them.

The sinner and his sin—how can one separate the quality from the man? Pity the sinner yet condemn the sin? Who ever saw or noted sin apart from the sinner. Sin is not a mere abstract principle floating about in space, disconnected and vague. It is a concrete evil, something more than missing the mark; it is hitting the mark of badness. Here is where such dreamers as Mrs. Eddy make mistakes. Sin lies in action, in conduct, in doing the evil thing, and is so closely wedded to the individual that only an Almighty power can part them asunder. Sin is vastly more than a "mortal error," infinitely more than a mistake; it is lawlessness, anarchy in the kingdom of God. The publican and sinner, eager and anxious to turn from sin, found mercy and tolerance with our Lord, but he blasted the Pharisee with the breath of his scorn, because he was wedded to his pretentious sin.

Original, actual, in inherited nature, or in transgression of divine law, the alarming fact is, sin is here and we have to deal with its expression in the lives and character of men and women; and this expression is seen in the wide unrest and fearsome conditions of society in countries across the sea, and in lurid violations of law and order in our own land. There is only one remedy—the saving grace of Christ. Preach the gospel, be instant, constant, faithful, in season, out of season. Men's plans and ways are failing. In God's way it can not fail.

Oh, it was hot! Not warm, as some nice folks would say, but hot. When Farenheit ranges about ninety, warm is too mild an expression. The dust lay thick in the roads, and our spirits lay in the dust. Energy descended to zero, though the mercury rose to heights, and the heat waves glimmered and danced. The few clouds which flung their trails of promise over the sky were drunk by the famished air and merged into the blue of the vast arch above. Then a morning came after a muggy, close night, when nature called for rest and surcease. The negro sexton said yesterday the clouds were too "high;" today they are "low," nearer to earth, hugging the horizon. Distant thunder calls on the floating mists to condense, eager winds drive the far-flung clouds, and the rain comes sweeping onward, bearing in its march life and joy to all things animate.

I have a friend who, when one may ask concerning his welfare, replies, "I am better." Out of the good comes the better; out the better, the best. After the drought, the rain; after the rain, the harvest; after the voyage, home. Here is a good place to stop.

STATEMENT OF THE JOINT COMMISSION ON UNION AND FEDERATION OF THE CHURCH OF THE UNITED BRETHREN AND THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

Actuated by the inspirations of common theological beliefs and much alikeness in church polity, as also by the desire to reach larger fruitage in the kingdom of Christ on earth by co-ordinating church activity and service, we, the representatives of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Church of the United Brethren in Christ, have found profit and delight in fellowship and acquaintance. We are not rushing into any premature abandonment of the essential programs of either of the denominations, but on the contrary we have deepening purpose to carry forward our respective programs to victorious consummations. In the meantime we are agreed to exchange fraternal visitations on selected church occasions within both connections with a view to acquaintance, mutual appreciations, and a study of the doctrines and church methods of both bodies. We desire to follow with an open mind the guidance of the Holy Spirit as to any further approaches and fellowship of our churches, with the faith that God has in the past given us the tie of similar origins and parallel ministries through Bishops Asbury and Otterbein, that He is now discovering to us great common and uplifting purposes of better and more efficient service to our churches, our country, and the world. It shall be our wish and purpose to conduct our operations with constant reference to the advantages of co-operation in such aspects of our church life as may well be brought under the principles and methods of approved co-ordination. We shall follow only as He, the great Head of the whole church, may lead. We shall find pleasure in a full acquaintance as to our doctrinal resemblances and be governed by divine sovereignity as nearly as we are able to discover and conform to that sovereignty. Appreciating the glory of the Gospel of Christ in which we have a measure of trusteeship, we shall follow the pillar of fire by night and the pillar of cloud by day.

In consonance with the foregoing statement the following resolutions were adopted by the Joint Commission:

1. That we authorize the chairman of the two Commissions in consultations to call the next meeting and arrange its program.

2. That we authorize and instruct the chairman of the two Commissions to arrange for an exchange of speakers at conferences and other church meetings, so far as they may be able to do so, for the purpose of cultivating mutual acquaintance and coming to mutual understandings.

3. That we recommend that the chairman of each Commission appoint a Committee of three to study the points of likeness and difference between the two denominations and that we suggest that these Committees meet for such consultation as they may find necessary.

4. That a Joint Committee composed of the Chairman and Secretaries of the two Commissions be appointed to frame a statement for the press.

STAND FOR THE LAW.

Dear Dr. Carley: In a recent issue of the Literary Digest there appeared a picture of one of the members of the Cabinet of the President of the United States, as he appeared at the time and place where he delivered a speech.

This member delivered himself as being in favor of the modification of the Eighteenth Amendment so as to admit the manufacture and sale of light wines and beers. I think some one should put in motion a movement that the church, the Sunday school, and other moral and civic organizations hold meetings and pass resolutions requesting the President of the United States to request the said member to hand in his resignation. When he took the position he holds he took an oath to support and enforce the laws of the nation, and not to do all he could to abrogate and nullify the laws.

It seems to me that it is a disgrace to the nation that such a man should hold so high a place of honor as he does.

I suggest that Anti-Saloon leaders of each State start a movement that will have the nation to speak out on this situation. It has seemed to me that in some way our government has been sort of flirting with this question, anyway, and it is time that we see that it is stopped. Every sacred interest of the nation demands that it be stopped; the material, the civic, the moral, and all the most sacred interests of the home call for the enforcement of the law.

It is as true as the truth that in many places the officials of the State are in league with these lawless bootleggers, and are only playing to the interests of these wild-catters and bootleggers—I mean those whom the United States has in charge of the enforcement of the law. I am so well satisfied that that is the case if I were to see it with my own eyes I would not be more convinced of it.

SOME NON-EDITORIAL COMMENTS AND SUGGESTIONS.

By Rev. E. M. Evans.

Anent the matter of preachers and preaching: Some sermons are shop-made and some are made in the field; some of them have the odor of books and the dust of shop; others are fresh but green. The best are none too good, and the poorest are not all bad. There is something in the matter of public worship, if lost by neglect or absence, that can never be regained. It's an element of character that comes alone from worsbip with the multitudes—communion in fellowship. Going to church is a good habit.

Some things the preacher ought to know: He should know Him by whom he is called and sent; he ought to know his message—what it is he is talking about; be should know himself, his powers and limitations; but most of all, perhaps, he should know those to whom he speaks. The world's Master of assemblies, the greatest Teacher and wisest Statesman never made a mistake on any of these vital points. He drew the unnumbered multitudes to the lake shore, to the mountainside or to the wilderness. "Who is it talking? By what authority is he speaking? To whom is he talking? What is he talking about?

Christianity in worship is beautifully divine. It is inspirational and soul-lifting. It gives visions and clarifies spiritual ideals. It is the foundation of godliness and holiness of life. It is both natural and inspired. All men in their normal state worship something some time. Men ought to worship God. Christianity in doctrine, in teaching, is vital to religious truth and true knowledge of God and man. Salvation is not of igrorance. Unmitigated ignorance is sin. A man may be responsible for not knowing. The true religious teacher is the world's greatest teacher and statesman. But greatest of all is CHRISTIANITY IN ACTION—"He that doeth the will of my father which is in heaven." The final test of the church and the religious life is not what you get, or what you teach, but what you do and what manner of people you are.

BISHOP AINSWORTH IN NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

Dear Brother Carley: Bishop W. N. Ainsworth dedicated our church at Sledge, Miss., on Monday night, July 17. He was greeted by a fine audience and delivered a masterly sermon from 1 Timothy 4:8. Besides the pastor and presiding elder, Rev. J. H. Holder was present at the dedicatory service. Much regret was expressed that Rev. F. H. McGee, under whose direction this house of worship was constructed, was not in attendance. Brother McGee is at Junaluska where he is taking a brief vacation.

On Tuesday, July 18, at 11 a. m., Bishop Ainsworth dedicated our church at Pope. Though the weather was threatening, more people were present than could be seated, and the discourse, which was of an unusually high order, held the rapt attention of all. Among those in attendance were Rev. T. M. Bradley, Rev. L. P. Wasson, Rev. J. D. Wroten, and Rev. N. D. Guerry. Following the service, an elegant dinner was served in the school building, a short distance away. The occasion was a most happy and profitable one, and will no doubt long be remembered hy the people at Pope and in the surrounding communities.

From Pope, the Bishop came to Sardis, where he was scheduled to preach on Tuesday night. It rained most of the afternoon, and the muddy roads and streets kept many away; but the service, notwithstanding, was a helpful and inspiring one. Immediately thereafter, an informal reception was held at the hospitable home of Mr. E. L. Howry, where the Bishop was being entertained, that the Methodists of Sardis might have the pleasure of meeting him—a privilege which they thoroughly appreciated and enjoyed.

Bishop Ainsworth delighted the people of the three communities that he visited by his spiritual and eloquent preaching, his genial personality, and his unfailing courtesy. The unanimous feeling of those who heard and met him is that Mississippi Methodism is most fortunate in having him as its General Superintendent, and that much may be expected from his leadership.

Sardis, Miss. R. A. MEEK.

ACTION OF THE COMMITTEE ON TEMPERANCE AND SOCIAL SERVICE.

At a meeting of the Committee on Temperance and Social Service of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held at Lake Junaluska on July 9, 1922, the following action was taken:

1. The Commission endorsed the position taken by the Anti-Saloon League of America: that the prohibition law be enforced within all territory subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, including ships carrying the American flag and especially ships under the control of the United States Shipping Board; approving the adoption of legislation excluding all ships selling or possessing beverage intoxicants on the high seas from entering our ports, such legislation to comply with our treaties which require that we treat the ships of all nations alike, thus putting foreign and American vessels on the same basis in this regard as far as it is legally possible to do so; approving the adoption of the Sterling Amendment extending the jurisdiction of the law enforcement officials to eighteen miles from the coast of the United States to prevent the smuggling of liquor into the United Staes. The liquor traffic though outlawed and a criminal before the law, is as desperate, defiant and murderous as it has always been. The legislation proposed above will surely meet the approval of all who really desire the effective enforcement of the Prohibition Amendment. Our people are urged to write their Senators and Congressmen requesting their support of this legislation.

2. This Commission has read with amazement the statements attributed to Hon. John W. Weeks, the Secretary of War of the Unied Sates, in the secular press. We have waited to see whether Secretary Weeks would repudiate these press reports of his speech to the graduates of the Pennsylvania Military College at Chester. As he has not done so, it is fair to suppose that ho was correctly reported by the press.

We condemn these utterances of Secretary Weeks as ill-timed, as unsupported by facts, and as an appeal for practical nullification of the Constitution of the United States, which he has sworn to defend. It was ill-timed to attack the Constitution of the United States in an address to a body of students. The declaration that there is "a general sentiment in favor of an amendment to the Volstead Act," that "the people want beer and light wine," are sweeping, reckless statements for which no proof is presented. Doubtless many people, like Secretary Weeks, who have always opposed prohibition, "want beer and light wines," but the declarations that "the people want beer and light wines" is a contemptous dismissal of the sentiment of the great mass of the moral citizenship of the nation which is unbecoming in a high official of the people, all of whom he is supposed to represent. Finally, it is a distinct declaration in favor of nullification of the Eighteenth Amendment, which prohibits the manufacture and sale of all "intoxicating" beverages. It is undeniable that light wine is intoxicating and so is the beer, which is wanted by the people to whom Secretary Weeks refers. To authorize its manufacture and sale would nullify the plain provision of the Constitution, and yet a Cabinet officer goes out of his way to advocate such nullifying legislation.

We appeal to the President of the United States to request the members of his Cabinet to refrain from public utterances which by implication, if not directly, favor the nullification of the Constitution. Every citizen has the right to advocate the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, but no officer of the government has the right to openly advocate a policy of nullifying the Constitution, which he has sworn to uphold and defend.

The Chairman of the Commission is intrusted to communicate this action to President Harding and to send a copy of the same to Senator Morris Sheppard and to Congressman W. D. Upshaw to be presented to both Houses of Congress for entry on the Journal and reference to the proper Committees.

3. The Chairman of the Commission is hereby instructed to communicate, in person, if possible, to the Hon. Charles Evans Hughes, Secretary of State of the United States, the resolution concerning the persecution of the Christians in the Near East, contained in the report of the Committee on Temperance and Social Service of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which report was adopted by the General Conference on May 20, 1922, and which Conference represents in this action the strong conviction of our great Church of approximately two and one-half million members. That resolution was purposely couched in the most sweeping terms, as was also the telegram sent by the Conference to the President of the United Staes on the same subject. The United States will be responsible before future generations and to Almighty God if she fails to stop this persecution and to protect the Christians of the Near East from the cruelties and massacres of the brutal fanatical Turks.

The resolution is as follows:

"The General Conference memorializes the Government of the United States to take whatever steps may be necessary to stop the persecutions, which threaten the complete annihilation of the Christians in the Near East, and to give them such protection as will enable them to reestablish their desolated homes and to support themselves in decency and comfort."

JAMES CANNON, JR.,
Chairman.
F. S. PARKER, Secty.

STRENGTH OF UNDERSTATEMENT.

When a man feels keenly upon any subject he is apt, unintentionally of course, to overestimate the importance of that subject and in his speeches and writings he is apt to resort to tho strongest language which his Christian vocabulary will permit. And if he makes a hobby of the subject, and follows up the study for years, his whole mental horizon will often become filled with it, and his hobby will ride him sometimes with very undesirable results.

One thing that contributes to this result is the applause of those who are like-minded with him, and whose appreciation of his arguments is in direct proportion to their knock-down character. This seems characteristic of most reforms, of politics, and of religious controversies. The crowd is never satisfied until the blood begins to flow, and the man who would fight fairly and never make an overstatement, is not likely to be a popular favorite. There is no doubt that it is popular to "go for" one's opponent with all our strength.

Yet it remains forever true that "wisdom is justified of her children," and the man who is always reasonable, always fair, always more eager to deal justly with his opponent than to win an argument, always willing to give his opponents credit for all the good there is in them, will find that in the end he will be respected alike by friends and enemies, and his words will carry a weight that is never given to those of the man who is less careful of his facts and less courteous to his opponents. The fair fighter is the only fighter who has a right to expect a decent victory, and the victory which is won by unfair tactics always carries dishonor with it.

Most of us have to contend at times and to contend earnestly, and it is no easy lesson to learn to fight fairly; yet we shall find that the man who chooses to understate his cause rather than to overstate it, will acquire an influence with reasonable men that may prove to be invaluable to the cause which he is advocating.—Christian Guardian.

PEP.

Vigor, virility, vim and punch—that's pep;
The courage to act on a sudden hunch—that's pep;
The nerve to tackle the hardest thing,
With feet that climb and hands that cling,
And a heart that never forgets to sing—
That's pep.

Sand and grit in a concrete base—that's pep;
A friendly smile on an honest face—that's pep;
The spirit that helps when another is down,
Knows how to scatter the blackest frown,
That loves its neighbor and boosts for its town—
That's pep.

To say "I will," for you know you can—that's pep;
To look for the best in every man—that's pep;
To meet each thundering knockout blow.
And come back with a laugh, because you know
That you'll get the best of the whole world's show—
That's pep. —Selected.

KIND WORDS.

By Ann K. Robinson.

"I'd like to punch his head!" declared Ralph as his kite tumbled head over tail to the ground. The new boy across the street had just put a stone through it. It went up beautifully that morning, lifting higher and higher, nosing this way and that, while the long white tail zigzagged after it like a big snake in a hurry. Then it reached the end of the string and settled into a steady pull, a dark speck in the clear blue sky, the floating tail always waving to and fro.

Then mother called, and Ralph began taking in the cord, winding it slowly and steadily, while all the time the tugging speck grew larger and lower until Ralph could see the stripes on the beautiful flag. When it was about as high as the schoolhouse the new boy across the street put a stone right through it.

With a sudden summersault the kite fell in great flopping circles, landing upside down with a sickening thud. Gathering it up, Ralph started in, for mother was calling again, and this time her voice sounded sort of cross; but her face softened when she saw the wreck.

"I'll see if it can be patched up," she promised as she spread it out on the ironing-board and pressed the ragged edges smooth.

"All it needs now is a little paste, and when I am through with the ironing, we will see what we can do."

"I'd like to punch his head; I'd show him," repeated Ralph as savagely as a small boy of ten can say it.

"Don't be cross, little man; try kind words, maybe it was only an accident after all," advised mother as she wiped the flushed little face.

As Ralph came back from his errand, the new boy was out again, this time throwing at a tin can on the gatepost. One stone fell short of the mark, another nipped the flap sticking up, and a third sent the can flopping.

"Good shot!" yelled Ralph, forgetting everything but the delightful plop as the can hit the pavement.

The new boy could hardly believe his ears; he came slowly across the street as if half expecting to be driven back.

"You're the right sort," he said when he came up to Ralph, "but I don't want you to think I am quite as bad as I seemed this morning. I didn't mean to spoil your kite, honest; I just naturally throw at everything I see. I can't seem to help it."

"Then mother was right, it was an accident," said Ralph delightedly.

"Mebby you can help me mend it," he added, and ran in after the kite.

When Frank saw the beautiful flag broken into, he felt sorrier than ever.

"I don't know what is the matter with me," he said. "I just can't keep from throwing; I don't know what is going to become of me."

"You can be a baseball player when you grow up," suggested Ralph, and they both laughed.

Together they fixed the kite, and then together they put it back up in the clear blue sky. Frank showed Ralph how to make a bird kite, and they grew to be the best of friends, all because Ralph used kind words instead of cross ones.—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

DO ANIMALS REMEMBER?

By L. E. Eubanks.

I have read an article in which a trapper denies that animals have a real memory. He admitted that most of them knew enough to avoid a trap after an experience or two with it, but contended that this was merely a manifestation of the self-preservation instinct.

The same man cited an instance—not at all unfamiliar—of a dog's refusing to hunt with a man who had kicked him. He said that this, too, was only the instinct of all living creatures to avoid injury.

Animals do have a memory—at least some of them do. The trapper's theory would not explain those many evidences of recollection wherein self-preservation plays no part. I once carried a fox terrier into the house after he had been well-nigh killed by an automobile. His master had just moved into the apartment-house, and I had never seen the dog before that day. We moved away two days later, and I did not see the terrier for over four months. Then one day I passed the house—or was about to do so—when out came that dog, wagging his stubby tail. He jumped all over me, in joyful recognition—and memory.

An amusing story, significant on this subject, is told by my father. As a boy he lived on a farm, and was always a close student of animal nature. The mare he usually drove was old and fat, and would never go faster than a walk unless urged. There were two roads to town, one branching off from the other and a little shorter. It had been old Maud's custom to take this road, of her own volition, until on one occasion a vicious dog barked at her and snapped at her legs. After that the driver had to be on his guard; Maud would speed up when about fifty yards from the turn-off, and try to get by it before she could be restrained. This showed not only memory, but a sense for planning.—Our Dumb Animals.

WHY HE SUCCEEDED.

Some one tells of coming back to the place she had lived in as a child. Passing a fine big house, she read a name on the brass plate upon the door.

"Who is Dr. Joseph Walker?" she asked.

"Why, don't you remember? He lived in a little house close to yours."

"What! Joe Walker who used to pick berries for us in the summer?

"Do you remember anything about him?"

"No, except that my father said the berries Joe picked never had to be gone over a second time, and he never wasted a moment."

"Well, that's just what they say of him now. That's how he has got on."—The Evangelical.

"TIME OUT."

A Good Suggestion.

The bandmaster was approached by one of his company when the country tour started.

"Shall we be having any week-end performances?" the man asked.

"Oh, yes; a number."

"I'm glad of that. I never know what to do with my week-end."

"Why not keep your hat on it?"—Selected.

Every one loved little Johnny. His ready answers were a delight to every one. On his first visit to uncle's farm, after watching with round eyes the milking, he was later questioned by his aunt if he had found out how uncle got milk from the cow.

"Sure," he said. "Uncle gave the cows breakfast food and a drink of water, then he drained their crank cases."—Selected.

FRATERNAL ADDRESS.

the satisfying prevision of abiding results. A short time before his death, in conversation with two of his personal friends, he remarked: "The Lord has been pleased graciously to satisfy me fully that the work will abide." That, indeed, the labors of Otterbein and his associates were not to be in vain, the accumulated results of more than a century testify. Would that they were more abundant!

We count our forces not by multitudes of membership, but rather by the invisible transforming power of the lamp of gospel truth, which we have been endeavoring to send forth to scatter the darkness of the world. Permit me to call attention to the following facts that retarded our early progress in numerical growth. The organization and official naming of the church did not occur until thirty-three years after that memorable Whitsuntide meeting when Otterbein threw his arms about Boehm and tenderly said: "We are brethren." During that period Otterbein and his colaborers gave themselves exclusively to the promotion of the great religious movement that characterized the closing years of the eighteenth century with little or perhaps no thought of organization or of founding a denomination. The call of the church was originally to the German-speaking people. The field, therefore, to which Otterbein devoted his energies was limited as compared to that larger field to which the heroic work of Asbury was given. The language of the law, the government, the literature, and the schools being English, rapid encroachments upon the German tongue were inevitable. Moreover, the denomination, being American in its origin, was at no time strengthened by re-enforcements from the mother country. From the viewpoint of American-born churches, the church of the United Brethren in Christ stands second in numerical strength.

But, my brethren, all these years we have been together in labor. Your labors have been extended very much more widely than ours, but we have been working at the same task and along the same lines. All the while we have felt the quick contact of sympathy and unaffected friendship between us. We believe that the message the church was called and commissioned to proclaim a hundred and more years ago is as urgent and compelling to-day as it was in the days of Asbury and Otterbein. It is as new as the sunbeams that kiss our cheeks and as fresh as the waters that gush from the rocks. Our church has never sent its commission back for revision or amendment. It has entered into a diversity of operations, but it is moved by the same spirit, and as devoutly acknowledges the same Lord, who worketh all in all.

While the church I come to represent is small in numerical strength as compared with some of the tribes that compose the kingdom of our Lord, it is probably not delinquent in the comparative service it is rendering the world. Its membership of about 400,000, with a Sunday school enrollment of 427,000, contributed during the year 1921, for all purposes, $6,037,109. Our United Enlistment Movement of two years ago was the most significant and far-reaching ever planned or achieved by our denomination for the extension of the kingdom of Christ in the earth.

Missionary spirit and endeavor have taken a decided step in advance. As the result of the rapid spread of missionary intelligence missionary offerings have been multiplied fourfold during the last five years. We have missions in Porto Rico, the Philippines, China, Japan and Africa. Our Publishing House has an invested capital of $1,250,000. Our church houses are valued at above $20,000,000. We have eight institutions of learning in the homeland, with training schools in Africa and China. We are now celebrating the diamond jubilee of educational work with a program that looks toward the doubling of its equipment and endowment. Our Sunday schools, with an enrollment twenty per cent above the membership of the church, are a significant section of our educational church work. The best life of the church is found employed in instructing its youth and fitting them for the larger leadership which the coming generation will inevitably demand.

The present year is registering the largest evangelistic results of any single year in our history. Forty thousand have been added to the church during the past six months. With a full faith in God, who has led us in the past, we are facing the future and the tremendous challenge of our new day with a program more worthy of our strength and possibilities as a denomination.

Cynic voices assail the church now as always. It is charged with failure and with being the champion of the obsolete. But it is here. It is the world's only hope. We thank God for the new demonstration which the war has brought of the unshakable foundation upon which our faith is laid; for the clear revelation of the central place which religion holds in the life of man. We have a new appreciation of the adequacy of Christ's program to heal the world's hurt. In all the upheaval and world crash, no truth of Christ has been invalidated. Not one principle of his when tried has failed. The church does not need to change its creed to cure the world. It has always had enough resources to save. Its failure to use them has brought defeat. The gospel of Jesus Christ needed no revision to meet the needs of our boys in the trenches, in the hospitals, or on the gray solitude of the seas. As unchanging as the needs of the human soul are the saving principles of Jesus Christ. He is not exhausted. He has not failed in a world crisis. The race lies prone with cruel wounds because he was not allowed to help.

It is the hour of man's extremity, but the hour of man's extremity is God's opportunity. Conspicuous world leaders voice their alarm in this critical hour and look to the church for help. The tragic events of recent years have shaken the very foundations of our civilization and thrown the whole world into social economic chaos. If a war-broken world is lifted into new life and enduring peace, it will be accomplished through the church. England's greatest statesman declares that "the only institution that stands between society and chaos is the church." No one can in any measure appreciate the tremendous significance of the years just before us without a profound conviction that the measure of service the church gives to the world during the next five years may determine a century of the world's life and character.

And, brothers, it is because we are seeing as never before what a task we have, how much opposition and inertia we have to meet and move, how big the world is and how helpless it is, that you and I, my church and your church, and all the churces are coming together into a blessed fellowship and laying down our little prejudices and non-essential matters, our shibboleths, and clasping hands to give Jesus Christ a chance. It is the task that makes allies. It is the task that binds us in more than a grip of steel.

Great as the tasks that confront us, our grounds for confidence are greater still. Instead of bowing down to worship the tempter when offered all the kingdoms of the world, Jesus dreamed a diviner dream whereby those kingdoms should become the kingdom of God. Many great dreams have haunted the human mind—the ideal republic of Plato, the Augustinian city of God—written when the Eternal City was reeling to its downfall, and modern Utopias not a few; but all of them are dwarfed by the mighty dreams of the kingdom of heaven as it shone in the mind of Jesus. The church he judged and appraised in the light of that sovereign vision. The kingdom is higher than any denomination. The church does not exist for itself, but to promote the kingdom of heaven, to bring the reign of Christ to realization throughout the whole earth. And in the face of that fact the non-essentials that often divide and the rites that make for debate sink into insignificance.

The kingdoms of the world must become the kingdoms of Christ. All the crowns must be placed on his head, and all the trophies must be cast at his feet. But those who occupy positions of leadership have a deepening conviction that if the campaign is to be most successful and the final victory hastened, there must be one roadway of co-operation upon which the Christian forces shall march. We are coming to see the folly of fighting in independent and unsurpported detachments, without concerted action and unity of direction. Co-operation and concentration are in the very air we breathe. The very times complot for its encouragement. There is scarcely a note in the music of the age that does not emphasize it. The cry of to-day is not "To your tents, O Israel," but rather "To the field, O Israel." We who have one Lord have also one enemy. Our enemy is united, compact, aggressive. Shall we not be as wise as he?

While the providential trend of the hour is toward closer co-operation, it is also toward the merging of certain bodies that are one in doctrine, method, and spirit, and are differentiated only by the name. That such mergers would be for the glory of God, and the larger interests of his kingdom there can be no doubt. It would be especially true in case of a union between the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Church of the United Brethren in Christ. I am wondering in these days how Churches like ours are going to answer to God for remaining apart.

Truly we have a common faith and a common fellowship in the Lord Jesus Christ. Union would make possible a new emphasis on the essential factors and sterling principles of doctrine and personal practice for which the fathers of each church have stood and so splendidly emphasized in their lives. We would at once have national representation with a combined force that would be unexcelled in its strength and possibility of achievement.

I wish to say that if, in your wisdom and official capacity, in response to the sincere words which I now speak, and speak with the authority of the Board of Bishops of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ, you should take any steps toward a closer federation or union with that branch of the Church of Jesus Christ which I have the honor, however unworthy, to represent, you will find a hearty and brotherly response.

The relations between us always have been most cordial, but they have been greatly strengthened during the past year. I am not without the hope that the time is not far distant when the springs which were so near to each other in their origin and so like in the healing character of their waters may flow together in a river which shall make glad the city of God.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

We regret to learn that Mrs. E. N. Broyles, wife of our pastor at Clarksdale, Miss., died in Memphis on Sunday, July 16. Our sympathy is extended to the bereaved.

Prof. G. R. Bennett, superintendent of the Methodist Sunday school at Durant, Miss., is one of the instructors in a Normal School now in session at West Point, Miss. In his absence, Mr. R. J. Deckard is acting as superintendent of the Sunday school.

A fine Teacher-Training Class has been organized in the Sunday school at Durant, Miss., with nineteen enrolled. They are studying "The Pupil," and will soon be ready for their examination. The pastor, Rev. R. P. Neblett, is the instructor, and good progress is being made.

A card from Rev. H. C. Castles, of Long Beach, Miss., says that he, Mrs. Castles and children had reached Monteagle, Tenn., during the past week, in their Ford, and that they were finding it a great place to be. Brother Castles was enjoying "Mission Week," and was taking a special course.

We learn from "Methodist Matters," the weekly bulletin of the churches at Coahoma and Lyon, Miss., that substantial improvement on the parsonage of the charge is under way. A sun parlor and a sleeping porch will be added to the building, and some repairs will be made. Rev. Del Longgrear is the pastor.

In a letter dated Vicksburg, July 24, Rev. J. R. Jones, presiding elder of the Vicksburg District, Mississippi Conference, says: "Bishop Ainsworth has appointed Rev. E. D. Simpson pastor of the Oak Ridge charge, which was made vacant by the going of J. B. Cain to Ellisville. Brother Simpson is taking well with the people of Oak Ridge and the work will go forward under his lead."

Dr. T. N. Ivey, the editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, has had as his assistant for the last four years, Rev. R. S. Satterfield. The assistant was elected Associate Editor by the Book Committee, on July 12. Rev. R. S. Satterfield is a member of the West Oklahoma Conference, was a member of the recent General Conference, and is a member of the committee that is to select the place and arrange for the entertainment of the next General Conference.

The Memphis Commercial Appeal of July 24 carried a picture of the new church now under course of construction at Canton, Miss. We learn from Rev. H. A. Gatlin, the pastor, that the church was begun on July 18, and that it is expected to be completed by December 1. The style of the building is the classic, with a fine portico in front. The church will cost from fifty to sixty thousand dollars, and our people at Canton are to be congratulated on this great enterprise.

Rev. S. L. Pope, presiding elder of the Greenwood District, North Mississippi Conference, recently assisted the pastor, Rev. S. C. Yates, in a gracious revival at the McCarley church, the meeting closing on Sunday, July 16. Interest from the first was good, increasing as the days went by, and culminating in a great service at the close, when two hundred and fifty went forward in reconsecration of themselves to God and the church. Many testified that for the first time in their Christian experience they had received a true and satisfying apprehension of things eternal. There were eight accessions to the church.

Through Mrs. G. R. Bennett of Durant, Miss., we learn that in loving appreciation of the splendid work of Mrs. R. P. Neblett in Durant and in consequence of her unfulfilled desire to go as a missionary to China, the members of the two Missionary Societies of the Methodist Church in Durant have assumed the financial responsibility for the two-year course of study at Scarritt Bible and Training School for Miss Kellog, Boyle, Miss. Miss Kellog is a graduate of Whitworth College and of Mississippi State College for Women and has been a teacher for five years. After the completion of the course at Scarritt she will go as a missionary to China.

The Topisaw Camp Meeting near Summit, Miss., will begin on Friday night before the second Sunday in August. Rev. J. L. Decell and Rev. J. A. Wells will do the preaching. Rev. W. A. Terry, of Summit, extends an invitation to all the preachers of the district to be present.

The Bluff Creek Camp Meeting, near Clinton, La., will begin Friday night, August 4, and continue through Sunday, August 13. Rev. Charles W. Crisler, D.D., pastor of First Methodist Church, Baton Rouge, and Rev. J. W. Lee, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, have been engaged to do the preaching and large results are expected. The music will be in charge of a good song leader. Rev. C. D. Atkinson, Sunday School Field Secretary of the Louisiana Conference, will also be present and will have an hour each day with the young people. The grounds are pleasantly situated in East Feliciana parish, the restaurant and hotel are under competent management and the meeting should draw a large attendance.

Rev. H. H. Ahrens is now Circulation Manager of the Circulation Department of the Publishing House, Lamar and Barton, Agents. Brother Ahrens was for eight years circulation manager for the old Picayune, morning daily of this city, later merged with the Times Democrat, and he is eminently fitted for the work to which he has been called. Besides the practical experience necessary, Brother Ahrens brings to his new work the ambition to do his utmost to place our literature in the homes of our people. Being a native of New Orleans, a member of the Louisiana Conference for a number of years, and since that time a local preacher in our church, and being always present at our Annual Conferences and church gatherings to report the proceedings for the press, and having been now for some time connected with the Education Campaign and publicity of our church, there is no man who has a wider acquaintance, not only in our patronizing territory, but throughout the church, and he is a man well qualified for the work into which he has entered.

MISS BENNETT GOES TO HER REWARD.

At her home in Richmond, Ky., on July 20, Miss Belle H. Bennett, beloved President of the Woman's Missionary Council, died after an extended illness of some months.

The women of Southern Methodism will feel her loss deeply, and reverence her memory.

Many good works remain as a monument to her untiring zeal, perhaps the most notable of which was the establishment of Scarritt Bible and Training School at Kansas City, Mo. Her latest achievement was the bringing together of woman's missionary boards in America for the establishment of a training school for nurses in Shanghai, China.

Dear women, let us cover her bier with roses of love and esteem, and flowers of hope and courage for the expansion of those deeds which shall make many throughout home and other lands recall her life of service with a prayer of thanksgiving on their lips and grateful recollections in their hearts.

Mrs. J. G. SNELLING.

JUNALUSKA SUMMER SCHOOL OF MISSIONS AND MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

Everything is in readiness for the Summer School of Missions and Missionary Conference, to be held at Lake Junaluska, North Carolina, July 28-August 6, inclusive. The new Missions building is completed and is ready for occupancy. It is an unusually attractive building and all those who attend this summer school will find that the entertainment which it will afford will be most delightful and highly satisfactory, and at very reasonable rates. The building will be dedicated on July 30, at 4 p.m. This service will be a very attractive one and should bring many to Junaluska.

Dr. Andrew Sledd, of the School of Theology, Emory University, Atlanta, Georgia, will deliver the first series of platform addresses the week-end of July 28-30. This series will be one of the outstanding features of the summer school.

An unusual and most interesting event in connection with this summer school will be the consecration of deaconesses at the morning service, August 6. Certain changes were made in the discipline at our recent General Conference which make it possible for a number of graduates from Scarritt Bible and Training School to be consecrated at this time. Bishop Mouzon will be in charge of this service.

The opening address will be at 8 p. m., July 28, and all those who wish to take the work should be present at that time. Announcement of courses by the members of the faculty will be made at this meeting.

An unusually able faculty and attractive series of courses of study have been provided. A new feature of the school this year is that those attending it will have the opportunity of taking two courses instead of one. One may be taken for credit and another as a cultural course.

From every angle, this promises to be the greatest Summer School of Missions and Missionary Conferences that our Church has ever held.

PRAYER MEETING ATTENDANCE.

Following are the reports of prayer meeting attendance last week: Algiers, C. C. Wier, pastor, 38; Lafayette, Leon I. McCain, pastor, 65; Ruston, N. E. Joyner, pastor, 29; Jackson, B. D. Watson, pastor, 14; Epps, 65.

THANKS TO OUR FRIENDS.

We are grateful to the following friends who have sent us two or more subscriptions to the Advocate: Rev. L. F. Alford, Laurel, Miss., 4; Rev. B. P. Fullilove, Golden, Miss., 7; Rev. C. F. Emery, Fayette, Miss., 5; Rev. W. H. Giles, Slidell, La., 2; Rev. A. M. Shaw, Oakdale, La., 12.

STEWARDSHIP AND TITHING LITERATURE.

It is the verdict of leaders in other churches that no church is sending out better Stewardship and Tithing literature than our own. Requests have come from Departments of Stewardship of other denominations asking for the privilege of reprinting certain of the publications of our Department of Stewardship, and such requests, of course, have been granted.

There must be no let-up in the matter of instruction of our people in this obligation, but rather a more intensive campaign to secure tithing pledges. The Southern Baptists are now in a campaign to secure 500,000 tithers, and the reports in Baptist papers are to the effect that the movement goes forward with the promise of success. This number is far beyond the goal reached by Southern Methodism, but there is no reason why we cannot do as well. Stewardship and Tithing literature such as was used during the Centenary and Christian Education campaigns is available for use by pastors and lay workers. It will be sent free of charge on application to the Missionary Centenary, Centenary Building, Nashville, Tenn., and in such quantities as you may request. Get this literature, either for your own use or for distribution in your church.

Men show best their characters in trifles, where they are not on their guard. It is in insignificant matters, and in the simplest habits, that we often see the boundless egotism which pays no regard to the feelings of others and denies nothing to itself.—Schopenhauer.

Obituaries

Obituaries not over 200 words in length will be published free of charge. All over 200 words must be paid for at the rate of 1 cent a word. Count the words and be sure to send the amount necessary with the obituary. That will save trouble all around. We cannot make discriminations. Memorial resolutions are subject to the same rule as obituaries.

Died, in the sanitarium at Monroe, La., June 28, 1922, after a short illness, Mrs. VERNA McCULLIN, wife of Rev. P. B. McCullin. She died as she had lived, in full assurance of faith in Him who doeth all things well. Sister McCullin was 30 years of age, a member of the M. E. Church, South, and had only a few short months before her death taken upon herself the cares of a parsonage life. In those months she had filled her mission well, ever faithfully standing by her young husband in all his work. She leaves a husband and two small children, besides a host of relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. We can only say to them, "Look, sad hearts, and cease repining; behind the clouds the sun's still shining, and your loss is her eternal gain."

In yonder world I know she lives;
She wears the robe that Jesus gives.
Some happy day, when life is o'er,
We'll rest with her on heaven's shore.

ONE WHO KNEW HER.

Hilly, La.

MRS. BERTA CALDWELL HARRIS was born August 22, 1889, at Hico, La.; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Harmony Chapel when ten years of age; was married to W. H. Harris, February 9, 1913, and passed from this life while at Highland Sanitarium, Shreveport, La., June 4, 1922. Funeral services were conducted at the Methodist church, Bernice, La., of which she was a member and burial followed in the town cemetery. Mrs. Harris was a faithful Christian woman, radiating from her nature, in home church and community life, those qualities of character which are consistent with Him who said, "I am the light of the world." Can anything grander be said of any one? And while we are sad because of her departure and will miss her bodily presence here, let us bow in submission to God's will and realize the truth that she lives and is safe in the Father's hands, who doeth all things well, and who will somewhere turn godly sorrow and grief into joy. God bless and comfort these of the family who remain.

O. L. TUCKER, Pastor.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas our heavenly Father has seen fit in His infinite wisdom to call to her reward MRS. ELIZABETH WILLIAMS; and whereas the patient and beautiful life lived among us by this good woman deserves commendation; the steadfastness of her faith, the loyalty of her love, make her memory a blessed inspiration to those who knew her; therefore be it resolved:

1. That we, the members of this third quarterly conference of Evansville and Dubbs charge, are grateful that the beautiful life of this noble woman was planted in our midst, here to bear fruit that attest her strength of character, her sweetness of nature, and her Christlikeness of spirit.

2. That to the family, whose center she was, we express our appreciation of their rich heritage in her, and extend to them our deepest sympathy in this, their hour of grief.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication, and be spread upon the minutes of this quarterly conference.

Signed by her pastor,
C. T. FLOYD.

MRS. MATTIE STARR WILLIAMS.

Mrs. Mattie Starr Williams, wife of Rev. W. M. Williams, died at the Purvis Methodist parsonage Sunday morning, July 9, 1922.

The death of Mrs. Williams brought sorrow to many here and throughout Mississippi, where her life for the last thirty years, in which she had been a faithful co-worker with her husband, Rev. W. M. Williams, a minister of the Mississippi Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, touched and blessed thousands who came under the ministerial care of her husband, who ever found in her a faithful co-pastor.

Fitting tribute to the life of such a Christian as Sister Williams is beyond the limitations of a brief obituary. Memory of her beautiful life, noble deeds and unselfish service, will find its highest and most lasting tribute in the lives of those upon whom that life had its most direct bearing. This is true of the young and of those subjects of suffering and sorrow in every community and station in which, as the wife of an itinerant minister, she was called to serve. It is particularly true of that large body of orphan children who came under the care of the Mississippi Orphaus' Home, Jackson, during the nine years Brother and Sister Williams directed the affairs of that Methodist institution.

Being a woman of cultured mind, she was also skilled in those feminine qualities which made the Methodist parsonage a real home and lent suggestions of beauty, blessing and bounty, whenever that parsonage gave hospitable shelter and bountiful board to visiting preacher or other friend.

It is not hyperbole, but literal truth, to say that heaven is richer, earth poorer since Sister Williams has changed the habiliments of earth for the apparel of heaven.

Born in Brandon, Miss., 63 years ago, Mrs. Williams was reared there and at Fannin, Rankin County, Miss., where her father, J. P. Starr, lived for many years. She was married to W. W. Williams in Deeember, 1880, and when he joined the Methodist itinerant ministry twelve years later, entered heartily with him into all the vicisitudes of that life of Christian servce.

Mrs. Williams is survived by her husband, pastor of Purvis Methodist Church, their son, Frank Starr, holding a prominent business station at Teintsin, China; Keith, their youngest son, of Jackson, Miss.; Mrs. Bebe Calhoun, their eldest daughter, of Mt. Olive, Miss., and their youngest daughter, Mrs. Lillian Beanland, the wife and co-worker of Rev. Gayle C. Beanland, missionary of the Presbyterian church in the Camaroon District, West Africa. Her only living sister, Mrs. H. D. Tinnin, of Fannin, Miss., survives. Her niece, Miss Gladys Tinnin, was a ministrant to her aunt from the beginning of the fatal illness.

R. L. BENNETT.

A CARD OF THANKS.

We wish to thank the good people of Monroe, La., one and all, through the columns of the Advocate for their kindness to us duriug the late sickness and death of our beloved wife and daughter. Words fail to express, or tongue to tell, the deep gratitude we feel to every one who in any way helped us during our short stay in the sanitarium. Especially would we make mention of Brother Evans, pastor of the Methodist church of West Monroe, the Bible class, Mrs. Waddill, the Woman's Missionary Union, the Young Peoples' Auxiliary, Mr. Wull Herne, Dr. Graves, and Mrs. Paee for financial aid, and other kindness shown us. May the blessings of Almighty God rest on you all, is our prayer.

Yours for the cause,
Rev. P. B. McCULLIN,
Mrs. N. W. McCULLIN.

Epworth League.

EPWORTH LEAGUE NEWS—LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The following letter received by Mrs. Wynn, our Life Service Superintendent shows very clearly that the good work begun at the Assembly still goes on and that God's spirit is brooding over the hearts of His young people:

"Though it has only been a little over a week since we were all in Mansfield it seems like a month or more. However, it may be because I have felt such a change come into my life.

"This was not the first year I spent at the Assembly, but never before did I receive such an inspiration as I received this year, and I just feel that my heart is so full of joy I must write and tell you about it. There seemed to be a heavy burden on my heart during the greater part of the Assembly, but now I feel that the fight is done and the victory won; the burden is lifted and I am happy because I have let Jesus come into my heart. I have found my Savior, who has been calling me and I am ready to answer—'Here am I, Lord, send me.'"

"I did not sign a card for life service while in Mansfield. I don't know exactly why; probably just putting it off like many others do, but I have fought it out and prayed it out ever since I returned home. I've read my Bible both morning and night (something I've never done before) and have felt very close to God all this past week and I know that I am ready now and must not delay any longer. My Master needs me and I'm willing to go.

"I am as yet undecided as to the Ministry or Foreign Missions, but would like to start to College this fall, nevertheless. I must start as soon as possible though I know not what school it will be or where the money will come from. I must go for I know that if I trust in the good Lord he will see me through.

"Just a little incident that has made me feel very happy. I went to the Devotional Meeting for the first time in about three months and there I got up and spoke to the Leaguers about the inspiration and joy I had received and the joy they could have if they would only surrender to Christ and I stopped only after many of them had gotten up with tears in their eyes and testified for Christ, acknowledging their errors and expressing their desire to do better. I am never going to let an opportunity pass to do something for Him. I am so happy because I have found my Savior and I feel like I want to go out and tell the whole world of the joy one can find in serving Christ.

"Think of me often, Mrs. Wynn as 'A Life Service Volunteer.'"

Praise God for such a testimony as this and may all who read it breath a prayer that God will mightily bless this Leaguer and help him in choosing just the right path to take.

Appreciation.

The Mansfield Epworth League Assembly this year was composed of one hundred and thirty seriously minded young people who were anxious to prepare themselves for a better service for the Master. The class room work was thorough. The addresses were inspirational, cultural and educational. The social features were uplifting. The personal work caused many of the young people to catch a new vision of the world field. The church at home will receive manifold benefits as a result of the Assembly.

Let us aim to have two hundred young people for next year. Every League ought to be represented and every church ought to have a League.

EPWORTH LEAGUE—NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

SUGGESTED POLICY

Adopted by the Epworth League Cabinet, North Mississippi Conference.

Rev. S. H. Caffey, President.

1. That we hold an Institute in each District during the year.

2. That we seek to perfect our District Organization.

3. That we make a Survey in each District as suggested by the District Secretary's Manual.

4. We further suggest as a part of this policy eloser touch with the Central office at Nashville.

5. That some definite plan be worked out as to the finances, so that each local chapter can make a contribution to the work of the Conference.

6. That we set as a minimum goal five new chapters in each District for this year.

7. That each chapter be furnished a copy of the Conference Policy by the District Secretary.

8. We recommend that a finance committee, composed of the President of the Board, the President and Treasurer of the Conference organizatoin, be appointed to work out a budget for the Conference year, in accordance with Section Five (5) of this policy.

Committee Report.

We, your committee, appointed by the Epworth League Cabinet, in its meeting, July 26, to devise ways and means to finance the North Mississippi Epworth League Conference, and to carry out the policy adopted, beg leave to report:

1. That we ask each local Chapter to pay a Chapter membership fee of $2.50.

2. That a ten cents assessment for each member enrolled, as has been our plan heretofore, be collected on Conference expense fund, to be paid at once to the Treasurer, V. H. Stephenson, Booneville, Miss., and hereafter each year before the first of June.

3. We urge the observance of Young People's Day with an offering which shall be forwarded as soon as collected to the Treasurer as above and that a program for this day be used by pastors in all our churches whether they have Leagues or not.

FROM BACK BAY, BILOXI, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: I have secured for the charge a brand-new Ford car. This is the plan to pay for it: I ask one hundred preachers to send one dollar each, and let each preacher appoint one person in his charge who will give one dollar and who will secure a donation of one dollar from three friends and together with the preacher's dollar and his own dollar send to me or to People's Bank, Biloxi, Miss. If the one hundred preachers will do this, we will have five hundred dollars. That is an easy plan, and no one will be burdened to carry it out.

My first pastoral visit after securing the car was to visit a family where all the people were grown up—the youngest forty years old, the oldest ninety. None of them have ever been members of any church. I am the second preacher that was ever in their home—Brother Allums was there a few years ago to attend the funeral of the aged father. I must have traveled fifteen miles in the car to find these people.

Brethren, help us—we have much to contend with as a church. Send personal check for one dollar or more.

Fraternally, WALDO W. MOORE.

FROM KENTWOOD, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: We noticed your mistake in printing our meeting at Kentwood in last week's Advocate. You reported it as being at Ponchatoula, when it should have been Kentwood; so please explain for the benefit of our people here. We closed out last Friday night. We had a goodly number of conversions and reclamations, with 19 additions on profession of faith and one by certificate. The preaching was of a high order, and Brother Cain made quite a hit with our people, and I am sure they would be glad to have him come again. We can most heartily commend him to any of the brethren who may desire a good spiritual helper.

We have received during the year 40 members, 28 on profession and 12 by letter; so you see the Kingdom is making some advancement. Our Sunday school, under the superintendency of Brother Herbert Broyles, is doing a great work, and bids fair to be the leading Sunday school in the Conference according to size. In all departments we have about 50 more on roll than we have members in the church. Our Missionary Societies, Ladies' Aid, and Epworth League, are all active and are accomplishing much good, and we ask the Advocate and its readers to pray for our continued success.

COULD HARDLY STAND AT TIMES

Hips, Back and Legs Would Have That Tired Ache

Everett, Washington.—"For several years I have had trouble with the lowest part of my back and my hips and my legs would ache with that tired ache. I could hardly stand on my feet at times. I was always able to do my work although I did not feel good. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised and having heard several praise it I decided to try it. I feel first-rate at the present time. It has done wonders for me and I keep it in the house right along. I always recommend it to others who are sick and ailing."—Mrs. J. M. SIBBERT, 4032 High St., Everett, Washington.

To do any kind of work, or to play for that matter, is next to impossible if you are suffering from some form of female trouble. It may cause your back or your legs to ache, it may make you nervous and irritable. You may be able to keep up and around, but you do not feel good.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a medicine for women. It is especially adapted to relieve the cause of the trouble and then these annoying pains, aches and "no good" feelings disappear.

It has done this for many, many women; why not give it a fair trial—now.

The last call for the Columbus District S. T. S. to be held at Ackerman, July 31-Aug. 5. The man in charge of all the interests of the church needs training first and needs it most, because the officers and teachers feel that it is not showing the proper respect for their leaders to go ahead of him. The man next to the Sunday school can do little more than flounder unless he is acquainted with the organization of the school and learns how to administer its affairs. The teacher who stands next to the child blunders blindly in the dark unless she knows something of the child's characteristics and is able to meet the needs of the child the hour she is making an effort to teach. It is for the sake of the little child, so helpless, so dependent, that we plead. It is akin to crime to fail to learn how to treat our own children.

The Greenwood District S. T. S. is to be held at Moorhead, Aug. 14-19. Rev. S. L. Pope, presiding elder of the district, is Educational Director. Rev. W. D. Bennett, pastor of Moorhead, is deeply concerned for the success of the school; for he knows the value of trained teachers and leaders. The roads leading into Moorhead are hard-surfaced and the people within twenty miles can attend the school and return home by the noon hour.

The next school is planned for the Aberdeen District, to be held at Houston, Aug. 28-Sept. 2. Rev. E. E. McKeithen, pastor at Houston, is giving enthuslastic support by writing to the superintendent to send the offering taken on the fifth Sunday in January to pay the expense of this school. The total amount sent to J. E. Stephens, Treasurer, Grenada, Miss., $31.97, is about one-fourth the sum needed to finance such a school. The following schools sent contributions: Nettleton, $5.46; Bellfontaine, $2.05; Vardaman, $4.11; Algoma, $1.99; Maben, $1.56; Woodland, $3.11; Mathiston, $2.50; Randolph, $1; Eupora, $5.40; Calhoun City, $2.40; Nettleton Ct., $1.39.

Brother Murff, pastor of Vardaman circuit, and I drove a Ford car fifty miles over the most outlandish roads recently. We held services at Cross Roads. The people agreed to observe Sunday School Day in the near future. In the afternoon we visited Bethlehem and organized a school that has been taking a vacation for two or three years. Mr. William Streeter is to teach a class of juniors. The adults are to use the Home Department Magazine for their study of the Bible.

It is no wild notion when I say, we need seven men to devote their entire time to the country churches of the Conference. It is all right to help save the world; but how can we send any higher type of religion than we experience, and how can we do much when our people do not know?

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

The School at the Lake is very fine, indeed. We have the best faculty that has ever been gathered here. We are having great lectures and the whole atmosphere is very fine, indeed. We have five from our Conference. I wish there could be more here.

The General Sunday School Board is perfecting a great program of work. I am very happy that they are placing the emphasis on developing Christian character and producing Christian character.

The Elementary workers have perfected an organization that carries their work from the head office right down to the local school without a hitch. This will be perfected by the Key-woman, the group or Sub-District Meetings, the District Elementary Workers' Council.

Our Conference is short the Conference-wide meeting, the Sub-District meetings and the Key-women. The Key-woman is really the most important link, I think, in the chain. She has charge of the Elementary Work in the local school in so far as the reports of that work as a whole to the Workers' Council, and to the Sub-District workers and the Conference workers go. She is to gather all the information and be the one that gives this information out. She also is the one that receives literature and information from the General office, and is the channel through which this information gets to the local school. She also promotes the Standards of the Elementary Departments in her school. This takes from the pastor and superintendent much detail work that is very irksome.

Brother Hull is getting on fine. Pray for him and his work. Help him in the organization of the charges and other work he is promoting.

How about Sunday School Day? Send your offering to Mr. G. M. Lester, P. O. Box 548, Jackson, Miss. If you have not had the day and do not see your way to have a program, you can have a sermon and take an offering and send it in. Above all, pray for the work and workers.

Yours in Him,
JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

DELIGHTFUL OCCASION AT DURANT, MISS.

Under the direction of a special committee of the Woman's Missionary Society of the local Methodist church, an invitation was accepted to attend what was termed "Methodist Day," at the beautiful farm home of Col. and Mrs. Thomas R. King, two miles out of Durant on North Highway.

This has come to be an annual event, and this is the ninth year this hospitable home has opened its doors and asked the friends to be their guests. Tuesday, July 11, was the day so used this year, and 92 guests registered, spending a most excellent time in social conversation, general "Sing Song," and a "good, old-fashioned" picnic dinner out on the lovely lawn, under the trees.

Col. King had erected tables, barbecue style, and a committee received the individual contributions which the housekeepers sent as their share to decorate the festal board, and when dinner was announced the happy party partook of the "eats" before them.

After-dinner speeches were made by Dr. R. C. Elmore, who addressed his remarks to the "Out of Town Guests," who were from Greenwood, Lexington, Acona, Jackson, and Yazoo City; Captain F. A. Howell spoke as a representative of the Veterans present; Capt. W. H. Petty responded to a toast, "Railroad Men;" W. C. Castelberry spoke in the interest of the "Official Board;" Edd Guess responded for the business men, and Mrs. H. C. Hudson, President of the Missionary Society, thanked Col. and Mrs. King for their kindness and invited the men to join their society and become honorary members.

Mrs. T. R. King responded to all these speeches in a most happy manner and invited the guests to be with them again "another year from now." Rev. and Mrs. R. P. Neblett, pastor and his wife, made some appropriate remarks. The day was a genuine delight.

The following auxiliaries were organized during this quarter:

Alexandria District—Olla (adult) and Standard (adult).

Baton Rouge District — Gilead (adult).

Monroe-Ruston—West Monroe (Y. P.), Delhi (Jr.), Oak Ridge (Jr.)

Lake Charles District — Sulphur (adult).

The adult membership shows a decrease of 431 since the first quarter's report. The Young People's an increase of 32 members; the Juniors a decrease of 23 members, and the Baby Division a decrease of 6 members—making a total loss of 460 members during the quarter. This does not mean that they are actually lost but that some secretaries are not sending in reports. Eleven auxiliaries on the Alexandria sent no report, five on the Baton Rouge, five (or all) on the French Mission, five on the Lake Charles, eight on the Monroe-Ruston, ten on the New Orleans, and seven on the Shreveport District.

The Treasurers report $968.34 less than the first quarter of this year and $175 less than the second quarter of last year. We are a little ahead, however, of last year's half year totals.

ORGANIZATION MEETING, WOMAN'S DEPARTMENT—BOARD OF MISSIONS.

The recent General Conference made some changes in the Constitution of the Board of Missions.

The Board consists of three coordinate departments, one of which is a Woman's Department.

The membership of the Woman's Department consists of the fourteen women elected by the General Conference as representatives of their Annual Conference, one woman at large, the President of the Woman's Missionary Council, and the women Secretaries and Treasurer. These women constitute a committee of the Board to make plans and policies for the women's work of the church to be put into effect through the action of the Board.

Those elected by General Conference are: Mrs. R. L. Hobdy, Alabama Conference; Mrs. J. H. Spilman, Kentucky Conference; Mrs. S. A. Montgomery, Louisiana Conference; Mrs. J. H. Dickey, Louisville Conference; Mrs. H. L. McClesky, Mississippi Conference; Mrs. F. F. Stephens, Missouri Conference; Mrs. I. J. Ayers, New Mexico Conference; Mrs. S. G. Smith, North Arkansas Conference; Mrs. Luke Johnson, North Georgia Conference; Mrs. Nat Rollins, North West Texas Conference; Mrs. R. P. Howell, Pacific Conference; Mrs. J. W. Mills, Texas Conference; Mrs. Lee Britt, Virginia Conference; Mrs. S. H. Bowman, West Virginia Conference; Mrs. W. F. Tillett, at large.

All the other conferences of Southern Methodism are represented in the Board of Missions by either a preacher or a lay man.

In addition to the above the President of the Woman's Missionary Council, all the Secretaries and the Treasurer of Woman's work are members of the Department. They are:

Miss Belle H. Bennett, Miss Esther Case, Miss Mabel Howell, Mrs. J. W. Downs, Mrs. J. H. McCoy, Mrs. F. H. E. Ross, Mrs. H. R. Sleele, Miss Estelle Haskin, Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb.

Thus making twenty-four women who form the Woman's Department of the Board of Missions.

The Woman's Department met in Nashville, Tenn., June 27-28, 1922, for the purpose of studying the new Constitution and of organizing itself into a committee on Woman's Work in accordance with the Constitution.

After two days consideration of the issues involved, the plans and methods necessary for the conduct of the work, the adoption of by-laws to be submitted to the By-Law Committee of the Board and other necessary actions, the Department perfected its quadrennial organization by the following elections: Chairman, Mrs. Luke Johnson; Recording Secretary, Mrs. Nat Rollins.

A recommendation was sent to the Board that Miss Mabel Howell be authorized to go to the Orient in the interest of the building enterprises and other needs of the Woman's Work at this time when representatives of the General Work are going. This recommendation was approved by the Executive Committee of the Board the following day and Miss Howell will sail on August 10. She hopes to return within five or six months.

The women of the Department elected by the Board of Missions to membership on the Board Committees are as follows:

Executive Committee—Mrs. W. F. Tillett, Mrs. Luke Johnson, Mrs. J. H. Dickey.

By-Laws Committee—Mrs. F. F. Stephens, Mrs. R. L. Hobdy.

Home Base Committee—Mrs. S. H. Bowman. Mrs. J. H. Spilman. Mrs. Nat Rollins, Miss Mabel Howell, Mrs. J. W. Downs, Mrs. H. L. McClesky.

Candidates Committee—Mrs. W. F. Tillett, and all the Secretaries.

Estimates Committee—The President of the Woman's Missionary Council, and all the Secretaries.

The meeting of the Woman's Department was characterized by a spirit of harmony and prayer which resulted in a consciousness of the presence of the Spirit of God.

The Committee adjourned with a sense of oneness in its determination to faithfully discharge the duties laid upon it, believing that the organized womanhood of the church has before it yet greater opportunities for accomplishing His will and sharing in the bringing in of His Kingdom among all men.

MRS. LUKE JOHNSON,
Chairman.
MISS ESTELLE HASKIN,
Secretary Pro Tem.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE JACKSON DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

Concerning the New Church.

Whereas the members of the Harrisville Methodist Episcopal Church, South, have practically completed the erection of their beautiful new church in spite of many obstacles and great difficulties; therefore.

Be it resolved, by the Jackson District Conference of the Mississippi Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South:

1. We rejoice with them in their most worthy achievement.

2. Not unmindful of the many heroic sacrifices that have been made by the consecrated members of this church for the erection of this temple of God, we commend them for their love for the church and their faith in God, and pray that God may bless them with a great outpouring of His Spirit.

3. A copy of these resolutions be spread upon the Minutes of the District Conference and a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

(Signed) JOHN L. FERGUSON,
Chairman.

Thanks.

Whereas, the Jackson District Conference of the Mississippi Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has been so generously received and hospitably entertained during its session by the people of Harrisville; therefore be it resolved that:

1. We as the conference do hereby express our most hearty appreciation to the church of Harrisville and its most efficient pastor, Brother and Mrs. I. H. Sells, and to all the people of the surrounding community who have contributed their efforts towards making the conference so successful.

2. We earnestly hope and pray that our stay in their midst may be a blessing to the entire community, which will result in a gracious revival this summer.

3. A copy of these resolutions be spread upon the Minutes of the District Conference and a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

(Signed) JOHN L. FERGUSON,
Chairman.

FROM ELIZABETH, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: If you will give me a little space in the Advocate, I would like to say something about my work.

I will say that in the opening of the new church on the third Sunday in June, we had with us Dr. Geo. S. Sexton. He preached the dedication sermon and dedicated the church for us, at which time he took the collection and more than covered all outstanding claims against the furnishings in the church. As the church was builded by the company we could not dedicate it. We have a nice church home, for which we are thankful to God and the Industrial Lumber Co., and pray that God may grant unto them great blessings for the gift of the church home that they have provided for us.

On the fourth Sunday in June we opened a meeting, in which Brother A. S. Lutz did the preaching. He gave us some strong Gospel messages. Some of our people were astounded at the preaching. He presented the Gospel that saves from sin, not in sin, but from sin. It is strange that so many people to-day think that we must live in sin to be holy or to be a good Christian. The seed that he has sown will surely bring forth fruit in the lives of the people here.

We have a nice Sunday school, and we expect to do some real good work. As soon as we can get everything organized, we expect to contest with some of the other schools.

We have a fine Woman's Missionary Society. We have more than doubled the membership since we have been here. We have now about 35 or 40 members and they are doing real fine work. To prove that, they have made the preacher a present of a fine suit of clothes. They have a very interesting Bible study, and I am sure that the outcome of it will mean spiritual uplift to all the church. We have also organized a Missionary Society at Oberlin, and I hope will do fine work.

We have two real Leagues. Our young people are doing good work, and the little folks are doing real fine work in their League work.

And as you know, we have sent in about 25 subscriptions to the Advocate. I promised 10, so I have more than doubled my number.

We have had a real fine time here this year. We have received by letter and otherwise 58 members this year, and expect more yet to come in; and some of these are the leading people of the town. I am sure that we have one of the brightest futures that any one could expect. We have as fine a people as any man ever served. My board of stewards are always on their job. They pay on the first of the month in advance, so I am always ahead of the game. May God bless the Advocate, and also my work.

J. F. WALTMAN, P. C.

A Resolution.

Whereas, this glorious hour of the opening of our new church has been made possible through the generous kindness and co-operation of many friends, without whose aid the devoutly wished-for consummation could not have been realized; and

Whereas, it has been a labor of love, performed in the kindliest and most harmonious spirit; therefore, be it resolved:

That we, the members, supporters and friends of the Methodist Church of Elizabeth, La., hereby express our deep and sincere appreciation and warmest gratitude to Mr. R. M. Hallowell, whose generous initiative set the work on foot and saw it through to completion; to the Industrial Lumber Company, whose liberality and goodwill carried the plan into execution; to the Building Committee and the Furnishing Committee, for the prompt and efficient manner and the excellent spirit in which they have done the part of the work which they so nobly undertook, and to all, individually and collectively, who have in any way rendered assistance in building, equipping and furnishing this beautiful and commodious house of worship.

May it prove a perennial blessing to the community, and a divine benediction to all who have helped forward its construction!

Signed by: J. F. Waltman, P. C.; W. W. Williams, J. J. Chapman, J. B. Jouett, Sid Turner, W. J. Andrews, H. E. Morrow.

Neutralizes Uric Acid!

Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood. In order to be cured of rheumatism it is necessary to neutralize this acid. RENWAR is a scientific combination of salts prepared to neutralize the uric acid in the blood. There is nothing in Renwar to injure the stomach or affect the heart. It acts solely upon uric acid, completely eliminating it from the blood and thereby relieving your rheumatism. It is harmless but effective. Positively guaranteed by money-back offer. It is a godsend to sufferers from rheumatism. Renwar also corrects constipation. Mr. J. M. Willis of the Nashville Railway and Light Company says, "I must say that Renwar far surpassed my expectations, for it gave me almost immediate relief; too much can not be spoken in behalf of 'Renwar' for rheumatism." Sold by druggists, price 50 cents, or by mail from WARNER DRUG COMPANY, NASHVILLE, TENN.

FROM DENHAM SPRINGS, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: It has been quite a while since I have written of the work on Denham Springs charge.

Two meetings have already been held on the charge by the pastor. At Friendship church we started on June 25 and closed on the 29. There was good attendance at all services. On Tuesday evening a soul came up to the altar in the good old-fashioned way and received pardon for past sins. On Wednesday morning two souls knelt at the altar and found pardon in the blood of Christ.

We started our meeting at Live Oak on July 2 with a full house. On Tuesday night the Spirit found His way into many hearts. Wednesday morning was graced with a beautiful consecration service around the altar. Friday morning's service proved a blessing to many after the pastor had given a full explanation of the Methodist doctrine and preached a definition sermon on Bible holiness. We all sang, "'Tis the Old Time Religion," and shook hands amid words of praise and tears of joy. On Sunday morning the fire fell in all its sanctifying power. The pastor preached on "The Baptism with the Holy Ghost, subsequent to regeneration, not at, but after, pardon," from Acts 2, verses 1 to 4, inclusive. The altar was opened to all who would seek the baptism with the Holy Ghost. The altar was soon filled while the pastor's wife sang a touching altar song. At the close of an earnest Spirit-filled prayer by the pastor, several testified that all was on the altar for Christ and that they had received a knowledge and blessing that they had never known before. The church has had a great spiritual blessing and strengthening.

FROM THE FRENCH MISSION FIELD.

Dear Brother Carley: The Lord said: "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake; rejoice and be exceeding gad." I know it is true. We held a revival in a new field last week at a place we call Eagle Island —Rev. J. A. Knight and I. They at first told us that we would get hurt; but, by the grace of our Lord, we had a very successful meeting at last. Eight joined the church. A whole Romish family came into the church.

We also held a meeting at Griffin, six miles below Lockport. Nine promised to become interested in the Lord's work. Rev. J. A. Knight helped me there also.

Our work in the French Mission District is going just fine. I am expecting to hold a meeting at Labadieville next week. Brother Knight, Brother Duplantis, Brother Serix, and Brother Martin, the pastor at Lydia, will be with me. Fraternally yours,

G. A. LaGRANGE.

LAST CALL FOR JUNALUSKA.

The time is now very short for those who are planning to attend the wonderful week of inspiration and rest at Lake Junaluska from August 7 to 13. Reservations should be made at once to J. Dale Stentz, Lake Junaluska, N. C.

And who will fail to attend who can possibly arrange to be present? Never before has a program of such purpose and power been prepared for those who are working earnestly in behalf of God's kingdom on earth. And the presentation of each subject is to be made by highly qualified authorities, whose very personalities breathe inspiration.

"The Social Principles of the New Testament" is the general subject, to be treated minutely in daily sessions of the conference. The great problems which are confronting the churches in every-day life are to be called up for discussion by those who are meeting each particular problem successfully. After listening to the addresses and discussions, those who are present can return to their work with broader vision and surer hopes of success in forwarding the work in their own communities.

Especial divisions of the social problem to be discussed are: The Southern race problem, industrial relations and Christian principles, the abolition of alcoholism, public health and finally world peace. One of the features of the conference will be the discussion of this last great subject by Dr. Sidney L. Gulick, of the Federal Council of Churches, under the title, "A Warless World."

Other speakers to be heard include Dr. W. A. Smart, of Emory University, who will lead the daily study; Dr. S. C. Mitchell, Dr. Thomas Carter, Dr. O. C. Helming, Earle Deane Howard, Dr. R. R. Moton, Professor George Carver, Dr. Ernest H. Chessington, Dr. Howard H. Russell, Dr. W. N. Wheeler, Rev. Geo. R. Stuart, Miss Anna A. Gordon, Mrs. Luke Johnson, Will W. Alexander, Mrs. Mary Bethune, Dr. J. P. Faulkes and Burr Blackburn.

Added to the wonderful inspiration of the meetings, there is the ever attractive surroundings of the conference location to bring a benediction to weary bodies and minds. The natural beauties of Junaluska, added to the wealth of spiritual food which awaits, make the conference this year the preeminent vacation spot. Write at once for reservations.

YOU WILL ENJOY CONFERENCE ON LIFE AND WORK, LAKE JUNALUSKA, AUGUST 7-13.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE WORLD—AND THE PEOPLE IN IT.

This is a good time in which to live. A great many old things have passed away—but most of them are things that ought to have passed away. Truth never changes, and, having once been attained, it can never be permanently lost. The truth that was given to the race in the beginning is to-day what it always was, and it has been augmented until we have a great body of truth upon which men may build their hopes with the full assurance that they are building upon the rock. As time passes, apprehension of the truth becomes clearer and clearer, while the false loses its power and gradually passes away. The sand is washed from the mountain-sides into the rivers and passes into the ocean, but the great granite boulders and massive ledges of stone remain, permanent symbols of the revelations of God. There are always the everlasting hills to which we may look when we need help from the Almighty. It is a poor philosophy of life that makes a man forever dabble in a mudhole when streams of crystal water are gushing from the sides of mountains whose summits pierce the sky.

A Changed World.

It is a changed world in which we live. It has shrunk, extensively. Distance has become a matter of practically no moment. A rain in Texas to-day affects the price of cotton in Liverpool to-morrow. The aviator will soon be able to eat his breakfast in New York and sit down to dinner in London. A plain layman in an interior village of Mississippi can even now put the receiver of his radio outfit to his ear and hear concerts and lectures while they are being delivered in Denver and Indianapolis. Just the other day we read that scientists are preparing to take moving pictures of Mars! All races to-day are neighbors—and close neighbors at that.

The world has expanded, intensively. There are no longer any unrelated groups of people. The coal miners call a strike—and innocent women and children suffer from one end of the land to the other. The railway workers cease their labors—and the commerce of the nation is paralyzed. The capitalists tighten their purse-strings—and the humble artisan feels that times are growing harder. An act of hostility in Europe drags the whole world into war. A woman in Paris appears in public with a new style of dress, and within a few days the same style is seen in New York. It is true that a pebble dropped into the ocean makes itself felt on its farthest shores!

There are no longer any provincial systems of thought. A man may think as an American, but he cannot exclude from his intellectual processes—if he really thinks—what other men of all races and ages have thought. The world of scholarship has no territorial limitations and knows no racial distinctions. There is not necessarily agreement as to views, but there is acquaintance with results. The would-be scholar who shuts himself off from what other scholars have done remains ignorant in the midst of knowledge, and he becomes narrow in spite of the wide-open fields of research. Language and terminology are merely incidents in the world's search after truth.

The "mud turtle" philosophy of life is rapidly disappearing—thank God. The mud turtle sits on a log in his pond, blissfully unconscious of what is going on in the world about him and totally unconcerned as to what happens; if by chance some sight or sound should interfere with his unthinking complacency, he simply slides off into the water and waits till the disturbance passes by, and then crawls back to sit in the sun again. Men to-day are world-citizens.

Shifting Emphases.

We are living in an age of shifting emphases. There was a time when academic aloofness was the mark of a man who was held in greatest esteem by his fellows; to-day the "scholar in politics" is a good deal more than a term of pitying contempt. Constructive industry—not necessarily physical—is the test of greatness. It takes a lazy man a long time to hoe his row—and it makes him very unhappy to have to do it at all.

The emphasis has shifted from the Golden Age of the Past to the vibrant stretches of Now and To-morrow. It may hurt some of us that this is so—but it is so. Tradition and precedent have lost their hold upon people. This may sometimes result in loss, but as a rule an abandoned tradition makes room for a better view, and a broken precedent is replaced by a better way. If new wine cannot be put into old wine skins, we must either stop making wine, or we must provide new receptacles. (He who reads will understand this figure of speech). It is not often that the old that is better than the new is thrown away—the new must be able to stand the "pragmatic test."

The emphasis has shifted from the incidentals of the How to the fundamentals of the What. Substance is what counts, rather than form. Men are interested in methods only as they are the best way of getting the desired result. We can get a fire with flint and steel—but a match will accomplish the same result, and much more quickly. These lines were set on a linotype as quickly and conveniently as they were written on the typewriter; they could have been set by hand just as well—but it would have taken a good deal more time. The thing of ultimate importance is what you are—not how you came to be.

Emerging Idealism.

We are in an age of emerging idealism—note the term. War is a brutal thing, but we fought a war to end all war. We may have to fight another war for the same end—God forbid!—but there will be a warless world some day. There is great political, industrial, social unrest; but men's hearts are yearning for peace of mind and heart and they are struggling to attain the best things in life. Man knows that he can be no better than his ideals, and he is casting his eyes upward more and more. Higher standards of living are simply new levels reached in the realm of material well-being.

This emerging idealism is expressed in all the movements toward strengthening the bonds of brotherhood—movements that make for federation and union of all the forces that make for righteousness. Many a man's hand is reaching out in the dark with the hope that he may find and clasp a brother's hand; he will find it, too, and he will hold it till men have clasped hands around the world. The poet was simply giving expression to the longing of every human heart when he ecstatically exclaimed,

"See the Christ stand!"

How to Look at This Changed World.

It may be hard for some of us to adjust ourselves to this changed world, but we can afford to look at it calmly. Even if it were chaos, we should look at it that way. The man who threw the water pitcher out of the burning house and carried a pillow carefully downstairs was doing his best to save the contents of the house—but he was too excited to know how best to go about it.

We may even afford to look at this changed world hopefully. A call of cheer will help more people than a wail of despair. There is still a God of the universe that humanity can trust and (we say it reverently) there is still a humanity that God can trust, if God has not withdrawn His offers of grace, and if He is still laboring ceaselessly to bring about the redemption of humanity, who are we that we should lose hope?

Some good people are even looking joyously at this changed world. They are putting into it clean minds and pure hearts; they are doing their very best to make it better than it is; and they are singing a song as they go along life's way—for there is joy in their souls. A song helps. As Pippa passed along, the song she sang reached the ears of some that had dark thoughts and evil desires; she never knew what a blessing she was bestowing as she went on her little holiday—but her joy saved some people that day.

What We Can Get Out of This Changed World.

If we put into this changed world clean minds and pure hearts, if we put into it our very best, if we go through it with a song on our lips, we shall get a beginning of heaven out of it—and that is all we can get out of any world.

COLORLESS SERMONS.

By "Lorna," in The British Weekly.

In a London church of some standing I heard last winter one of the old-fashioned colorless sermons. The preacher, whom I will call Mr. Dimstyle, chose a passage from the New Testament and led us at once on to the Everest slopes of high, thelogy. The analysis was searching, the division ingenious, the logic sound, and the treatment edifying. Text after text was cited in confirmation of the argument. "As an ancient prophet tells us," "As the apostle Paul said to the Corinthian Church," "And now will you turn with me to Second Peter?" The concordance work alone must have involved a considerable effort, and the sermon was full of merit. Yet it left few traces in my notebook and fewer still in my memory. It was a sermon without color.

I.

The Book of Nature—Closed.

Mr. Dimstyle borrowed nothing from the Book of Nature. His discourse would have suited any planet that possessed a Bible. Unlike the apostle whom he loves, he has not watched earth's miracle of resurrection, or walked abroad on starry nights. When Saint Paul received his Lord's message through the beauty of cornfield or starfield, he wirelessed it straight to his converts, and we hold it fast after nearly 2,000 years. There have been preachers like the late Dr. Hugh Macmillan in the Scottish pulpit, who were by birthright custodians of the House Beautiful. Others, like Canon Knox Little in his best years, put into their sermons unforgettable descriptions of scenery. The whitewashed church in a new suburb would begin to glow like a cathedral, with its Jesse-tree and its rose-window, and its paths winding away to a towered Italian city, as in Perugina's paintings. "Oh," says Mr. Dimstyle, "but the first of these preachers was a naturalist, and the other an eloquent rhetorician. I'm a plain man, and I keep to my Bible." May we not reply that the slave-populace of Corinth harbor, and the Trastevere slum-dwellers, crushed between the Tiber and the Janiculan hill, received a lesson in astronomy from the teacher who had himself been caught up into Paradise? Here is an example chosen from the Book of Nature, by J. M. Neale, whose jeweled prose sparkles nowhere more brightly than in his "Sermons on the Apocalypse." Writing on the Glory that shall be Revealed, he says: "And about the sea of glass. Put the whole mystery together—the boundlessness of the sea, the transparency of the glass, the brilliance of the fire. I remember once when in one of the narrow sea-straits that divide the little islands of Denmark I was voyaging this way and that way a whole summer day, with nothing to do but to lean over the boatside, and to watch how the glorious rays of the sun shot in through the pure green sea, working out those ripples of gold and emerald which no earthly words can describe; how the sight brought to my mind the true sea, that sea, glorious in its boundliness and in its depths, which yet has the element of fire added to it."

If sermon-hearers were asked to vote, one by one, on the kind of illustration they find most helpful, I believe they would hesitate between pictures from nature or from science—only both must be drawn from the preacher's own observation or experience.

II.

The Book of Literature—Closed.

The Book of Literature is a closed volume to Mr. Dimstyle, except that he repeats now and again a verse from some well-known hymn. He is behind the times in this respect, I must confess. Our best preachers make wise use of the poets, avoiding passages which have lost their savor through long familiarity. I listened a fortnight ago to that able Stoke Newington minister, the Rev. James Burns, who was exchanging pulpits with Dr. Gillie. His subject was "Mary Magdalene in the House of Simon the Pharisee," and he recited with much feeling lines from D. G. Rossetti's sonnet, written for the drawing in which Mary has left a procession of revelers, and is ascending by sudden impulse the steps of the house where she sees Christ. A week or two earlier I had heard the Rev. James Black recite from the pulpit one of the less-known poems of Christina Rossetti. The Rev. Sidney Berry quoted appositely on Sunday from John Masefield. Dr. Gillie is often very happy in his poetical allusions, and has more than once introduced a new poet to his people. Dr. Orchard, Dr. Douglas Adam, Mr. Rattenbury—nearly every preacher, in fact, who keeps his church full under the present trying conditions, brings to his pulpit the fruits of wide and varied reading. Dr. John Ker could illuminate his theme in a marvelous way from little-known fields of history. No one drew choicer material than J. M. Neale from the records of ancient martyrology. Original study in outlying provinces of learning adds a glow to some men's sermons, even when no particular quotation from the specialist's treasure-stock is given. My meaning will be clearer if I mention the names of Dean Inge, Canon Barnes, and the Rev. W. Leslie Elmslie. No, Mr. Dimstyle, we cannot excuse your indifference to the Book of Literature.

III.

The Book of Memory—Closed.

The Book of Memory lies open to the preacher with its thin and rustling pages. "It is in Paul's princely manner," says Dr. Whyte, "to establish and to illustrate his doctrines, and to enforce and to fix his counsels by drawing upon his own experience." Every detail of a great preacher's life, every suggestion that can be gathered from his surviving sermons is eagerly caught up by his biographers. Luther's sermons, for instance, have been ransacked for morsels of reminiscence. They may resemble those sails of which the hermit says in "The Ancient Mariner:"

> "I never saw aught like to them,
> Unless, perchance, it were
> Brown skeletons of leaves that lay
> My forest-brook along."

Men like the late Adolph Hausrath knew how to employ the least fragment of new information in their splendid portrait of the Reformer.

Dr. Whyte drew much on personal memories in his pulpit work. In the new volume on Prayer there is a passage in which he described a holiday at Bonskeid. "I stole into my coat and hat, and took my staff, and slipped out of the house in secret. For two hours, for an hour and three-quarters, I walked alone and prayed; but pray as I would, I got not one step nearer God in all those seven or eight cold miles. For two hours I struggled on, forsaken of God, and met neither God nor man all that chilly afternoon. When, at last, standing still, and looking at Schiehallion clothed in white from top to bottom, this of David shot up into my heart: 'Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.' In a moment I was with God. Or rather, God, so I believe, was with me, till I walked home under the rising moon with my head waters and with my heart in a flame of prayer; naming and describing first my own children to God and then yours."

Something might be said, if space permitted, of the wonderful use made by Dr. Jowett, and also by the Rev. Dinsdale T. Young, of personal memories in preaching.

The Book of Daily Life—Closed.

The Book of Daily Life cannot gather dust, like those of Literature and Memory, but it is not every minister whom we should call, like those good men of the fifteenth century, a brother of the common life. Whether from timidity, excessive prudence, or sheer unconcern, the Mr. Dimstyles of the pulpit have no message for an age of industrial unrest. If a terrible strike is actually in being, if the transport system of a great city is disorganized, and the wheels of traffic are pausing outside their church door, then perhaps they may offer a petition for peace, or introduce into their discourse some vague allusion to the need for fellowship. But they never take a grip of economic problems. Unlike the Hebrew prophets, they are indifferent to social conditions around them. One of the most hopeful symptoms of the hour is that so many ministers of thirty and under are making a first-hand study of sociology, and leading their young men and women to examine for themselves the newest books dealing with labor and capital. "Why does not the church set the heather on fire?" a Labor leader said the other day to one of the foremost Scottish preachers. May not part of the answer be, "Because there are so many colorless sermons?"—Exchange.

MISS BELLE H. BENNETT.

Miss Bennett was regarded as the greatest leader among the women of the entire Southland; indeed, she ranked with the greatest women leaders of our nation. She was regarded by many as the greatest leader among both men and women in the church to which she belonged. Her greatest work lay in lines of missionary effort. She was a member of the General Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and President of the Woman's Missionary Council. She not only served the missionary cause in her own church, but represented her church on national and international committees. The International Missionary Council, which had its first meeting last fall in Lake Mohonk, N. Y., had a membership representing seventeen different nations. There were only three women from the United States chosen to serve on that Committee, Miss Bennett being one of them. The work of this Committee was an effort on the part of the Mission Boards of the world to instill into the governments of the world the principles of brotherhood, and to inspire the practice of the Golden Rule in governmental affairs.

When the two great Methodisms, North and South, celebrated their 100th anniversary of Missions in 1919, Miss Bennett was the only woman member of the large joint Commission that planned the enterprise. A year later, when the Southern Methodist Church through its Centenary gifts, was able to open up mission work in Europe, Miss Bennett, together with Mrs. Luke Johnson, of Atlanta, Ga., served on a committee to go to Europe to make personal investigation of this new field. Miss Bennett had previously visited all the Latin-American fields in the interest of the Woman's Missionary work there, also made a tour of the Oriental fields, including China, Japan and Korea.

She saw the missionary work of her church grow from its beginning to a great force ministering in nine great mission fields. The very first home mission work of the women of the M. E. Church, South, was carried on through a parsonage and Home Mission Society. The organization through which this work functioned was a Central Committee, of which Miss Bennett was a member. A few years later this Central Committee was formed into a Woman's Board of Home Missions and Miss Bennett was chosen as the President. Indeed, through all the years of its existence, this Board had no other president. Previous to the organization of the Woman's Board of Home Missions, there had been organized a Woman's Board of Foreign Missions. In 1910 these two Boards were united, forming the Woman's Missionary Council; without a dissenting vote, Miss Bennett was chosen as the leader of this great united organization, having a constituency of 263,000 members. The Woman's Missionary Council has never had any other president.

Miss Bennett's great outstanding missionary work was the establishment of the Scarritt Bible and Training School. It was she who first realized the need of a place where missionaries might receive specialized training for their life work. That a school for this purpose might be built, became to her a conviction sent from God. She presented her cause to the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions, and they appointed her to undertake the task. This was her first public work, and she entered into it single handed, having very few who believed in the enterprise. Undaunted, however, she went all over the South presenting her cause with such power that everywhere people responded with gifts. At a camp meeting conducted at Part Hill Campground by the Rev. Sam Jones, she presented her cause to a large audience. After she had finished, Mr. Jones had her sit down where the people could bring her their money. They crowded forward, men, women and children, with gifts, great and small, pouring out their treasures. Wherever she went there was the same response. People took off their rings, watches and jewelry to present them to the Lord's cause.

A gift of Dr. Nathan Scarritt, of Kansas City, Mo., for $25,000 and ground for the building, provided the church raise a like amount, became a challenge to the whole church—a great impetus to the enterprise. Miss Bennett toured the South, presenting the challenge and urging the people to make good the promised gift. The phenomenal success of this undertaking was a triumph of this woman's simple faith and quiet courage. More than a thousand trained workers have been sent forth from Scarritt Bible and Training School since its opening—september 14, 1892.

Her latest missionary achievement was the bringing together of a number of different Woman's Mission Boards of America for the establishment of a great health center and nurse training school in Shanghai, China. The plans are to develop this into a great medical school for the women of China. This will be the consummation of a dream that for years has been burning in Miss Bennett's heart. One of the buildings of this great plant is to bear her name. In the city of Rio de Janeiro one of the largest institutions of learning under the direction of the Council is named "Bennett College."

Her statesmanlike vision and her capacity for work were almost unparalleled. She not only led in the missionary work of her church, but found time to give to other advance movements. It was through her untiring efforts that the women of her church, after twelve years of persistent effort, were granted the right to have a voice in the government of their church. Four years ago this right was granted them, and Miss Bennett was elected by her own Conference on the first ballot, to attend the General Conference, the law-making body of the M. E. Church, South, which held its quadrennial meeting in Hot Springs, Ark., May, 1922. Ill health, however, prevented Miss Bennett's attendance.

As extended as was the scope of her activity in her own church, she was always a force in philanthropic and state affairs. She was especially interested and used her influence in securing suffrage for the women.

Though she had a world vision and gave much of her time and strength to the larger calls, she always found time for the affairs of her own town, and no matter how absorbed or busy, she always took time to respond to her family and friendship calls; nor was this all—the cry of human need never went unheeded. Her response to this cry was most sympathetic and practical. Having resolved years ago to educate a child of each race she was able to accomplish this desire.

She had a wonderfully magnetic personality, and was the center of attraction, whether on the platform speaking or in social group. Her wide knowledge of the affairs of the world and her personal interest in individuals made her equally at home in any group, regardless of their station in life. There is no greater testimony of her far-reaching influence than that of the hundreds of letters from people in all walks and stations of life from all over the country, which came during her illness, expressing their love and gratitude for her influence on their lives.

She was a peer among both men and women as a Christian statesman and as a herald of the gospel, and yet had the marvelous power of unfailing friendships, interested in every detail that concerned others, and appreciative of the best that was in them. She had the power to encourage individuals to attain and to live their best.

Isabel Harris Bennett was born December 3, 1852, and died in Richmond, Ky., July 20, 1922. She was one of eight children of the late Samuel Bennett and Elizabeth Chenault, of whom only one survives—Mr. Waller Bennett, of Richmond, Ky. She grew into lovely young womanhood at Homelands, the home of her parents, at White Hall, near Richmond, Madison County, Kentucky, surrounded by every comfort that affluence could give. She was the joy of the grand old mansion of ante bellum days, where an elegant and bountiful hospitality was dispensed through many years. Hers was a family that valued education, the sons taking their degrees from Yale, Center College, old Transylvania and other universities, and the daughters receiving their training at the best private schools of the day.

Miss Bennett received her early education from Dr. Robert L. Breck, an eminent Presbyterian divine, and one of the notable scholars of her day. She became proficient in belles lettres and classics; she later attended a private school at College Hill, Ohio, which ranked at that time as the best school for the training of young women in the West. Later, she was sent to Nazareth, a Catholic school near Bardstown, Kentucky.

Any reference to this unusual life would be scarcely complete without mentioning those from whom she was descended, whose qualities of leadership were, many of them, embodied in her character and career. She numbered among her ancestors those who were among the earliest at the founding of Jamestown, members of the house of Burgesses of the Colony of Virginia, those who led their troops in the colonial wars, and those who aided in the defense of Fort Boonesboro, and in the founding of the commonwealth of Kentucky. In the century and a half which has elapsed since pioneer days many of her connections have served in legislative bodies; in two instances as Governors of States, and members of the United States Senate; an uncle of the distaff side helped to frame the Constitution of Kentucky in 1849. The Honorable John Bennett, a brother, was for many years an able lawyer at the Kentucky bar, and a member of the State Senate of Kentucky. In every war in which our country has been involved her kith and kin have borne their part. It was under her kinsman, Col. Waller Chenault, that the young manhood of Madison County joined the army of the Confederacy, and it was typical of her broad interest that a year ago when she found no portrait of Col. Chenault had been placed in the Confederate Museum at Richmond, Va., she paused in her busy life to see that this was done, bearing the expense herself. She was an honored member of the Boonesboro Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution. In all that she planned and executed she had the vision of a statesman, and it was possibly through qualities inherited from ancestors skilled in affairs of State and from other ancestry of heroic minds who were willing even to leave their native land of France in centuries gone by, that they might worship God as conscience dictated, that she found at the years went by her interest in the affairs of the great world broadening and deepening, and became possessed of a constant desire to have a larger part in the work of making the world better through the service and fear of God. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which she early became a member, had been the spiritual home of her family for several generations.—Publicity and Young Christian Worker.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

After the Civil War we had a period called "The Reconstruction" in this Southland. Its memories are far from pleasant to men of my generation and our fathers. As a boy I full well remember the unrest, the uncertainty and general disturbances of those unhappy days. Old things had passed away, new things were in a nebulous, formless state. Amidst it all, however, was the indomitable spirit of men and women who had faith in God and in themselves, to meet the issue and build a new civilization and a new political and social life on the wreck of the old. And they did it, nobly, successfully, grandly. They did not whine, did not resort to governmental aid, for there was but little government extant of a helpful kind, but went to work and rebuilt a country which to-day is the wonder and envy of the world. I mean this country in which we now live, move, and have our being. If there is a fairer, happier land anywhere to-day, show it to me. Maybe I am provincial. If so, I am following the fashion of the age. For if I see things right, all the leagues, whether at Washington, Paris, or Genoa, have resulted in drawing national lines more closely and causing each family, in the great brotherhood of nations, to work out its individual salvation and destiny with considerable fear and trembling.

The world is now facing a wider phase or period of reconstruction. The malign forces of envy, greed and jealousy, which were engendered in these United States by the disturbing of normal conditions, and by the vast scale of war preparation and furtherance, are now upon us. May not a lesson from the past profit us to-day? With the same faith in God and in those unchanging truths He has given to men, as the basis for all social and political welfare, let us press the battle to the very gates against those vain and hurtful forms of government which are a blight and curse to Europe to-day.

People are much exercised over the strike situation. Some become excited and predict we are on the verge of a revolution. But we are always having revolutions of some kind in this country of ours. The turn of the wheels shows that the engine is running. According to some Cassandras, every time there is an especially lively election, or some faithful working men have a grievance and want a holiday, or some greedy corporation makes a move for more money, we will soon wade in blood up to the bridle bits of our American calvary I presume. Now hear me—American men are not revolutionists, anarchists, and general destructionists as a class. If he is a laboring man he likes to have a little change in his life sometimes and let off some steam. The rascals who do the harm are the vicious idle—the ones who float on the service and do the yelling. That's their trade. The same heads bob up about every time the political waters are stirred. The normal man among us is not anxious to kill any one. He is not panting to walk in gore. He has sense, as we say, and a whole lot of it. I am not losing any sleep over the strike situation, nor are my neighbors. It is true we miss our morning paper, on account of a train being discontinued, but this has not especially affected our general health and well-being. If the men who are in charge of the present dispensation of affairs political and civic can not settle matters, we will send some others to Washington who can. The trouble with a whole lot of people is they know too much and think too little. Good sound thought on broad lines, getting the right perspective, seeing things in relation: Why, every time the safety valve blows, the boiler is not going to burst. Don't you believe it!

EDUCATIONAL NOTES—LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

It has been our privilege to labor a few days in gracious revival services at Vivian, La., with the pastor, Rev. I. T. Reames. This is a most excellent charge and they have a spiritually minded congregation. They have the habit of coming out in full on all that is expected of them. In the Educational Campaign, they went over the top with their quota in twenty minutes.

We are now with Brother Bennett at Cotton Valley, where the prospects are for a sweeping revival on the old-fashioned lines.

It is a great privilege to labor with the brethren, in the trenches, as it were, in order to put over a great revival campaign. The aggressive church will win out that works on sane lines. I know of no better religious principles to work it out on than the three that we are emphasizing in the Christian Education Movement—Prayer, Life-Service, and Stewardship. With these pushed to the limit, we can put our Conference over in full this fall.

In the educational world, we think it is never too late to begin. Wisdom may be acquired in old age. Look at this: Socrates learned to play on musical instruments in his old age. Cato did not begin to study Greek until he was eighty, and Plutarch was nearly as old when he took up Latin. Sir Henry Spelman was a farmer until he was fifty, then became a great scientist.

There is no tragedy in all the world like the disillusioned minister. He has to keep on preaching. His congregation is often weary; but no one is so heavy of heart as he is. Dean Swift cried out: "What a genius I was, when I wrote that book!" referring to a work of his early prime. The best is not behind, but before us. The gleam of a nobler ambition is ahead of us and we must march on to a more glorious goal.

It is the vision of God that liberates and reveals the forces of the soul. It breaks the chains which bind the spirit, whatever they may be. Of many the deliverance is from intellectual indolence. They have for years learned nothing and forgotten much. To look round on their books is to see that they no longer care to comprehend the difficulties of their times. To preachers, this is fatal. It means they have quit growing. A beginning of better days to many preachers would be to take possession of some new province of literature, as Robert Hall did when, after sixty, he studied Italian to read Dante; or as Matthew Arnold did when, two years before his death, he began Sanskrit, pleading, that he "was not so old as Cato when he learned Greek." So the restudy of what Christian Education means to the home, the church, the nation and the world should refire our ministry and give us renewed strength to face the new problems of this day and generation. Let us conscientiously toil to keep our ministry on a high level and not shrink from the effort to face, comprehend, and interpret the thought and purpose of the new era which is full of living forces that are moulding our thought, shaping our institutions, and inspiring our present day ideals.

"So nigh is grandeur to the dust,
So near is God to man,
When Duty whispers low, "Thou must!"
The soul replies, "I can!"

ALBERT S. LUTZ,
Conference Secretary of Education.

NOTES FROM THE RURAL PASTORS' ASSOCIATION.

Dear Brother Carley: We have had with us for the past three weeks the representative of the Committee of Religious Surveys, of New York. There will be a study of fifty churches in the United States made this summer, and from this study it is expected that several books that will be very helpful to rural pastors will be written.

The study of a church consists in getting every available bit of information about it from its very beginning, showing how it reached its present condition and the methods that are being used to make for progress.

Rev. E. W. Brindle did his work in a very thorough and pleasant manner. He was born and reared in Pennsylvania among the Pennsylvania Dutch. For one reared in such different conditions he showed a remarkable appreciation of Southern customs and institutions. He seemed to enjoy himself thoroughly at the community entertainments at our parish house and elsewhere. The only thing he did not seem to appreciate was the Southern chigger, whose acquaintance he made for the first time here.

Brother Brindle is of the Reformed Church, which seems to be very numerous in the North. He preached two good, strong sermons for us, which sounded like good Methodist doctrine, and were greatly appreciated.

I felt that it was an honor that the Shuford Circuit should be chosen out of all the thousands of good churches of all denominations as one that would be of service in the book, and I have felt it an honor and a privilege to be the one to carry out officially as far as my ability would allow the plans of our Conference for building up the country work. As such, I feel I am the servant of all my brethren, and if at any time I can help any one, I shall be glad to be called upon.

N. D. GUERRY.

INCIDENTS AND WORK IN CZECHO-SLOVAKIA.

By Rev. J. L. Neill.

We are looking forward with interest and expectation to the arrival of Bishop Beauchamp who was to sail from New York on July 4. The Bishop will probably face the greatest opportunity and at the same time the greatest task he has ever faced. One of the wisest things done by the last General Conference was his assignment to Europe and a better choice could not have been made. Bishop Beauchamp has had charge (as Foreign Secretary of the Board of Missions) of the European work since its beginning and it was to a great extent his insistence which led me to come to Czecho-Slovakia. Of course I am glad to have him!

Yesterday was the 507th anniversary of the martyrdom of John Huss, who was burned at the stake at Constance on July 6, 1415, by order of the Roman Catholic Church and whose ashes were thrown into the Rhine to keep the Bohemians from carrying them back to their native land. Time has shown how futile was the effort of this pagan church. By putting his ashes in the river they were scattered to the shores of every land, and the truths he proclaimed are to-day living and pulsating as never before.

Huss was born in the little village of Husinec, about 125 miles southwest of Prague. This village is just on the edge of the great Bohemian forest and is nestled in the foothills of Bohemia's largest mountain range. All the cities and villages in this part of Europe are evidently very similar to what they were 500 years ago. It was my privilege to visit Husinec two months ago and stand in the little room where this great man was born. The room itself and those adjoining are now used as a museum and many interesting relics connected with the life of Huss have been collected and placed therein. It was very interesting to me to discover that John Huss's real name is not known and will probably never be known. I guess I had read this before, but for some reason had forgotten it. He was known as "John of Husinec" as was common in that day; one of his contemporaries is known to-day as Jerome of Prague, but John of Husinec was early abbreviated to John Huss (Bohemian Jan Hus).

The purpose of my visit to the birthplace of Huss was primarily to bear greetings to our Congregational brethren in their annual meeting. This is the only American Mission Board doing work in Czecho-Slovakia and they have been in Bohemia now for nearly 50 years. The Mission was founded by godly men who had really been born again. Their numbers are not large, but their spiritual influence is very fine, due to their high standards of church membership. During all these years they have not received any one into full membership of the church unless satisfied as far as is humanly possible, that the applicant has really been born again. The result is a very fine group of devoted Christians though small in numbers. About 30 years ago they bought the property where Huss was born and have remodeled the buildings to the rear of the little house in which he was actually born into a beautiful chapel and residence for the pastor. This pastor keeps "Open House" in the chapel to tourists and preaches to thousands of them during the year.

I started out to tell about the celebration of the 507 anniversary of Huss's death. The 6th of July is now a legal holiday (much to the dismay of Roman Catholics), but the celebration begins just before sundown the afternoon of the 5th. Great mass meetings are held in all the parks and public squares of the city and addresses are made on the life and work of Huss. After these addresses the people who are Protestants form in long lines with banners and torches led by their pastors and march to the old city square, where 301 years ago Roman Catholicism thought they had forever wiped out the last vestige of Protestantism and the influence of Huss when they brutally murdered the 27 noblemen who had dared to remain in Bohemia but had refused to pledge allegiance to Roman Catholicism. Here other speeches are made and many of the old Bohemian songs are sung. On this square and near the spot where the 27 noblemen were murdered has been erected an immense bronze statue of Huss. I have been told that this statue was really cast years ago and had been kept hidden away until the hopes of Bohemian people could be realized in a new national existence freed from the shackles of Rome and the iron heel of the Hapsburg House of the Austrian Monarchy. This glad day came on the 28th of October, 1918, and the Czecho-Slovak Republic came into existence. Immediately thereafter this beautiful statue of Huss was set in the heart of the old city square.

There are many other things connected with the celebration, very interesting to me, also of great historical significance, about which I have not the time to write. My only criticism is that the entire celebration seemed a bit more patriotic than spiritual. Because of this feeling I closed my address in one of the mass meetings with an exhortation stating that it was not enough to leave Rome and in addition to even keep in memory the lives of Bohemia's great men, but that Bohemia's need to-day was a spiritual regeneration, so that the citizenship would really become new creatures in Christ Jesus. This is without doubt the greatest contribution Methodism can make. In this task the Moravians, Congregationalists and Baptists (all small in numbers) will heartily join. The other Protestant forces (and they are by far the largest) will be of little, if any real help; the fact is, that their present attitude to our work, their low standards of church membership, their failure to speak out emphatically on the deity of Christ (its open denial by some of their ministers) and many other things tend toward the feeling that they will be a real hindrance to any great spiritual movement.

Evangelistic Campaign.

Immediately after arrival, the feeling began to grow on me that Czecho-Slovakia's supreme need was a spiritual revival similar to that in England in Wesley's day. I at once began to study every angle of the situation, select the places of greatest need and organize our forces for a forward movement. I found that there was a strip of territory about 75 miles wide from the Austrian border on the south, to the German border on the north (about 200 miles) which from the days of Huss to the Battle of White Mountain in 1620, was the center of Protestant influence in Europe. I found further that the Roman Catholics had centered their destructive energies primarily against this section and as a result had driven out or murdered every individual with any Protestant sympathies and that in many places throughout this whole section no Protestant service had been held in 300 years. The human forces at our command were Brothers Dobes and Bartak with six helpers who had been licensed to exhort. But Brother Dobes is the only duly ordained minister (Brother Bartak having come to us from the Congregational Church in America and whose papers of ordination are in my hand, but have never been acted on by our church, due to the fact that our Mission Conference has not been orgauized) of the Methodist Church.

All the plans were carefully worked out in consultation with Brothers Dobes and Bartak, after which we called in the group of helpers and outlined to them the situation and what we proposed to do in an effort to meet it. Every man said he was ready to do his best and so we divided the territory into two sections and on the 1st of May assigned Brother Dobbs with three exhorters to assist him to the northern section and Brother Bartak to the southern section with three exhorters to assist him. Each team went to its task in earnest prayer and a determination to preach the simple gospel story to every man and woman he could reach. I have kept in just as close touch with each group as was humanly possible. The results to date have been marvellous. The fact is, the success is far better than our fondest hopes and expectations. Surely it is the Lord's doing. Time will allow me to tell you only a little about one of these meetings.

There is in southern Bohemia, near the Austrian border, situated among beautiful lakes, a little city of 5000 souls, called in the Czech language, Trebon. It is a center of culture and refinement and quite a noted resort. It is the ancestral home of the Schwarzenberg family (for generations the bitterest enemy of anything Protestant) of the Austrian nobility, Count Schwarzenberg is said to own fully one-half of southern Bohemia. Several efforts had been made to open Protestant work in this city since the establishment of the Czech Republic, but all had failed. Several leading men warned me that any effort to open work in Trebon would surely fail and that it was a waste of time and energy to attempt any evangelistic work. All of this made me feel that it was exactly the kind of place the Methodist Church ought to go into, so in company with Brother Bartak I visited the city and we were told there by leading men that any Protestant effort would be a waste of time. Notwithstanding this, we rented a hall (the best in the city) and decided to make a start. The following is quoted from Brother Bartak's written report after the close of the third service:

"This picture shows the main entrance to the hall in which we held services from the 19th to the 23d of June. Brother Hunaty and Brother Zakoucky remained in Protivin to continue services every night until Sunday. Brother Kotouc came with me to Trebon on Monday. The meeting was well advertised and more than 200 people were present the first night. We distributed our pamphlets about the origin of the Methodist Church and the evening was given to a general lecture on the connection between our church and Czech history. The second night gave us a full house with many people standing. I preached on the authority of the Holy Scriptures and for the first time in the history of our church were sung our songs in Trebon, not by us only, but by the whole congregation. "Faith of our Fathers" was the first to be sung. The enthusiasm of the audience surpassed all expectation. Already a choir has been called together to lead the rest in singing and one from the audience is playing for us our songs. Sixty-five of Wesley's sermons were sold after the service. The Lord has indeed blessed us and we are thankful. The third night was the best of all. The house was again crowded to capacity (over 300). Songs, praises, prayers and a sermon on the "Woes to the hypocrites." This was a memorable day, the 301st anniversary of the beheading of the 27 Protestant noblemen. I asked the audience to dedicate their lives to the cause of Christ, the open Bible and to link up with Protestant Christianity. Practically the whole audience stood up, a sign of their whole-hearted approval. Fifty-eight of the New Testaments, which had arrived that day, were sold on the spot. Many people stayed after the service to sing some more. We feel that this is indeed the Lord's doing and that even greater blessings are in store for us.

"We cannot hold services here on Saturday, nor on Sunday evening, because the hall is taken for other purposes, but I would like to be here and hold a Sunday morning service, the first regular Sunday morning worship, strictly in accord with our order of worship and then continue next week. I hope some one may be secured to preach for me in Prague. I shall come to Praha Saturday at about 9 a.m. and I could return to Trebon with the 4:25 p.m. train, if arrangements work out as planned."

The work continued to spread and two or three days later he telegraphed me to come down and speak at one of the services and it was my privilege to preach to the finest audience I have yet seen in this country. After the opening hymn and prayer, two beautiful young ladies came forward and presented to me a perfectly gorgeous bouquet with the following words of greeting:

"Honored Guest! We are welcoming you to-day into our midst as the representative of the great American people; who in the late and terrible war, have proven themselves to be our best friends among all the nations of the world. It was your people, Sir, who in the most critical period threw their wholehearted strength on the side of the Allies in order that they might strengthen the aspirations of the down-trodden nations of the world, to gain for them freedom and self-determination. It was largely your people who made possible the establishment of the Czecho-Slovak Republic. Our beloved country has already expressed its deep appreciation of the great service which America has rendered toward our own liberation, so it has come to pass that almost everywhere we find beside the picture of our own President Masaryk, also the picture of the great American war President, Woodrow Wilson.

"We welcome you, however, especially as the Superintendent of the Methodist Mission, to Czecho-Slovakia. We know already that the Methodists are most numerous among the Protestants in America and that through their influence already many reforms have been brought about. We appreciate in you the fact that your mission to us is as unselfish as was unselfish the entrance of the American people into the war in defence of oppressed nations. Your great American church has sent you to assist us in our struggle for spiritual and religious freedom, so that the shackles of darkness and superstition may for ever be cut off. Our nation, for ages, had two arch enemies, the Austro-Hungarian Empire and the Roman Catholic hierarchy. Your nation has already liberated us from the Austrian oppression and you are coming to save us from the tyranny of Rome.

"As a symbol of our profound appreciation, accept from us, on behalf of the Methodist Church in Trebon, this bouquet of flowers. May the Lord bless you in your work."

It was enough to break a heart of stone and I did my best to bring to this congregation a message on the necessity for regeneration and its results in the life. Since starting to write this article, a message has come to me from Brother Bartak, stating that at the close of the 13th service, there were 235 applications for church membership.

Herrnhut and the Moravians.

The 200th anniversary of the founding of Herrnhut, Germany, was celebrated at Herrnhut on June 16, 17, 18. The Moravian Church, its early settlers in the Carolinas, Peter Boehler, and the Herrnhut Colony, all played important parts in the drama leading up to John Wesley's conversion.

These Moravian Christians had been driven from pillar to post for some years. Count Zinzendorff of Saxony gave some of them a haven in Saxony and as a result the Herrnhut settlement was founded in the late spring of 1722, and for 200 years this little village has been the center of influence for this body of Christians who have meant so much to the spiritual progress of the world. Moravian missionaries have never sought the easy places, but have gone into the leper camps and other places of misery and degradation to the ends of the earth.

Their two American centers of influence, well known to most Methodists, are Winston-Salem, N. C., and Bethlehem, Pa. Their spiritual influence has always been much larger than their numbers and I can state from personal knowledge that the only real vital spiritual forces in this country for some years past have been the small groups here and there of Moravians, Congregationalists and an even smaller number of Baptists. Of course the Moravian influence has been much greater than any other because it was a native organization and has been here since its founding whereas the Congregational and Baptist churches are not more than fifty years old in their work.

It was indeed an inspiration to walk through the streets of this quaint little city and to meet and talk with many of its saintly citizens and others gathered from the ends of the earth. It was my happy privilege to bear greetings to them from the Methodists in Czecho-Slovakia.

While at Herrnhut I thought much of early Methodist history and one of the things which came to my mind was Wesley's experience in Aldersgate Lane on May 24, 1738, about which he wrote in his Journal, "About a quarter before 9 I felt my heart strangely warmed. I felt I did trust in Christ, Christ alone for salvation, and an assurance was given me that he had taken away my sins, even mine." It will soon be 200 years since that experience, only one result of which is world-wide Methodism, carrying the gospel of Jesus Christ to the ends of the earth. What would the world be to-day were it not for that experience? The greatest of English historians states that the Wesleyan revival was the main element in the saving of England from a revolution probably more tragic than that in France. Surely the 200th anniversary of this "Experience" should be celebrated in some adequate way and the only adequate celebration of such an incident will be one that re-kindles the revival fires to the earth's remotest corners.

"FOUR MONTHS TO HARVEST" (CONFERENCE)

There are only four months until the meetings of the Mississippi Annual Conference, and there is very much work to be done during this time in order that full reports may be made. Yet, I want to appeal to the Presiding Elders, Pastors, Centenary Treasurers, and Subscribers to do your VERY BEST, during these three months to bring the Centenary Payments up to date, IN EACH CHURCH.

The Lord has blessed us with fine crops this year, the best in a long while. What shall be our appreciation of it?

Let's pay all of our obligations to the church in full, and where at all possible, may each subscriber to the Centenary pay all due for the four years. It would be a fine thing for all our people if we would do as we are commanded in the third chapter of Proverbs, 9th and 10th verses. Let's try it.

Hasten the day when all of our church obligations shall be the first we pay?

Yours for Service,
W. D. HAWKINS,
Conference Missionary Secretary.
Conference Centenary Treasurer.

NEWS FROM CZECHO SLOVAKIA.

I received a personal letter from Rev. J. L. Neill, Superintendent of Missions and Principal Bible Training School at Prague, Czecho Slovakia, in which he said, "How I wish the people knew what the Centenary money means to dazed, distracted, and war-torn Europe! Our evangelists are transforming dance halls and ante-rooms to saloons into veritable Bethels."

Our continued work, and increased success there will be, as in all the other Mission Fields, determined by how we pay our Centenary Pledges.

We can pay our Pledges if we will, and we will, therefore we can, and we will. So may it be.

Yours for Service,
W. D. HAWKINS,
Conference Missionary Secretary.
Conference Centenary Treasurer.

The Home Circle

HOW HE KNEW.

Father's watch says half-past six;
Mother's does not go.
The parlor clock is always fast,
The kitchen clock is too slow.

My watch is being mended,
Jimmy's has no spring.
Sister's, on her bracelet,
Is just a gimcrack thing.

I didn't hear the whistles blow,
And I don't know what is right,
But think it must be dinner-time
Just by my appetite!

—T. J., in the May St. Nicholas.

A RANCH HAND AT FOSTER'S.

"Herb" was the smallest ranch hand in Bernardino County. He appeared at the Foster Ranch House one spring morning, asking for a job.

"A job! What kind of job can you manage?" good old James Foster had laughingly asked. "You don't look bigger than half-a-minute at mealtime!"

"I can do lots. Ride your ponies. Wash dishes. Feed your pigs and chickens. And flap flapjacks!"

"What's your name?"

"Herb. That's all. Herb."

"Well, where are your kinsfolk, Herb?"

"I don't know. We were in a wagon and we fell over a bank and when I woke up there wasn't anybody but me."

"Your father and mother, was it, with you?"

"No, I was 'sylumed and they farmed me out and a man and his wife were taking me far away."

"Come in and eat your dinner. There it is all waiting for you on the table. What kind of work would you like?"

"I want to learn to build railroads!"

Rancher Foster laughed long and often over Herb's ambitions. At first he fully intended to get out some study books and teach the boy himself, but small tasks piled up for everybody that spring, while the big tasks seemed bigger than ever. Soon Herb was as busy as any one else.

"If the boss would let me ride Hamie, I could go to school in Antler City next fall and still have time for some of the chores." Herb was saying to himself one afternoon as he took the trail toward the Upper Corral.

He was "riding fence" that afternoon. Thousands of the Foster sheep were enclosed in a great field where they grazed for weeks at a time without shepherd, care taker, or even a dog to watch them. As long as the fence held, they were practically safe; but if one sheep found a way out, it meant only a short time before all the others would follow. Herb rode slowly, carefully examining every foot of the fence. It was terrifically hot and there was a threatening stillness in the air. Suddenly Herb went dizzy. It seemed as if the ground beneath Hamie's feet had twisted up and then uncoiled again. The pony snorted.

"Mother Earth shivering—that's all, Hamie!" said Herb, trying to reassure the pony. "All over now and no damage done."

He continued to ride up the long hill. Approaching the west line, he looked across to Antler City Dam, where three years' supply of precious water was stored. It made him think of a blue stone set in a dull gold ring—the shining still water and the yellow stands that rimmed it.

"I believe I'll have time to ride over, before taking the down trail," he told himself. "It would be awful if the concrete didn't stand that twisting!"

As he rode forward, something he saw made him stand straight up in the stirrups—a crack in the foundation!

"And no one but us here!" he shuddered, thinking of the damage to Antler City and intervening ranches if the water went out.

Believing that there was not time to go back to Foster's, he headed his pony about and made a dash for a precipitous and rocky abandoned trail. Dangerous riding it was, but Herb's only thought was a short-cut to Antler City. With a racking jolt they landed upon a rock shelf jutting above the Antler wagon road.

"Now, how?" Herb demanded when Hamie had recovered his standing position.

It seemed impossible to go another step in any direction. The jagged cliff barred the way on either side. Never could they climb back that last twenty feet they had descended; and it looked as if a foolhardy jump out into air were the only means of reaching the road. Herb dismounted and managed to crawl out under the rock on the right-hand side. There had been a small landslide since the last rain, and the summer sun had baked the earth hard.

"I believe Hamie could take it," he was thinking. "He slid coming down from North Hill that time, and that was longer even if it wasn't so steep as this."

By gentle coaxing, he got the frightened pony down under the rock. Then, mounting, throwing his arms close around Hamie's neck, he whispered, "Go it!"

When he came to himself Herb was lying beyond the lower road with Hamie struggling to free himself from a tangle of stirrup staps and dwarf oak branches.

"I must have gone over his head," the boy concluded. He sat up, patted Hamie, felt suddenly a great pain in his life shoulder, and lay quiet a moment.

"The dam!"

He was on his feet, dragging Hamie to his. He mounted, commanding again:

"Go it, Hamie Boy!"

His head ached and he began to confuse thoughts of a cracked shoulder-blade with thoughts of the cracked concrete. The wind whistled almost wintrily as they raced in to the town, up to the door of the Mayor's house. Without dismounting he called: "Quick! The dam's broken!"

It was supper-time. The Mayor himself opened the door, and Herb explained with chattering teeth: "The spillway is cracked. I saw it from Foster's west line. There was an earthquake this afternoon."

"Earthquake! We didn't feel it down here."

"Yes. I felt a twisting under the pony's feet and I rode over in the direction of the dam. There is a crack down the side that wasn't there last week."

"I'll go right back up with you," said the Mayor, and called for his own horse.

"It's going to be a big leak," ventured Herb.

"I know. We'll get the fire company together. You go across the street to that yellow house and tell Jim App what you've told me and tell him I'm coming in a minute."

Soon a score of men from Antler City went tearing along the lower road. They found the dam as Herb had described—the foundation cracked from rim to lower level. Already the water was washing along the sides of the dam. With bags of sand and cement they set to work to divert the water.

It was dawn when the Mayor and Herb road into the side yard at the ranch house. James Foster was out saddling his horse.

"Well, where have you been all night, Herb?" he asked gruffly. "I was just going to look for you."

The Mayor answered. Herb was sitting forward with drooping shoulder.

"He's been saving the lives and property of the people of Antler, and I'm here to say the people of Antler will want to do something to show their thanks. What do you want most, Herb?"

Still Herb sat silent.

"He wants to build railroads!" laughed Foster.

"All right! Build railroads he shall! We'll send him to the best college in the land."

"First, he's going to be sent to bed! Look at that—he's hurt! With thanks to Antler City, Mayor, but Herb's schooling is planned. He'll ride Hamie back and forth until he finishes grades, and then we'll know whether it's railroads or ranches."—Yetta Kay Stoddard, in Zion's Herald.

To stand on the hill-top is an exquisite joy. There is vision in it, there is the birth of song. And to be strong and vigorous, with a firm grip of oneself and of one's work, that is like heaven begun. Only remember the day of the valley is coming, and the wise man will be quietly preparing upon the hills for that.—G. H. Morrison.

When we look into the long avenue of the future and see the good there is for each one of us to do, we realize, after all, what a beautiful thing it is to work and to live and to be happy.—Stevenson.

All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Printed Lab l on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after three or four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.

Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do net crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

THE SEASHORE CAMP MEETING.

We had the privilege of spending the week of July 19-26 at the Seashore Camp Ground, preaching twice a day during the camp meeting. The music during the meeting was in charge of Rev. Frank Collins, our pastor at McDonoghville, La. Brother Collins also conducted the morning prayer service at seven o'clock. The attendance at the various services was very gratifying, and the interest in the meeting was good from beginning to end. As has come to be the case generally of recent years, practically all of those in attendance were already members of the church, so the main purpose of the meeting was the deepening of the spiritual life of professing Christians. The closing service on Wednesday evening of last week was an inspiring demonstration of the fact that people are still willing to take their stand for the fundamental doctrines of the Christian life and to consecrate themselves unreservedly to the service of God.

The Seashore Camp Ground is a historic spot in the record of Methodism in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama. In the old days, people by the hundreds came from these States to attend the annual camp meetings, and many of our most faithful workers in the church to-day, men and women, date their conversion from their visits to this sacred place. Conditions hve changed largely since then, and not many visitors from a distance come for the meetings; but those who spend the summer on the grounds—and they are many—look forward to the meeting and give it the cordial support of their presence and interest.

There is probably no more beautiful place on the coast than this magnificent property that belongs to the Methodist Church, and it would be a distinct loss to the church if the property should ever be alienated or cease to be used for religious and educational purposes. Steps have recently been taken to transfer its ownership and management from the New Orleans, the Seashore, and the Mobile Districts to the Louisiana, the Mississippi, and the Alabama Annual Conferences, with the hope that adequate funds may be secured to develop it as a great center of religious activity. As is well known, the Seashore Camp Ground School is located here; the Seashore Divinity School holds its annual sessions here, and the camp meeting is an annual event. Distinguished visitors who have seen all the great summer assemblies of this country declare that the Camp Ground is unsurpassed in its natural advantages as a place for holding such assemblies, and express wonder that it has not been made more attractive. It would seem that it might easily be made one of the great assembly places of the church at large. Lake Junaluska, N. C., is in the mountains, and it attracts annually thousands of visitors who desire to combine recreation with the opportunity for mental and spiritual refreshing; the new Western Assembly, now under process of development, is in the mountains of Arkansas; here is a place by the sea that might easily draw from all over the church those who, for various reasons, cannot go or do not care to go to the mountains. As a tri-Conference uudertking, the Camp Ground ought to become more and more a place of resort for those who take summer vacations; as a church-wide enterprise it could be made one of the notable assembly places on the continent. We understand that the new board of trustees is giving serious thought to the matter of evolving plans for the greater development of this great property, and we are hopeful that it may yet become one of the greatest assets of the church in this section for promoting the religious life of its people.

DEATH OF MRS. E. NASH BROYLES.

It was with great sorrow that we learned of the death recently of Mrs. E. Nash Broyles, wife of our pastor at Clarksdale, Miss. We take the following account of her last illness from the "Big Brother" of July 23:

"Mrs. Broyles had not been in good health for some time, having undergone an operation some months ago. Her strength had not been fully restored when it became necessary for her to undergo another operation. The ordeal was more than she could endure. Interment took place in Columbus, her old home. She left five children and her husband, besides other relatives, to mourn her untimely going. She was a most excellent Christian character, and her going away has left the world very much poorer."

The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to all the sorrowing loved ones. We trust we shall have a suitable memoir for publication in due time.

MISS BELLE H. BENNETT.

The death last week of Miss Belle H. Bennett, LL.D., removed from the church one of its most distinguished and useful servants. For many years she has been identified with the woman's work as a leader, and one of the monuments of her constructive leadership is to be seen in the magnificent development of the Woman's Missionary Society. On another page will be found a more extended tribute to her character and achievements. We mourn the passing of a great leader in Zion.

THE FLYING SQUADRON.

Following the great Gipsy Smith meeting in Jackson, Miss., there has been developed an organization of laymen known as the "Flying Squadron." These men, without thought of pecuniary reward and solely for the good they may do, are visiting nearby towns, delivering addresses and holding religious services that they may carry to others the blessings they themselves have received through the gospel. It is a beautiful work, and one that is thoroughly in keeping with the history of apostolic Christianity. When people have a religious experience that has transformed their lives, they find joy in telling of that experience, and thus the good news is spread broad. Blessings upon the "Squadron!"

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Big Brother Class, of Greenville, Miss., has added an orchestra to its many other attractive features.

Rev. W. N. Ware writes that all goes well on the Sharon charge, Mississippi Conference. Revival meetings on the charge were begun this week.

The ladies of the Missionary Society at Ruston, La., have presented their pastor, Rev. N. E. Joyner, with a Ford touring car, fully equipped—even the license tag provided. Fine!

Mr. W. H. Black, one of the leading laymen of Louisiana and an active worker in our McDonoghville church, is again at his place of duty after a vacation spent at Covington, La.

Dr. John F. Goucher, fonuder of Goucher College, Baltimore, Md., died at his home near Baltimore on July 19. He was known throughout Methodism as a great missionary and educational leader.

We are glad to learn that Miss Haley, who is president of the McDonoghville Epworth League, is recovering from a recent illness. Miss Haley is an efficient and consecrated worker in the church.

Dr. F. N. Parker and family, of Emory University, have spent part of the summer at the Seashore Camp Ground. Dr. Parker will supply the pulpit of Epworth Church, Norfolk, Va., during August.

Rev. A. M. Shaw, our pastor at Oakdale, La., has written a book, "Shorten the Line," which has been accepted for publication by the Publishing House. It will appear in the near future. We are sure it is worth reading.

Mr. W. B. Thomson and family, of New Orleans, have occupied their home on the Seashore Camp Ground for many summers. They love the church and they are always ready to help forward its work in every way possible.

Rev. Ben P. Jaco, the Centenary secretary-treasurer for the North Mississippi Conference, has been busily engaged during the summer in looking after the Centenary collections and in assisting in revival meetings.

Rev. O. A. Clark, of Cedar Bluff, Miss., writes that he has just closed a good meeting at the Siloam church on his charge. There were nine additions to the membership on profession of faith. The preaching was done by the pastor.

Dr. H. F. Tolle, pastor of the Capitol Street Church, Jackson, Miss., is spending the summer on the Seashore Camp Ground, recuperating from a recent operation for appendicitis. He added much to the success of the camp meeting.

Mr. J. R. Abels and J. C. Ballard were among the foremost laymen in promoting the success of the Seashore Camp Meeting. They were faithful in attendance and diligent in the performance of all the tasks they were asked to undertake.

Rev. N. E. Joyner and his assistant, Rev. C. K. Smith, Ruston, La., recently assisted Rev. L. W. Smart in a meeting at Wesley Chapel. The interest in the meeting was great, the seating capacity of the church being insufficient to accommodate the crowds in attendance

The Era-Leader, of Franklinton, La., of July 27, gives a full account of the fine meeting recently held at Franklinton by Rev. E. H. Cunningham, of Okolona, Miss., and Rev. J. B. Grambling, of Shreveport, La., who was in charge of the music. Rev. L. W. Cain is the pastor.

We have reeently read with great interest some ringing editorials in the Monroe (La.) News-Star on the enforcement of the prohibition law and on the necessity of following the teachings of Christ if our civilization is to go forward as it ought. Mr. A. G. Cook is the editor of the News-Star.

We learn from the Central Methodist that Bishop U. V. W. Darlington, who will hold the Kentucky Conference, has secured Bishop W. A. Candler to conduct evangelistic services on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of Conference week. Bishops ought to be good evangelists.

The editor of the Advocate has a special affection for Rev. Payton A. Sowell, one of the honor members of the Tennessee Conference, who is spending the summer on the Seashore Camp

Ground. We counted it a great privilege to have him in the congregation during the camp meeting.

We learn from "Methodist Matters" that a new room is being added to the parsonage at Coahoma, Miss., Rev. Del Longgrear, pastor. This improvement will make the parsonage one of the best in the district. We thank Brother Longgrear for a commendation of the New Orleans and the Nashville Christian Advocates in his paper.

We learn from the Baltimore Southern Methodist that Dr. John A. Kern has recently retired from the chair of Biblical Literature and Moral Philosophy in Randolph-Macon College, Ashland, Va. Dr. Kern is a great teacher. We learned to know and love him when he held the chair of Practical Theology in Vanderbilt University.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Pleasant Grove church, Brookhaven District, Mississippi Conference, under the leadership of the pastor's wife, Mrs. E. D. Simpson, has recently completed the painting of the church. Mrs. Simpson organized the women of the church early in the year, and she will be greatly missed as she goes to her new home at Oak Ridge, Miss.

We quote the following from a personal letter received from Rev. J. L. Neill, superintendent of our work in Czecho-Slovakia: "We started with 8 organized congregations the first of May and we now have 18. The problem is conserving the results, but I believe the Lord will give us the workers necessary. How I wish some of our people in Louisiana and Mississippi could see just a little of what their Centenary money means to these people."

The plucky women of the Woman's Missionary Society at Luia, Miss., have just completed painting of the parsonage. This finishes the complete remodeling and renovating of the pastor's home, making it one of the most comfortable and attractive in the Greenville District. Any itinerant preacher would appreciate such a place of abode and feel grateful to the kind people providing it. Rev. and Mrs. J. M. Wyatt are the occupants of this delightful home.

The grading has been done, and some of the material is being placed for the Sunday School Annex of the Newton Methodist church. The attendance at church services has continued to be fine, having been increased somewhat for several weeks by the presence in the town of 350 public school teachers who were taking courses in the East Mississippi Summer Normal, conducted at Clarke Memorial College. Rev. W. T. Griffin is to assist in a meeting covering the second Sunday of August at Garlandsville, which is connected with the Newton charge.

The Eagle Lake (Tex.) Headlight of July 22 might very well be called the "Townsley Special." Three leading articles on the first page deal with a revival meeting being held at Eagle Lake by Brother Townsley, an automoblie accident in which Brother Townsley and his little son were slightly injured, and the heroic rescue of a drowning boy by Miss Elizabeth Townsley at Columbus, Texas. On another page is to be found a column of "Townsley Thunderbolts." Brother Townsley was formerly a member of the Louisiana Conference, where he has many friends.

The following interesting statistics have been gathered by the Federal Council of Churches: Of every 106 persons in the United States, 10 have no religious affiliation and 96 are affiliated through membership, financial support, attendance, or other ties, with various religious bodies. The total church population is divided as follows: Roman Catholic, 17,885,616; Eastern Orthodox, 411,054; Latter Day Saints, 587,918; Jewish, 1,600,000; Protestant, 75,099,489. On this basis the Methodist and the Baptist Churches have a greater constituency than the Roman Catholic Church, the figures being: Methodists, 22,171,959; Baptists, 21,938,706; Roman Catholics, 17,885,646.

We enjoyed fellowship with the following preachers during the Seashore Camp Meeting: Rev. O. S. Lewis, Laurel, Miss.; Rev. W. W. Moore, Biloxi, Miss.; Rev. J. Early Gray, Moss Point, Miss.; Rev. O. W. Bradley, Alexandria, La.; Rev. W. L. Duren, New Orleans; Rev. H. W. Van Hook, Biloxi, Miss.; the Rev. Mr. Strout, Mobile, Ala.; Rev. J. G. Snelling, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, and Rev. W. M. Sullivan, presiding elder of the Seashore District; Rev. J. L. Jordan, Biloxi, Miss.; Rev. M. B. Sharbrough, Biloxi, Miss.; Rev. W. L. Linfield, Gulfport, Miss. The editor's father, Rev. Lyman Carley, Ellisville, Miss., was a most helpful attendant upon the services of the camp meeting.

Rev. F. G. Hocutt, a superannuated member of the Louisiana Conference, who has made his home for several years near the Seashore Camp Ground, is greatly interested in everything that pertains to the welfare of the church. He is nearly ninety years of age, but he attends preaching services regularly and takes part when called upon. He was a brave soldier in the Confederate army, and was promoted from the ranks to a captaincy and then to a colonelcy for valor in the face of unusual danger, though he declined the second honor. He first joined the North Mississippi Conference, transferring soon afterward to the Louisiana Conference, where he rendered noble service in the early days. It is a benediction to be in his presence.

THANKS TO OUR FRIENDS.

We desire to express our thanks to the following friends who have sent us two or more subscriptions recently: Rev. L. P. Moreland, Bienville, La., 2; Rev. B. P. Fullilove, Golden, Miss., 3; Rev. V. C. Curtis, Greenwood, Miss., 4; Rev. J. E. Cunningham, Aberdeen, Miss., 2; Rev. W. N. Ware, Sharon, Miss., 2; Rev. P. O. Lowrey, Indian Bayou, La., 2.

PRAYER MEETING ATTENDANCE.

We have received the following reports of prayer meeting attendance last week: Aiglers, C. C. Wier, pastor, 52; Lafayette, L. 1. McCain, pastor, 62; Ruston, N. E. Joyner, pastor, 40; ——— ———, 18 (this report was written on a postal card, with no post office given, and the name signed was indecipherable); Ellisville, Miss., J. B. Cain, pastor, 50.

CHURCH EXTENSION NOTICE, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Those desiring to make application to the Board of Church Extension for aid, will please write to Rev. W. S. Henry, Arcadia, La., who has been elected secretary of the Conference Board. He has these forms and will be glad to send them to any one who desires them. F. M. FREEMAN.

TO FRIENDS OF THE WESTERN ASSEMBLY.

Many have been asking when lots would be on sale at our new Western Assembly site at Fayetteville, Ark.

We are now pleased to announce that we shall be ready for our friends on August 17-18.

A landscape architect will have plans and maps ready, the trustees will be there, and opportunity will be given to make your selection.

The railroads give a regular summer-resort rate of one and one-half fare for the round trip from all points in our territory to Fayetteville, Ark. If you want to make the trip, speak to your railroad agent a few days in advance so that in case he has no instructions, he may get them in time.

From August 15 to 18 the Farmers' Week at the University will have an interesting program, and on August 18 Dr. W. H. Wilson, of New York, will deliver addresses that will be of special interest to our preachers. You can arrange to take in this program in connection with your visit to the Assembly.

The lots to be sold are very desirable, and as the number is limited, you will do well to go to Fayetteville on August 17-18, and make your selection.

Fayetteville is a delightful town in the wonderful Ozark region. The Assembly will make it summer headquarters for the Methodists of Missouri, Oklahoma, Texas, Louisiana, and Arkansas. You ought to have a lot there.

A. C. MILLER,
President of the Board.

PROHIBITION IN SOUTH AFRICA.

South Africa has lately been privileged in hearing one of America's most distinguished social reformers. On March 17, Bishop James Cannon, Junior, on his way through from the Belgian Congo, paid us a "flying visit" in Cape Town. We had planned an extensive South African tour, but the outbreak in the Transvaal mines cut the time available down to a question of hours only. In spite of many days spent on the railroad, Bishop Cannon insisted on using every available minute for work. The train being held up for a few hours at Biswayo in Rhodesia, he had addressed a hastily convened meeting of citizens, and created in the outpost city a distinct impression in favor of Liquor Reform.

Arrived in Cape Town at 9:30 a.m. on the 17th of March, Bishop Cannon was at once interviewed by press representatives, and was scarcely through with the immigration authorities when he had to speak for an hour to a gathering of representative Christians in the principal Baptist church. Following immediately on this meeting, he spoke for a second hour at a luncheon held in the city, and after that had to catch his boat at 3 p.m. The luncheon was certainly in its personnel the most remarkable temperance gathering ever held in the history of South Africa. Apart from all the leading temperance reformers, there were present the Chief Justice of the Union of South Africa; the Chief Magistrate of Cape Town; the American Consul; the Archbishop, the Dean and several Canons of the Church of the Province of South Africa; leading Dutch Reformed, Methodist and other preachers; the Mayor and Mayoress of the city; and no less than twenty-five members of the Union Parliament.

To many of these prominent citizens, the information Bishop Cannon conveyed was obviously a startling revelation of the truth regarding "Dry America." At both gatherings the speaker held his audience spellbound, and there is no doubt whatever that this brief and hurried visit must be regarded as having given substantial help in the shaping of public opinion towards the coming reform in South Africa. The visit was arranged under the auspices of the World League Against Alcoholism and has given to South Africa an impression of the altogether wonderful possibilities of this world-wide movement. South Africa is resolved not to be behind other leading countries of the world in this matter, and looks to the World League for inspiration and practical help in the fight which lies ahead.—Cape Town Times.

HER FAITH

By Mrs. Lemuella Garrett Almond.

The light of faith sat queen upon her brow,
Like snow upon the eternal hills of God,
And glorified the way for feet unshod,
Untrained to climb life's rugged steeps, till now,
We see, led on by faith's assuring glow,
Our feet shall scale at last the heights she trod.
Her faith, the lamp that lights life's heavy clod,
Shineth steadfastly for us here and now.

Light of her faith, that death could not obscure,
Sure leading light, that will not let us stray,
Dwell thou upon our lives, that we may lure
Some tender foot o'er life's misleading way.
Her faith, our mother's faith, that made secure
The road for us, should shine through us to-day.

There are in this world certain mirrorlike individuals who reflect all opinions and retain none. —Selected.

On July 12, 1922, the sainted spirit of MRS. ROXIE SMITH was wafted to her heavenly home, where shadows never come and all is joy, peace and love. She was preparing to go to her home at Aberdeen in a few days, but God saw fit to call her to a more congenial clime. She united with the Methodist Church in early life and lived as a consistent member until death. No truer, nobler, Christian ever lived. None knew her but to love her. A large number of friends and relatives attended the funeral services, conducted by Rev. W. M. Langley. The grave was covered with beautiful flowers, where she now sleeps. SISTER ALICE.

On the 13th day of Mareh an awful pall fell upon the citizens of Wayne County, Mississippi, as the sad news reached them that MRS. W. P. MAULDIN was dead. Mrs. Mauldin was born in Butler County, Alabama, April 3, 1847, and passed to her rest March 13, 1922. She became a member of the Methodist church at twenty years of age, was married to W. P. Mauldin, January 16, 1868. To this union were born eleven children, six sons and five daughters, eight of whom are living and were present at the funeral. Her body was laid to rest in the old Fedora Cemetery in the presence of loved ones and a host of friends, the grave being embanked with the very rarest and loveliest of flowers. We were assisted in the funeral exercises by Rev. H. A. Wood, of Waynesboro, Miss., and Rev. D. P. Yeager, of Matherville, Miss. Very touching indeed were the remarks of the lifelong companion for her fidelity and faithfulness in the home, both as mother and companion. It is the concensus of opinion that no truer companion and devoted mother ever lived. While taking the last sad look upon the flowers that covered mother's grave, the children said: "Brother Massey, her life was a perfect flower, and mother's God is our God." These facts enabled each and every oue to bear up nobly under their sore loss. Farewell, dear mother, until we meet again! M. A. MASSEY.

RESOLUTIONS.

In the untimely passing away of our well-beloved friend and co-worker, MRS. LIZZIE ALEXANDER, her family and friends, her church, society and community suffered a loss beyond the power of words to express. In the family circle she was ideal, tender and true, great of heart and noble bearing. To her friends she was always gracious, generous and faithful. By all who were privileged to know her in this life she was honored and loved and respected; therefore be it resolved:

First—That we, the members of the Woman's Missionary Society, of Tchula, Miss., realizing our loss, bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, who doeth all things well.

Second—That we do hereby voice our feelings of personal loss in the death of Mrs. Alexander, and express our deepest sympathy for the bereaved relatives.

Third—That these resolutions be spread on the minutes of the Society, and that a copy be sent to her family, one to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and one to the Lexington Advertiser for publication.

Signed by: Mrs. W. W. Gwin, Mrs. E. C. Foose, Mrs. Bessie F. Whitehead, Committee.

THE HOUSE PARTY.

Did you ever attend a House Party? A real house party, for a whole week when everything was done for the pleasure of you and your friends? If you have, you may be able to appreciate how happy the thirty-two little girls who attended the Wesley House Party at Houma, La., were during the week of June 25-July 1.

Early in the spring Miss Hooper invited me to be present. I went with her on June 25 to Sunday school at Point au Chene. This in itself was an interesting experience, but not to be compared with the interest which began there and which continued through the week.

After Sunday school the girls began to climb into the "Missionary Ford." Seldom has a Ford been privileged to carry a happier party—four grown-ups, eight little girls, and seven suitcases. Need I say that many people turned to watch as we passed by? The Ford seemed to be as happy as any member of the party, however, and, singing its little song, brought us to the Wesley House, with its great yard, shaded by beautiful oaks hung with moss. In the back yard the big tent was all ready for us with its beds covered with white bars.

Although the party was to begin on Monday night, we had twenty girls Sunday night. Not one minute of the time were they willing to miss. Monday we had only a few classes, giving the children time to get acquainted and to play. On Tuesday morning work began in earnest. At 6 a.m. the rising bell started the day. Breakfast was at 7, and at 8 we had our morning prayer service. At 8:30 the girls assembled on the front porch for a half hour of Bible Stories. The themes for the four days were "God's Good Gifts," "God's Protecting Care," "God's Helpers," and "Heroes." From 9 to 10 pictures illustrating that morning's theme were chosen and pasted on a double fold of paper. These folds were made into a scrap book on the last day.

From 10 to 10:15 was lunch hour and the ice-cream, cake, or candy was enjoyed by all. At 10:15 we had our music lesson. At 11 we studied or practiced for the entertainment which was given in the church on Friday night. From 1:30 to 3 was spent in Sewing Class and after that came an hour of directed play. At 4 each girl was sent to her cot for 15 minutes' quiet and then all were allowed to dress for the evening. At 8 we sang songs, closing with our good-night prayer at 8:30.

So the days of the House Party were spent. But what would a House Party be without "three meals a day?" Mrs. White, assisted by Millie, saw that this part of the day's program was successfully carried ont. Never once did the girls hesitate to "Take a Stand," and great was their delight when Millie led "When the Saints go Marching Home" and other of the songs sung only as a fine old negro mammy can sing them.

Aside from the regular work, every girl knew the Twenty-third Psalm before the week was over. About one-third of them had learned the 100th Psalm. Nine knew the first twelve verses of John 14. They also learned five memory texts, between eight and twelve songs and memorized two little missionary plays for their entertainment. Each girl made a handkerchief in sewing class and some did other sewing.

These girls, many of them, have had none or very little schooling. Many of them never hear a word of English in their homes. To watch them as they associated with the other children, as they comprehended and then accomplished the task given them, made you think of the opening of a beautiful flower when the warm morning rays of the sun touched it and brought it into its beauty.

I wish that the wonderful work which Miss Hooper and her helpers are doing might be seen by many and known by all of our people. Surely the poet meant such work as hers when he said, "Who gives himself with his alms feeds three; himself, his hungering neighbor, and me."

CAROLINE HESS.

GOOD MEETING AT POPLAR SPRINGS.

To the Advocate: I had the privilege of attending the Poplar Springs meeting one day—on the last day; and I esteemed it a great opportunity, having heard more people testify than at any previous time in my experience. From the oldest down almost to the youngest gave strong and persuasive evidence of the visitation of the Holy Spirit. I thought it was good to be there. The Lord reigneth; holiness becometh thine house. And when I was caused to witness so many hearty handshakes on a proposition of friendship, I thought God is continually round about his people.

In connection with this service there was a rain of prayers, in which the people responded very fervently. Then in the song service the people seemed to have the spirit of the Psalmist when he said: "I will sing of the mercies of the Lord forever."

There is no doubt as to the gracious outpouring of the Spirit in this meeting. God standeth in the congregation of the righteous, and he waits that all may say: "In thee, O Lord, do I put my trust." R. R. SEBREN.

JELL-O
Ice Cream Powder

THE LADIES MADE IT

THE delicious ice cream served at lawn fetes and church suppers is often made by the ladies in charge since the use of Jell-O Ice Cream Powder has lessened the cost of ice cream and simplified the making of it. One package of the powder and one quart of rich milk make two quarts of ice cream. All grocers sell Jell-O Ice Cream Powder at two packages for 25 cents, a dozen for $1.50. A dozen packages make six gallons of ice cream.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI EPWORTH LEAGUE CONFERENCE.

At the North Mississippi Epworth League Conference, recently held at Grenada College, the following officers were elected and installed at the closing session of the meeting: Rev. S. H. Caffey, Macon, President; Mr. C. S. Moser, Iuka, Vice President; Miss Lillie Mullins, Holly Springs, Secretary; Mr. V. H. Stephenson, Boonville, Treasurer; Mr. E. E. Whitehead, Greenwood, Era Agent; Mrs. R. P. Neblett, Durant, Junior Superintendent; Rev. Melville Johnson, New Albany, Life Service Superintendent.

The list of District Secretaries is not, at this time, entirely complete, and as soon as the President has finished his appointments, as some vacancies have occurred, the list will appear in the Advocate.

Vice President C. S. Moser, of Iuka, who was the representative of the North Mississippi Epworth League Conference, at the Assembly, Lake Junaluska, N. C., tells of his visit, of which he will write more fully later. Regarding the trip, time alone can tell how much personal benefit I received, and by my efforts in our conference how valuable it will be in this line of work.

Just to know personally those Christian men and women of the faculty, and the association with them as well as the representatives of other conferences is an unsurpassed wealth in itself. The courses given were of Christian thought, highly intellectual and inspiring. I chose as my course the following: "Fundamentals of Methodism," under Bishop DuBose; "How to teach Missions," under Dr. Culbreth of St. Louis, and the most vital to me of all, "Conference Activities," under Dr. Evans and Rev. J. B. Grambling.

LEAGUE NEWS—LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Here we are—a report from our Committee on Efficiency. Did your League make 100%?

Parker Memorial, New Orleans, 100%; Rayne Memorial, New Orleans, 100%; McDonoghville, 100%; De-Ridder, 100%; Bunkie, 100%; Oakdale, 100%; Mangum Memorial, Shreveport, 95%; New Iberia, 90%; Second Church, New Orleans, 90%; Carrollton Avenue, New Orleans, 90%; Minden, 87½%; Algiers, 87½%; Pelican, 82½%; Bogalusa, 82½%; St. Marks, New Orleans, 77½%; Noel Memorial, Shreveport, 77½%; First Church, Shreveport, 75%; Vivian, 70%; First Church, New Orleans, 72½%; Logansport, 60%; Lake Charles, 52½%; Calhoun, 50%; Bonita, 35%; Natchitoches, 15%; Lecompte, 80%.

Junior and Intermediate.

Algiers, 100%; Second Church, New Orleans, 100%; Noel Memorial, Shreveport, 70%.

Even if your League didn't make 100% last year there is ample time for making it this year and it is hoped a good many more Leagues will have 100% next to their names for this year.

Lake Charles District.

Miss Josephine Smith, the District Secretary, is very much interested in and enthusiastic over League work. She is hoping for a big year for all and is sure of success. Good luck to you, Miss Smith.

New Orleans District.

On Tuesday evening, July 25, despite the rain, a number of Leaguers from the New Orleans Union League entertained the inmates of the Fink Asylum. Among those who assisted with the program were: Mrs. White, of Rayne Memorial; Miss Orrie Summers of the Algiers League. Miss Violet Wade led the song service at the opening of the program. Ice cream was served to all present, after which the whole group of Leaguers entertained them with songs of all kinds. This, too, was enjoyed immensely by the inmates.

The expressions of thanks and their very urgent invitations to come again made all of the Leaguers feel so good and also made them feel that they would like to go again real soon and entertain these dear ladies.

Algiers League.

On Saturday, July 15, the Leaguers of the Algiers Chapter enjoyed a truck ride to Avondale, a point eleven miles above the city. The truck was filled with girls and boys and every one participated in singing League pep songs. Watermelons were served for refreshments.

The Epworth League entertained at a miscellaneous shower on Friday last in honor of Miss Louise Harvey whose wedding to Mr. T. J. Williams was celebrated on Tuesday, July 18. Miss Harvey was an active member in League work and at present is Second Department Superintendent of her League.

The Algiers League boasts of having the youngest member enrolled in the Loyalty Legion. Miss Norma Hebert became a member when she was two weeks old. Mrs. Hebert, who before her marriage was Miss Julia Cayard, was very active in League work and we are looking for Miss Norma to follow in her mother's footsteps.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Announcement.

I am very glad to announce to the pastors and Epworth Leaguers of the Mississippi Conference that arrangements have been made for an Epworth League Department in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and Mr. J. H. Weems, 308 Second Ave., Hattiesburg, Miss., has been appointed as editor for the Mississippi Conference.

I trust we shall make this department a very interesting and helpful one, by furnishing interesting items to Mr. Weems with reference to our Epworth League work. These articles should be sent to Mr. Weems in order that they might reach him by Tuesday of the week preceding the week of publication.

W. D. HAWKINS, Pres.
Miss. Conf. Epworth League Assembly.

Greetings.

To the Epworth Leaguers of the Mississippi Conference.

Greetings! (I use that word because Mr. Hawkins and Truman Lewis insist I must).

Having been called on by your Conference president to assume the duties as indicated in the foregoing announcement, I desire to call on the District Secretary in each district and all Chapter officers to assist me in every way possible in this work.

It shall be my purpose to fill our space with good live Epworth League news from all over our Conference, and I can only do this by securing your co-operation. Let me have anything from your chapter or district that will be of interest to the balance of the Leaguers in Southern Methodism.

Please bear in mind that I am not a newspaper correspondent, nor the son of such, this being my first experience in this line of work. But when the Epworth League calls I have never felt that I had a right to fail to answer. And since our Epworth League is the training school of the church, I see no reason why we should not train in this line also. And with the help of all of you, I see no reason why we should not fill the space that Brother Carley has allotted us with interesting reading.

Our assembly at Whitworth College certainly was by far the most successful meeting our Conference has ever held, if the statements of those who were able to attend are to be accepted. And certainly we can not fail to see the results already of this great meeting.

Dr. Hounshell, in speaking of this assembly, says:

"Knowledge, vision, inspiration, all these and more, came to us in the Mississippi Epworth League Assembly. Beautiful and commodious were the buildings of Whitworth College. The historic campus calls one away from the world to study, to meditate, and pray. The leaders of the Assembly are well equipped for their high service. The citizens of Brookhaven are unsurpassed in their interest and hospitality. Every Epworth League in the Mississippi Conference should be represented in the Assembly next year. All circumstances conspire to make the next Assembly rich in inspiration and blessing."

Begin NOW to arrange for your delegation next year.

Sincerely,
J. H. WEEMS.

Sunday School

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES

Sunday School Day offerings are coming in, but mighty slow. We surely could use the money if we had it. Be diligent about the collection. I have not had time, neither has the Treasurer, to go over the books and get out the list. We will try to do this at an early date. Watch the Advocate.

As soon as I have two days hand running together in the office I want to go over the Sunday school reports and get some statistics from them for all the Conference. If your school did not report to the District Institute, you may send it to me and I will take due note of it.

There were 37,000 parents in the public meetings in the interest of children in Southern Methodist churches during Children's Week. Did you report to me from the Mississippi Conference? If not, what you did was not counted in this.

Another new school organized this month.

While at Junluska I was asked to go over in the mountains and preach to the people at Maple Grove Methodist Church. I went, found a typical rural situation—with the exception of paying the preacher. I found this church with 200 members, a Sunday school averaging around 100 in attendance, an Epworth League with about 50. It is four miles from railroad point. They were paying their pastor $525 a year, and he said they were paying it by the month and were paid up to date. I had to try to do something for the Sunday school, so we separated the smaller group and got them interested in better literature for them and got the young people to promise to organize their class and they promised to keep the church in good condition. I received a warm, kindly reception and I was very glad to have the privilege of worshiping with them.

I think this trip has meant more to me than any other trip I have ever made. I feel as Brother Pepper said he felt. He said a lady came to a school to stay the term out and after the second day she was hastening home and he asked her what her hurry was and she said she had to go home and put some of that stuff into practice before she forgot it. I trust that I shall be able to carry at least a part of what I got about with me.

Pray for the work and the workers.

Yours in Him,
JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

FROM GUEYDAN, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: On the 16th of June we began a revival in our church in Gueydan. Brother Martin Hebert opened the battle for us on Friday night, but on account of official duties was not able to be with us again till the following Monday night. In the meantime the writer did the preaching with the exception of Sunday night when we had Brother J. B. Williams, our presiding elder, with us to hold our third quarterly conference. We had a big delegation of church officials from Estherwood, a place on our circuit. We never had a better presiding elder, and we do not want to advertise him too loudly now as we want him back again.

According to agreement, when Brother Hebert returned to us he was accompanied by his accomplished daughter, Miss Vera, who played the organ for us; and Brother A. J. Martin, our pastor at St. Martinville, who led the singing in a most excellent manner. Our meeting closed on the night of July 2. The people prayed. The women of the church assisted in every way that we could wish for; and the men and the women showed how they valued the results by the way they responded with their gifts.

Brother Hebert brought us the message with an unction from above. God blessed his efforts and helped him to preach as he did. The weather was warm, but we hammered away. Finally they began coming to the Lord—by twos and threes—and when the final count was taken of those who had surrendered to the Lord there were twenty who came up for church membership and were received upon professlon of faith, with one exception. Others had signified their desire to come in, but the meeting closed too soon and the opportunity was lost to us and to them.

What a pity it is; so many times we have to close our meetings two or three weeks before time! At my suggestion, if you will, the Baptists held on two weeks longer than they had planned their meeting in our town, and the result was at least six-fold greater than it would have been. I told them of a Campbellite preacher who worked with a tent in the towns along the S. P. R. R., in New Orleans and in Baton Rouge, and though it took six months, never left a town without organizing a church with less than a hundred members enrolled. We quit too quick. In a little town out here the announcement of our meeting was synonymous with: "The Methodists are going to take up a collection!" And the good sister who was running the business finally said, "Don't let's have a meeting till we have a meeting." And I said, finally, "Well, amen!" and we did it.

A. A. BERNARD.

GIVING GOD A CHANCE.

God can do a host of surprising things. He can paint a rainbow at the back of a retreating storm. He can grow a snow-white lily from the black ooze of a muddy pond. But he never can put a quart of water into a pint cup; nor can he make a two-carat diamond out of a one-carat stone. All His blessings are partnership affairs. We provide the vessel which holds the oil of His gladness. When men complain of the niggardliness of heaven the trouble is plain: they are expecting God to furnish both vessel and oil, which He never does. One day Carlyle and a few friends were discussing Titian's paintings. "There is his wonderful drawing," said one. "And his gorgeous coloring," said another. "And here I sit," growled Carlyle, "a man made in the image of God, who know nothing about Titian, and care nothing about Titian, and that is another fact about Titian." "Pardon," interrupted Thackeray, "but that is not another fact about Titian; it is a most lamentable fact about Carlyle." God cannot crowd into an unresponsive mind the joy of beauty, even.—George Clarke Peck.

FROM FAYETTE, MISS.

We closed a most gratifying revival meeting last Sunday. The preaching was done by Rev. Jas V. Bennett, and the singing was led by Mrs. Alma Spaulding, of Fayette, who is gifted with a splendid voice and is thinking of engaging in revival work.

Brother Bennett assisted me in a meeting two years ago and I know of no man better qualified in every way as an evangelist. He is wholly consecrated to his work, confines his messges to the plan of salvation, employs no sensational methods and by his earnestness and love for souls he wins his way to the hearts of the people. This is the third revival meeting that he has held here. The attendance upon all the services was excellent. On three different occasions he addressed large gatherings of men at the courthouse. I have never known anyone to excel him in preaching to the children. They all love him. There were many conversions, several accessions to the church and quite a number promised to start family altars.

A men's prayer meeting was started and yesterday evening sixty-five men met in the court room, some Jews among them, which was led by Brother J. E. Briggs, the mayor of the town. They agreed to meet weekly.

Sixteen young people stood up last Sunday evening and agreed to form an Epworth League.

The entire community has been greatly benefited by this revival. There is not a charge in our Conference more delightful in every way. Our people are loyal to the church and kind and thoughtful of the pastor.

A most important feature of the revival was the number of prayer meetings that were held by the good women in various sections of the community and these prayer meetings will be continued.

Truly, "the lines have fallen unto me in a plesant place," and I am delighted to serve these splendid people.

Sincerely, C. F. EMERY.

"MY YEAR AT SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY."

By Clell C. Gray.

Feeling that it might be of interest to your section of Southern Methodism, I shall attempt a short resume of some of the outstanding events in the history of Southern Methodist University during the past year.

Only within the past month her endowment has been increased by a sum aggregating between four and five hundred thousand dollars. This came through the gift of the late Mr. L. A. Pires, one of the foremost buisness men of the city of Dallas. His will revealed the fact that the University was the recipient of one-fourth of his fortune of some two millions.

The high class of leadership enjoyed by the institution was duly recognized at the recent General Conference. Bishop H. A. Boaz, President of the University, and Bishop Hoyt M.

ROOM FOR IMPROVEMENT.

A young country minister, noted for his jollity, was dining at a farmhouse one Sunday, and when his plate of roast chicken was passed to him, he remarked facetiously, "Well, here's where that chicken enters the ministry."

"Hope it does better there than it did in lay work," rejoined the bright boy of the family.—Boston Transcript.

Your Greatest Problem — That Boy of Yours.

What kind of a man will he be ten twenty, thirty years from now? You know, every parent knows, that it depends entirely upon the training he is getting right now, his associations, his ideals, his inspirations.

Mr. Robert K. Morgan, Principal of the Morgan School, Petersburg, Tenn., has been training boys for twenty-five years. He wants your boy. He recognizes in him one of the men who may some day manage big affairs and he wants to train him for that end. His school has been built, and equipped, and his instructors chosen with the first and only consideration of giving the boy the mental and physical training, the associations, with clean, high-minded men, the ideals of character, the inspirations to ambition, which the world expects. Robert K. Morgan is a Christian gentleman of strong, wholesome, inspiring personality, and his school is the material projection of that character. Write Mr. L. I. Mills, Secretary Morgan School, Petersburg, Tennessee, today, and let him send you a catalogue and tell you what this school can do for your boy.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE

Miss Wasson to Sail for China in August.

The following letter just received from Miss Howell brings information that the women of the North Mississippi Conferenee want to make note of.

Nashville, Tenn., July 12, 1922.

Mrs. J. W. Conger and Mrs. T. M. Clark.

My Dear Friends: I am writing to tell you that Miss Julia Wasson, of Ethel, Miss., will return to China on the "Empress of Asia," sailing August 10 from Vancouver, B. C. This is one of the boats of the Canadian Pacific Steamship Company. I thought you would like to know so that you could get steamer letters to Miss Wasson. I know she will greatly appreciate them.

Then, too, I am anxious to tell you what splendid work Miss Wasson has done in China. She is pure gold and her contribution to the educational work of that mission has been very great. We are counting upon her for a large future service and we believe that your Conference has every reason to thank our Heavenly Father that it has been able to make such a splendid contribution to the cause of missions. Miss Wasson bears heavy responsibility in China and she is going to find it especially hard to leave her precious mother this time. My heart aches for her and I know she will need all the prayers the Conference can bestow upon her. I know that you know all of these things and yet I feel that I want to tell you how we as a Council feel and especially to let you know the date of her sailing so that you can get special messages to her. Yours sincerely,

MABLE K. HOWELL.

I have quoted Miss Howell's letter entire that you may know what we all who know Miss Wasson personally have known from the first as to her worth and consecration. As a Conference, we appreciate this tribute to her ability from one who is on the watch tower.

Let us assure Miss Wasson that we are remembering her in our prayers and let us send from all over the Conference steamer letters for the date mentioned. MRS. T. M. CLARK.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Alexandria District Meeting.

The Alexandria Woman's Distriet Conference was held in Winnfield, June 27-28.

Rev. W. H. Jordan had the communion serviee for the first session, followed by Mrs. R. E. Smith, of Shreveport on "The house building plan" for the district.

Each session was filled with interesting talks and many helpful suggestions given. The quiz on the Conference minutes proved to be very interesting.

The Conference was served a delicious luncheon at Hotel Colvin, and at the close of the afternoon session a social with a splendid program was enjoyed in the Sunday school room of the new church.

The children's program the last evening added a great deal to the conference. MRS. H. G. OWEN.

Round Table Discussion—"What is the Mired Wheel of Your Auxiliary?"
East Eud, Meridian, was selected for the next District Conference.
Talk—Rev. H. A. Wood.
Report of Committee on Resolutions.
Benediction—Rev. H. A. Wood.

Miss Ella Wayne Ormond, our District Secretary, dispatched the business of the Conference in a dignified and very acceptable manner. We appreciate very much Miss Ormond's four years' efficient service as District Secretary.

We were fortunate in having present during the session two of our Conference officials—our President, Mrs. B. F. Lewis, of Jackson, and our Superintendent of Supplies, Mrs. C. R. McQueen, of Meridian. Mrs. Lewis' talks were instructive and inspiring.

Reports from Auxiliaries sounded the note of progress. We were pleased to note that so many of the chapters had organized Bible and Mission Study Classes.

The Base Ball Game proved a surprise and delight. The novel entertainment was instructive as well as pleasant. Attendance at all of the sessions was good. There were 35 delegates and visitors.

The people of Waynesboro were generous in hospitality, welcoming us to their homes. A bountiful luncheon was served Wednesday at noon on the grassy lawn of the church yard.

The opening devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. Webb, of the auxiliary, after which Mrs. Z. D. Jenkins gave a splendid welcome address. Mrs. J. H. Scott, the capable and efficient District Secretary then took the chair.

Mrs. K. L. McClesky, our Conference Corresponding Secretary, and Miss Cavie Clark, our new missionary from Mize who is to sail for Brazil in August, were honored guests, and were introduced to the Conference.

Mrs. K. B. Allsup gave a fine talk on Scarritt Bible and Training School, at the conclusion of which Miss Cavie Clark told in a beautiful simple way of the every day life of a girl at Scarritt.

Mrs. McClesky in characteristic style spoke told of the Council meeting in San Antonio; all of us felt that the time allowed for this splendid report was only too short.

As the time for the morning session drew to a close Mrs. J. H. Scott, in behalf of the district, and from the auxiliaries, presented Miss Cavie Clark with a box of gifts. Miss Clark was deeply touched and pleased by this remembranee.

A bounteous luncheon was served by the ladies of Richton auxillary.

Mrs. Scott conducted the afternoon devotional.

The reports from the district showed the result of faithful work of

GIRLS! LEMONS WHITEN SKIN AND BLEACH FRECKLES

Squeeze the juice of two lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of Orchard White, which any drug store will supply for a few cents, shake well, and you have a quarter pint of harmless and delightful lemon bleach. Massage this sweetly fragrant lotion into the face, neck, arms and hands each day, then shortly note the beauty and whiteness of your skin.

Famous stage beauties use this lemon lotion to bleach and bring that soft, clear, rosy-white complexion, also as a freckle, sunburn, and tan bleach because it doesn't irritate.

TABERNACLE MEETING ON THE GREENSBURG, LA., CHARGE.

The tabernacle meeting, which began on Saturday, July 8, and ran through Sunday night, July 16, was indeed a great success in every respect. We secured the services of Rev. Martin Hebert, of New Iberia, presiding elder of the Houma District, as preacher, and Rev. F. J. McCoy, pastor of the Houma church, as song-leader. I am sure, while you have many good reports on revival meetings, you will no doubt be somewhat interested to know of this, our tabernacle meeting. The tabernacle is located in the Oakland school yard, and it comprises several churches, namely, Days, Center, Wesley Chapel, and Darlington.

While we were blessed with excellent weather, from the first to the last night the tabernacle was packed to capacity, and with large crowds standing on the grounds around about. Every interest seemed to be on the up-grade. The Spirit of the Lord was upon our people throughout the week, and the power of God's grace was manifested everywhere.

We had three preaching services each day, one at 11 o'clock in the morning, at 3:30 in the afternoon, and at 8 o'clock in the evening.

The power of the blessed Holy Spirit of God was among our people, and many resolved to turn to God and start afresh in the ways of the new life, and in the beginning of a new day in the kingdom of God in the earth.

On Sunday Brother McCoy gave us a talk on the Epworth League, and spoke in a very forceful way, emphasizing the necessity of the Epworth League, and of the Sunday schools in our churches. We were able to organize an Epworth League in that community. Brother McCoy especially praised the spirit of the young people, and declared that there was material enough in them, and as promising, as can be found in any set of young people anywhere. This is very commendatory indeed. We are to do our part in the advancement of the glorious kingdom in the earth.

We opened the doors of the church about the fifth night, and many young souls began moving towards the altar, seeking the favor of God, most mighty, and merciful to those who trust him. We had 38 accessions to the church; of these many were grown men and women. In this class five babies and ten youths were baptized. God gave us a great revival. We thank God especially for the gift of those young people, for such is the making of a nation, and the establishing of God's kingdom here in the earth.

I wish to add just here, that while I am writing I would not hesitate to recommend to any pastor who might be in need of an evangelist, to secure the services of Brother Martin Hebert. Brother Hebert is a man of very sound doctrine, and is a man who does not compromise with sin in its very smallest form or shape. Brother Hebert is not much on making many propositions, in coaxing folks to come to God, but rather depends largely upon the manhood, and the womanhood, the determining stand on the part of the individual to take God in his life and God only.

Brother McCoy rendered very valuable assistance both in the singing, and in the organizing of the Epworth League. Both men were royally received by all, and were themselves both strengthened in the faith.

CHURCHES TAKING UP INTER-RACIAL PROBLEMS.

Study Courses Prepared for Thousands of Groups. All Protestant Denominations Participating.

What many consider the most hopeful development in the realm of race relations in America is the fact that all the great Protestant denominations, with a membership of nearly thirty millions, are uniting in the study of the problem with the view of finding a Christian solution.

The Federal Council of Churches has appointed a Commission on the Church and Inter-Racial Relations, which is actively at work seeking to promote the co-operation of all church groups in the effort to bring about better conditions. In addition, the question will be studied this year in many thousands of missionary groups and study classes, with an aggregate membership running probably into millions. To this end the Missionary Education Movement, the Council of Women for Home Missions and the Central Committee for Mission Study have united in issuing a series of graded textbooks on race relations, with a number of others recommended for supplementary work. Most of the missionary organizations have provided also for the creation in each local society of a committee to give especial attention to this matter.

It is significant that nearly all the textbooks were prepared by Southerners and that the executive officers of the Federal Council Commission are all Southern men, indicating that the South is leading in the effort to find a thoroughly Christian basis for the future relations of the races.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

the District Secretary and co-operation on the part of the auxiliaries. Bible and mission study seemed to be emphasized more than other branches of the work.

Mrs. McClesky gave an optimistic account of the outlook of the Conference. The Conference has steadily advanced along many lines, but has fallen short by not making reports promptly. She urged that we report promptly, and also make all reports, especially Bible and mission study classes, so the standard as a Conference will be raised.

Mrs. Scott gave a talk which was full of enthusiasm and hope on the outlook of the district. Twelve new auxiliaries is one of the goals for the year.

Brother O'Bryant conducted a consecration service in which all present took part.

Mrs. Woods, of Collins, read a good paper on "How to Get Women Interested in the Missionary Work."

Ovett was chosen as the next place of meeting.

"MY YEAR AT SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY."

Dobbs, one time Dean of the School of Theology, were two of the five newly elected bishops.

One of the outstanding events in this year's calendar was the Fondren lectures, delivered by Mr. G. Sherwood Eddy, the world's foremost leader of college men and women. Mr. Eddy took as his subject, "Facing the Crisis," and twice daily for four days he spoke to a group of students limited in number only by the capacity of the auditorium. Each lecture took about an hour and a half and was followed by some thirty minutes' open forum, at which time Mr. Eddy sought to answer any perplexing student questions. These lectures will be off the press in a few weeks under the title, "Facing the Crisis," and every man and woman of the Southern Methodist Church should study those great messages. It may be well to mention that last year's Fondren lectures, delivered by our own Bishop John M. Moore, have just recently come off the press and are to be had now under the title, "Making the World Christian."

The School of Theology has had its largest enrollment this past year. With an increase of 25 over any preceding year, the number went to 171. But the numerical increase in no wise measures the great work done. The Ministerial Association, the only organization exclusively for theological students, has been a very great factor in the life of the men and the community this year. By keeping in constant touch with the surrounding country and her needs it has been able to fill many vacant pulpits from Sunday to Sunday with young ministers from the University, thereby rendering service to both the men and the communities. Each Thursday morning there was held separately a chapel service by and primarily for the students of the theological school; however, other students were given special invitations to attend. It was the purpose of the Association to make this service a time when the men could come together for thirty minutes of true worship and enjoy that sacred communion that comes from worship of the Father. This service proved a great dynamic force in the spiritual lives of the young men and young women attending.

Another organization that has been of great benefit to the young ministers is the Pastors' Conference. This conference was for all the young student pastors of the University serving charges along with their school work, and had for its purpose to aid the men in the solution of the many problems they faced from week to week in their different fields of service.

Louisiana, with her one representative, is poorly represented in the School of Theology as compared with States like Oklahoma, Arkansas, Tennessee and Missouri. Each of these latter States have from six to twelve men here. It seems that the people from the Pelican State are failing to grasp the opportunity offered by this great Christian educational institution. This is not a local institution for Dallas only, but it is for all Southern Methodism west of the Mississippi, and Louisiana will suffer for Christian leaders if advantage is not taken by the people of our great old State of the opportunities offered here.

Since the close of the regular school year in June there have been held two schools for preachers and Sunday school workers. The Western Training School for Preachers and Sunday School Workers was held June 14-29, and had an enrollment of some two hundred and fifty. The School for Rural and Urban Ministers was held from July 4-14 with an enrollment of about eighty-five. It is the object of these schools to train the leaders of our church for more efficient service in the Kingdom of God, and every minister in Southern Methodism, especially those who have been denied the privileges of university and seminary training, should avail himself of this opportunity from year to year.

Perhaps it will be interesting to some to know of the work on my charge. The circuit I "walk" is in the Central Texas Conference, Fort Worth District, and is composed of three churches—Smithfield, Benbrook, and Harwell's Chapel. There are about one hundred and twenty-five members on the entire charge, eighty of whom are at Smithfield. My summer vacation is to be spent out among my people, with whom I am looking forward to a great year.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

HELPFULNESS MAKES HAPPINESS.

Most people want to be happy and, as a rule, they are willing to do whatever is necessary to attain that state. There are a few people—fortunately few—whose happiness seems to consist in being miserable; that is, they seem to get most joy out of life when they have something to complain of. We are not greatly concerned about such—we leave them in their happy misery. But we are willing to make a suggestion to those who sincerely desire to have their lives filled with joy. First of all, though, we call attention to the fact that happiness follows the law of indirection—no man can say, "Go to now, I will be happy," and attain the desired end. Happiness is a by-product, or an indirect result of an action that was not done solely for the purpose of gaining happiness. The suggestion is this: Do at least one definite act of helpfulness for somebody each day. Doing this may involve effort, and it may sometimes mean inconvenience and sacrifice; but it will be worth all it costs. For those who may say that they cannot find a helpful thing to do, we make the suggestion that they open their eyes a little more fully.

FORGOTTEN SORROWS.

"Weeping may endure for a night," said the Psalmist, "but joy cometh in the morning." It is a blessed thing that we can forget our sorrows—in the sense that we can be delivered from the despair that comes with them—and hope for another day that will be bright and joyous. It is a comforting promise that "in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." The fulfillment of that promise is often verified in real life. We read this incident recently: A woman had spent ten years in a county home for the aged—a tragedy had separated her from her husband, her two sons, mere boys when she saw them last, had been lost sight of, and she was reduced to poverty. But now she has found her sons, who are amply able and eager to provide for her, and her claim for a pension has been allowed, bringing her more than $10,000 in back payments. Her sorrows are forgotten in the happiness that has come to her after so many years. We may not always have the fulfillment of our hopes in material things, but if we "sow to the Spirit," we may be sure of the ultimate harvest. Heaven has no disappointments.

HOW DISTRIBUTED.

When a great strike, such as is now troubling the country, happens, the capitalist feels its effect on his pocketbook, and the laborer feels it in his lessened ability to buy food and clothing; the public, as usual, "gets it in the neck." A strike is a method of settling labor disputes by which everybody loses.

THE CENTENARY AND THE EDUCATIONAL PLEDGES.

We have not the slightest disposition to "nag" those who have not yet paid their pledges to the Centenary and the Christian Education Movement, but we cannot refrain from calling their attention to the fact that a great deal depends upon the payment of those pledges as soon as possible. The enterprises of the church have been undertaken upon the basis of the payment of these pledges—as it was right they should be—and irreparable loss will be felt if they are not redeemed. It may seem to be a small matter for the individual subscriber to delay his payment, since the sum is comparatively small; but it is no small matter for thousands of these subscribers to withhold amounts that in the aggregate will make possible the continuance of work already undertaken. If the entire amount now due cannot be paid, a part of it will help the situation—and make it easier to pay the balance later. The secretaries in charge of these important interests in our three Conferences have been very diligent in their efforts to make the situation plain and to bring the payment of pledges up to date, and it would doubtless encourage them greatly to see the results of their labors in increased receipts as the year draws to a close. The cause is worthy, the need is great, and most of us probably can do more than we have done. Let us pay our pledges.

NOT IN "THE GOOD OLD DAYS."

Those who wish to shut their eyes to plain facts may insist that the prohibition law is a failure and that more intoxicating liquor is being consumed now than ever before; but they will have to do some loud whistling to keep up their courage. A few days ago some dry agents discovered a "winery" in New Orleans and confiscated two hundred barrels of wine, valued at $40,000, which they proceeded to empty into the street. In "the good old days" that wine would have found its way to the consumer across the bar of some saloon; now it is destroyed and its owner—if he can be found—will have to answer in the courts for a violation of the law. Prohibition does prohibit a little bit, anyway.

THE MONEY TEST.

The money test is not everything, but it is worth something, and we quote the following from a recent magazine article to show that education is a good investment when measured by the dollar standard: "If you ever hear of a boy or girl who wants to quit school, when it is unnecessary; if you ever hear of parents who are thinking of putting their children to work, when it is unnecessary, just bring these figures to their attention: Every day spent in school pays the child $9. Here is the proof, based on the wage scale of 1913: uneducated laborers earn on the average of $500 per year for forty years, a total of $20,000; high school graduates earn on the average of $1000 per year for forty years, a total of $40,000. This education required twelve years of school of 180 days each, a total of 2,160 days in school. If 2,160 days at school add $20,000 to the income for life, then each day at school adds $9.25. The child that stays out of school to earn less that $9 a day is losing money—not making money."

A TRIFLE—AND A TRAGEDY.

We read the other day that a quarrel between two men over a debt of $2 resulted in the death of one of them by stabbing. It is hard for a sane person to believe that so great a tragedy should grow out of so trivial a matter—but the facts speak for themselves. It may be that there is a needed lesson in this incident for some of us. It is a tragedy whenever an incidental is raised to the rank of the fundamental—whenever "a mountain is made out of a molehill." Certainly $2 is an insignificant sum of money, and a human life is of incalculable value—yet one was taken for the other. Many a Don Quixote fights valiantly against an inoffensive windmill.

KEEPING UP.

Sometimes we hear a man boast that he "keeps up with the times." We wonder if he knows that there are 24,589 different newspapers and periodicals issued every year with a circulation of over 14 billion copies; that book publishers are turning out 175 million volumes each year, and that those devoted to any one general subject of study alone would fill a large library. And yet a man may "keep up" pretty well by judicious selection and careful reading. Our ignorance is due largely to our failure to use our time properly—not to lack of opportunity to learn what is going on.

TAKE YOUR CHOICE.

"The conservative wants to preserve the existing order, the liberal wants to improve it, the radical wants to change it." If these characterizations are correct, we are a liberal. What are you?

ONE THING LACKING.

A recent magazine writer says this: "The finest evidence of good citizenship is a clean body, a clean house, and a clean shop. Clean up." If he will allow us to add, "and a clean heart," we agree with him.

A VAIN WISH.

Kin Hubbard says that an assistant is the man who does all the work. How we should like to have an assistant for a week or two during these trying August days!

MOTHER MINE.

I love each furrow in thy face,
The silver in thy hair;
There's naught but beauty I can trace,
There's none that's half so fair.
The love shines out from those dear eyes,
How well I know the sign
Of kindness, sweetness—all that's good—
Dear mother—mother mine!

You nursed me through my infant years,
You loved me as a child;
You shared with me my hopes and fears,
With counsel good and mild.
And when my erring footsteps strayed,
How sad that heart of thine!
You loved me better than before,
Dear mother—mother mine!

And now, when those dear eyes grow dim,
And pain clouds that dear face,
The love that you still have for him
Who ofttimes fell from grace
Will yet bear fruit a hundredfold
In love, dear heart, like thine,
More precious far than virgin gold,
Dear mother—mother mine!

TRAVEL LETTER FROM DR. AND MRS. I. W. COOPER.

Nature's healing sympathy had been extended not only to some of the broken hearts of France, but to the desolated country itself when, in August, 1921, we visited several of the battlefields of France and Belgium. Yet, despite the kindly touch, enough of ruin and misery were visible to make the heart ache and the blood boil to think that men of boasted culture could so act the savage beast as to devastate fair garden spots such as these. Even the trees, with foliage no longer green but ghastly in ashen grey, protested the cruelty of those who substituted for God's fresh air the poisonous gas which was the very breath of hell to both plant and animal life. Not one tree, but thousands of them, stood as silent witnesses against man's inhumanity. If this was—as we were told—the "comparatively healed condition" of the battlefields when we saw them, we shudder to think of their aspect immediately after the conflict! But we must write more specifically of what we saw.

Leaving Paris in the early morning, our fast train bore us for a number of miles through beautiful fields, orchards and villages. Our first intimation that we were approaching the field of tragedy was a large new section in a village cemetery, which showed row after row of crosses newly made. One sign of life was here, but such a sad one! A woman in black garb passed among these graves. In her hands were flowers, but in her heart what an agony of grief for him who slept beneath the mound she sought!

Just a few miles further on, we had our first sight of a village which had been shelled. Comparatively few large buildings in France are frame structures. Even the homes of peasants are usually of brick or stone. For this reason, the destruction we beheld seemed all the more a final and appalling demonstration of the power of artillery. Perhaps angry nature, in storm or earthquake, might leave a similar exhibition, but we doubt whether she would be so thorough in her work of demolition! Block after block of factories, stores, dwellings, showed only heaps of stone and mortar, with here and there a single wall left standing.

If the villages we passed so rapidly seemed mangled heaps of ruins, we felt this all the more when we reached our first stop—Chateau Thierry—and saw things at closer range. From the train we entered automobiles, drove through the torn, patched little town, across the bridge over the Marne—the bridge which was blown up by Frenchmen to stay the advance of the enemy. As we moved on, we tried to use both our eyes and ears to advantage, for in our car we had the official guide of the day, a young American who had been with our boys in this, the first American victory. His arrogance and condescension were atoned for, at least to some extent, by his youthful enthusiasm and his accuracy of knowledge, as he vividly described the positions of contestants. When, after a few miles we came to the shell of what was once the little village of Vieux, we got out of our cars and walked about as the guide explained to us that this total destruction was wrought deliberately by American (not German) guns. He told us that the Germans were in full possession of the place and, as our men learned from fugitives, were holding council of war in some of the wine cellars. Most of the villagers had left as the Germans approached, so the American artillery was trained on the town in such a thoroughgoing manner that not one single house remained untouched. Quite a number of German officers and men were caught like rats in a trap in the aforesaid cellars. This was the enteriug-wedge, and our boys did not fail to widen the opening made by it.

As we walked around, we saw a few shells of houses which were being reinhabited by their owners—a very desolate, emaciated little group. One of the women came to us with a petition addressed to Visitors, asking financial aid, as they wished to try to restore the town water-works which had been destroyed in the bombardment. Ae we were Americans and our troops had demolished the town, even though for the ultimate good of the place—by driving out the Germaus—they felt that we, even more than other travelers, owed them assistance, and we agreed with them.

Another incident of our stay in this town was the pathetic appeal of an old woman who had completely lost her reason. Our guide told us that she was, perhaps, one of the very few who lived through the horrors of the bombardment and came out of it worse than dead. Her vacant, heart-broken stare was more penetrating than the August heat of the sun.

In this section of France, the little villages are so close to each other that they fairly grew together; so it was not many minutes ere we reached our second stop. This town was not quite so badly shot up as Vieux, but it seemed completely depopulated. In wandering about the deserted streets, we found a French helmet. We carried it with us for several days, but finally gave it to a boy in our party. It seemed too cruel a reminder of the young Frenchman who probably lost his life at this place. We wonder if sympathy would have worked so well had this been a German helmet!

We did not leave our cars again until we came to the American Cemetery at Belleau Wood. The poet has sung so sweetly of how the poppies wave over our dead "In Flanders Field" that it was quite distressing to find this particular God's acre of sleeping heroes lying bare to the blazing sun—not a tree, not a shrub, not a growing flower! Old Glory was there, much in evidence, and each grave was most carefully kept and marked. There was every sign of attention on the part of the orderlies who had the cemetery in charge; but our eyes grew dim as they sought the trees on the slope above, where raged the fight in which these heroes fell, and we saw that even these trees and the shrubbery of the hillside had been blighted by poisonous gas. Desolation everywhere! The eye could not travel far enough to find any beauty for the setting of this pathetic picture.

We drove back to Chateau Thierry by a different road, one which took us through some rich farming territory which seemed to have nearly, if not quite, recovered from the effects of the war. Arrived in town, we had rather a hasty luncheon and set out to spend the remaining hour before traiu time in seeing more of the town. Several souvenir shops claimed our attention, but somehow we cared little to possess such grewsome reminders of war; so we bought nothing save cards. We found an interesting little jewelry shop where we were introduced to the beauties of minute bits of Limoges China set for rings, brooches and other ornaments. The town had a distinctly foreign air to us, and though we found novelty, we also found distressing evidences of poverty at almost every turn. Before the hour was over, the party had managed to break up into several groups and about train time some anxious husbands were flying madly around in automobiles looking for their lost wives. They were happily reunited at the station, if not before, and were soon on the train for Reims.

Reims has been called the Pompeii of the twentieth century, for it is an instance of a city of two hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants being destroyed by a rain of fire. The Cathedral of Reims was the first ruin we visited at this place. For many years it was the pride of all the northern portion of France. For three years during the war not one day passed that some building iu Relms was not struck by a shell, and most every day of that time this beautiful Cathedral was the target. Consequently the building, when we saw it, was quite a wreck, both within and without. But even then many workmen were busily carrying out heaps of debris and making ready for the work of reconstruction, for the Catholic world had heard the lament which went up all over France for the loss of her beautiful temple, and donations from outside of the city, together with the money which the loyal and industrious women of Reims had made from selling souvenirs to travelers—all this had given the people a vision of their loved Cathedral restored to its pristine glory. Since our return from abroad, we have seen in the papers and magazines that Reims has had a great celebration because sufficient funds are now in sight to complete this work. But it will be a question of years, rather than months, ere all the beautiful furniture and art glass windows of this church can be replaced.

After having afternoon tea in a shop just opposite the Cathedral—one which had been severely battered during the bombardment—we drove through many streets of this pitiful city. In numerous instances, not a stone or a brick had been lifted from where it fell on the day the building was injured. But oftener, we noted that the thrift, the energy and rebound of French nature were making themselves known through the clearing away of ruins and the reconstruction of houses. Indeed, all through our journey in the war-torn section we were filled with admiration at the signs of the plucky spirit of the French.

As our cars passed out of the city and made for Le Chemin des Dames, we passed a walled enclosure which our guide told us was a portion of the property of some wealthy wine merchant of Reims who had wine cellars which extended for twelve miles underground. The German guns failed to locate these cellars, so they remained to cheer the convivial Frenchman and to "hearten" the soldiers who fought not far from this locality.

After passing for miles through shell-shot territory, where nothing was in good order but the beautiful highway, we came to such historic and dramatic spots as Fort de la Malmaison and La France d'Hurtebise. We realized as never before what vast stretches of desolation mark these hard fought fields. Far as the eye could reach there was not a tree in sight. Here was a man-made desert! We went down into the trenches, saw dugouts and barb-wire entanglements, and even walked across No Man's Land. Our guide had rather a hard time with a dozen or more men in the party who wanted to touch bits of shells, wire, hand-grenades and bullets, which were scattered here and there, and to explore some of the dugouts. The guide insisted that it was not safe to do these things—that murder still slumbered in some of these quiet-looking inanimate objects. At Troyon we saw the remains of a whole German motor car section, and on Le Plateau de Californe we saw a German tank which had broken down half way in its progress across No Man's Land. Some member of our party had kodak pictures made near this tank.

Our return road brought us into a different section of Reims from that which we had left. Here the hotel and shopping districts were struggling to revive. We had a very nice seven o'clock dinner in one of the less pretentious of these hostelries. Our hostess showed us a room upstairs where an explosive had gone through the wall and landed in the middle of a feather bed. On this occasion we did not regret as much as usual the fact that our poor command of French debarred us from having much conversation with the natives. We could see enough on every hand to distress us. Had we been able to converse freely we would, doubtless, have heard so many pitiful stories that our hearts would have been heavier than they were when we turned our backs on Reims that evening and took the eight o'clock train.

NEW TESTAMENT PURIFYING.

By Arthur Madison Shaw.

Paper I.

Methodists preach but little upon controverted doctrines. When we do, the object is to justify and clarify, for ourselves and others, those elements of teaching and practice in which our own church differs from other churches. If the value of such preaching be called in question, it may be vindicated in a few words.

The religious body to which I belong is the organized expression of the religious faith and activities of my life. It is important for me, therefore, that I get into that church which will be the best possible—for me. And, having become a member of a certain church, it is important that I understand the teachings and practices of that church; and that I heartily, intelligently and devotedly believe in them. A man doesn't have to be a Methodist in order to be a Christian. But if he is a Methodist, he has to be a good one, or he is worth little as a Christian. A half-hearted Methodist will not be a whole-hearted Christian. And the same is true if he belongs to another church.

You can be a good Methodist, no matter what mode of baptism you may choose for yourself; but you cannot be a good Methodist and wholly repudiate those modes which our church holds to be valid and Scriptural. So large a subject as the Bible Mode of Baptism cannot, of course, be treated exhaustively within the limits of this brief discussion.

In Matt. 28:19-20, we have the Great Commission which Jesus gave to His church: "Go ye therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I command you," etc. The Methodist Church is most consistent in carrying out this Great Commission. For, as Dr. Fairfield, himself once an ardent immersionist, has pointed out, the text contains four verbs expressing four commands. The first is "Go," and no mode of going is prescribed; the second is "Make disciples," but the method to be used is not indicated; the third is "Baptize," and no mode of baptism is suggested; the fourth is "Teach," and still there is no command, expressed or implied, as to how it is to be done. In obeying the first, second and fourth commands, every church in Christendom uses one mode or another—or all possible modes—as may be required to execute the Master's orders, and get results. For instance, the second: we make disciples by preaching, by personal testimony, by the printed page, etc. So we use any possible mode of "going" and of "teaching." Very consistently, then, do we Methodists use one mode of baptism or another, as best satisfies the conscience of the recipient.

The contention of the exclusive immersionist is, of course, that to baptize means to immerse, dip or plunge—always this, and nothing else. This assumption will be fully met in subsequent papers. It is enough, for the present, to state that it is a mere assumption; and an altogether groundless one. While analogy, example, and usage in New Testament language definitely settle the Bible mode to be sprinkling or pouring, no mode is specifically prescribed; and the use of various modes is right.

EVANGELISTIC MISSIONS—THEIR DANGERS.

By Rev. F. B. Hill.

Dr. Clifford, the aged idol of the Free Churches of England, has proposed a campaign of PERSONAL EVANGELISM, which is receiving great support. Professor Garvie, D. D., in welcoming heartily the proposal, has uttered some notes of warning, a full account of which will be found in the current number of the British Weekly. Just now when revival services are in full swing, I may be helping your readers if I pass on some of these thoughts.

(1). The church of Christ should always be evangelizing—that is, winning souls for Christ; if that is not its constant purpose, its worship, witness and work will lack the life of the Spirit of God. (2). This is the trust and task of the church which belongs not to the whole only, but also to all the parts, to all the members, for all can, by speech, example, and influence, commend Christ as Savior and Lord. (3). Dr. Clifford, in explaining his proposals, said what he desired was that believers as disciples should seek to win others as disciples; meaning, of course, a necessary and desirable return to a Christian type of experience and character, from lack of which the churches have been suffering, instead of belief in a plan of salvation. That means personal relationship to Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord, in compassioning with him, learning of him, bearing his yoke, and taking up the cross to follow him to the end. This is the kind of Christian needed to-day, and it is not the kind that evangelistic missions have usually produced. To feel safe from hell and sure of heaven, and so happy all the day, is what has seemed to be the highest result reached in many of the converts. We have learned something about mob psychology; and in a crowded meeting, full of excitement and expectancy by use of this means to stir up the emotions, changes of feeling can be produced which have little connection with true conviction or holy resolves. Emotional disturbances have been mistaken for personal conversions.

Now, without depreciating the work of any good man, or having any particular evangelist in mind, when it comes to the conduct of big missions, conducted on a large scale, in contrast to personal evangelism, the danger is greater. The atmosphere of such a mission is often artificial, and results produced in it are likely to be less stable than those wrought in the normal atmosphere of the church's worship, witness, and work. The evangelist is expected to produce conversions, and his value as an evangelist is appraised by the number he produces. This should not be. He is himself in danger of measuring his own success, not by the quality of religious experience and moral character which results from his message and method, but by the quantity of professions which can be recorded. To be always doing the one kind of Christian work, arriving at one kind of result, is likely to narrow his personality as well as his theology; the cares and interests of a pastorate are, I am sure, necessary to fit a man to do even the best work as an evangelist. Dr. Garvie says there is a still more deadly peril—to be puffed up with pride in the number of converts won; to be always making a boast of one's successes, and, worst of all, to use that success as a reason for higher payments for one's services. Not all evangelists have escaped that peril. It is well for us to recognize the danger of relying on evangelistic missions instead of personal evangelism, and the duty of us all to become ourselves personally evangelists.

FUNERAL SERVICES OF MISS BELLE H. BENNETT.

Miss Belle H. Bennett, the beloved President of the Woman's Missionary Council, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, passed into life everlasting in the early morning hours of July 20, 1922. She was laid away on Saturday, July 22nd.

During her illness, which extended from the latter part of February, Miss Bennett was in the home of her niece, Mrs. T. H. Collins, of Richmond, Ky.

Among the friends from a distance were Miss M. L. Gibson, Mrs. R. L. Kirkwood, and Miss Estelle Haskin, representing the Woman's Missionary Council. Bishop U. V. W. Darlington and Mr. J. D. Hamilton represented the Board of Missions, while the women Secretaries of the Board of Missions, Miss Mabel K. Howell, Miss Esther Case, Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb, Mrs. Humo R. Steele, and the Treasurer, Mrs. F. H. E. Ross, were also present. Mrs. R. W. MacDonell, who for so many years worked in the closest relationship with Miss Bennett in forwarding the work of the Kingdom, came from her home in Washington to be present. The officers of the Kentucky Conference Woman's Missionary Society, of which Miss Bennett had long been an honored member, were among the number who came to honor the woman who, above all others, will be missed in the councils of the church. According to her request, only the family and these few friends and official representatives of the church were present. The service, which was held in the home of Mrs. Collins, was simple and beautiful, a fitting tribute to the simple beauty of the life of the one departed.

The ritual was read by her former pastor, Rev. B. C. Horton, and by Dr. Wm. Sadler, the present pastor of the Richmond Church. A tender prayer was offered by Dr. Tilford, pastor of the Richmond Presbyterian Church. There were many beautiful flowers from all over the country, gifts from people who loved her. The abundance and beauty of the flowers, the triumphant prayers, the assurance of victory over death and of joy in a larger field of usefulness, made the service seem like a Coronation Day.

Her body lies in the family lot in the Richmond Cemetery by the side of her sister, Sue Bennett, one whom she loved as none other; yet we believe that to-day she is among the ministering spirits, that death has only been a release from the pain-worn body, an entrance into the life more abundant.

A TRIBUTE TO THE VETERANS.

Dear Brother Carley: I read with a great deal of interest the poem, "Superannuated," in the Advocate recently. I enjoyed reading it and trust that it may be of real service in the coming campaign for the Superannuate Endowment Fund, which, under God, we must realize and achieve in the largest measure. I am with it heart and soul.

Some how, though, I had not thought of these superannuated ministers and their widows as having no part in the church life where they were. I know that we have neglected them, but they have not neglected us, and have made the services from the local church up to the Annual Conferences rich with their prayers, exhortations, and shouts of joy. One of my dearest privileges as a pastor was to be associated with them, either the ministers themselves or their companions after they had passed on to the realms of glory.

As a student in Millsaps, it was my very great privilege to be in Mrs. Charles B. Galloway's Sunday school class. She was the best teacher I have ever had and the impress of those hours spent in her home upon a country boy can hardly be estimated. Her wide observation and experience and her kindly manner made her an ideal teacher for a group of preparatory students. When I was pastor at Mars Hill in Wilkinson County I met Mrs. Kate Flowers and visited often in her home, to my own delight and spiritual uplift. Always interested in the work of the church, she was one of my most loyal and faithful members and generous in her contributions to the church. During that pastorate at Washington, Mrs. Clara B. Drake came to live on the old home place near Church Hill. Her interest in the church was intelligent and unfailing, her contributions to it were prompt and generous, and her exposition of the Sunday school lessons was an inspiration to all the members of her class. Hers was an active and influential life.

At Oak Ridge we had all the time that gentle, saintly soul, Mrs. F. M. Williams, and occasional visits from Mrs. W. W. Hurst and Mrs. H. P. Lewis. The attendance of the two latter at the services of the church was always a matter of interest and helpfulness, and the church and community were always made better by their presence. Mrs. Williams is far advanced in years, but her spirit is young yet and her mind is clear as can be. She possesses general knowledge about the church and the ministers of the Conference that many preachers themselves do not. Her heart has ever been with the Methodist ministry and her life is a fine example of the pure, high gospel that the Methodist ministry has preached.

I was nominally pastor of the Roxie charge one summer and occasionally met Uncle Ira B. Robertson. He was one of the most active members that the church at McNair had, serving as steward. His value to the community was indeed great. Our contributions to these worthy superannuates and their widows ought to be in keeping with the service they have rendered, not only in the past, but now. We are giving them of our God-given wealth for value received already. Each of them and the widow of our sainted Bishop will, I hope, pardon me for writing of them personally, but I wanted to make acknowledgment of their value to my life and ministry.

What shall I say of Brother Lyman Carley and his value to the church at Ellisville? Much of the pleasure of serving the charge comes from association with him. He is young in spirit and brotherly in attitude. His well-used library marks him as a man of study and culture. He is recognized by all as the most useful person in our church. All of us acknowledge our debt to him in the work we are trying to do. He is present at every service of the church and teaches very successfully the Bible class in Sunday school. All of these have been useful and effective members. I feel that they were the most helpful that these churches have had.

THE HOUMA DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Houma District Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, convened in the Methodist church here Sunday with Rev. Martin Hebert, presiding elder, in the chair. Rev. A. J. Martin, of St. Martinville, was elected secretary.

The pastors noted as present were Revs. F. J. McCoy, Houma; George LaGrange, Bayou Blue; C. W. Lahey, Melville; E. V. Duplantis, Ville Platte; A. D. Martin, Lydia; J. A. Knight, Lockport; A. J. Martin, St. Martinville; Edgar Dufrene, assistant pastor at Lydia; A. M. Serex, assistant pastor at Houma; P. E. Martin and K. F. Martin, local preachers at Bourg; and Gilbert Bergeron, assistant pastor at Bayou Blue.

The lay delegates from the respective charges reported present were as follows: Houma charge—Miss Ella K. Hooper, deaconess, and Miss Bernice LeBlanc; Bayou Blue charge—Clerville Thibodaux, Lake Richard, E. S. Matherne, and Cecil Matherne; Melville charge—Dr. and Mrs. H. S. Joseph, Mrs. C. F. Lahey, Mrs. A. B. Overton, and Mrs. Rosa Mixer; Lydia charge—Misses Hattie Duplantis, Allie Duplantis, Maggie Martin, and Lucille Martin; Lockport charge—Mrs. Mary Brunnet.

Four young men were granted license to preach, namely: Luke Henry Richard and Clerville J. Thibodaux, of Labadieville; Ardien M. Serex, of Belgium, and Leslie North, of Raceland. The following were recommended for admission to the Louisiana Conference: James A. Knight, of Lockport, and C. W. Lahey, of Melville.

Dr. Guy Wilson, of Boston, Mass., an evangelist of the Methodist Episcopal Church, preached to a large congregation Monday night. His message was instructive and inspiring. Rev. J. B. Williams, presiding elder of Lake Charles District, preached a good sermon to appreciative listeners Tuesday morning. S. S. Thomas, of Alexandria, Secretary of the Missionary Centenary Movement, gave a stereopticon lecture on missions Tuesday evening. Rev. Martin Hebert, presiding elder, preached Sunday morning; Rev. C. W. Lahey on Sunday evening; Rev. A. J. Martin on Monday morning, and Rev. Martin Hebert again on Wednesday evening.

Visiting ministers and workers, introduced to the Conference, who spoke very encouragingly of the work being done by the Methodists in the city of Houma and surrounding country, were: Rev. W. W. Holmes, pastor of the Methodists Episcopal church, South, at Lake Charles; Rev. H. B. Hines, pastor of the Methodist Church, South, at Donaldsonville; Rev. J. N. Blackburn, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Houma; Dr. G. L. Tucker, pastor of the Epipscopal Church at Houma, and Mrs. H. L. Baker, of Plattenville, representing the Woman's Missionary Society.

Mrs. J. J. Burdin, St. Martinville; Mrs. Laura M. White, Houma; Dr. and Mrs. R. S. Joseph, Melville; J. H. Thatcher, Houma; Mrs. B. C. Taylor, Palmetto; Dassesse Broussard, Lydia, and R. E. Martin, Bourg, were elected lay delegates to the Louisiana Conference to be held at Shreveport in November.

The Conference adjourned Wednesday night and was in every respect the best conference held in the district. A spirit of congeniality and brotherly love characterized every transaction.

The addresses delivered by the visitors and Conference delegates were messages of great inspiration and encouragement to continue to press the work forward in the promotion of God's Kingdom.

A. J. MARTIN, Secretary.

SOME OBSERVATIONS OF THE STRIKE.

By Rev. C. C. Wier, pastor of the Algiers Methodist Church, N. O. La.

As I am in one of the great industrial centers of the city, I have wondered if it might not be of interest for me to write a letter at this time, telling of the strike that is causing so much anxiety and unrest.

My relation with the strike began when I went to see a member of my church, who had been roughly handled across the river, at Harrahan. He was at the Touro Infirmary, badly beaten and bruised. Soon after this I was invited to address a body of strikers. I asked what I was to talk about, and received the answer: "Oh, just give us a good Christian talk." I gladly accepted, and went to the hall and was introduced as the pastor of the Methodist Church. I began my talk by saying that I knew nothing about conducting a strike, neither did I know anything about running a railroad, but that I had been invited to make a Christian talk and that I could do that. I announced my text, Matt. 7:12: "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets." I was invited back, and used as a text 1 Cor. 16:13: "Quit you like men, be strong." I went again and had the subject, "Wanted, A Man," with Ezekiel 22:30 as a text. In these last two subjects, I found a fine appeal for the higher manhood, and urged them to play the man. I also spoke from Ruth 2:4: "And, behold, Boaz came from Bethlehem, and said unto the reapers, The Lord be with you; and they answered him, the Lord bless thee." This is an ideal attitude for labor and capital.

Besides addressing the meeting, I was allowed to hear some of the proceedings of the association, which were full of interest.

They address each other as "Brother"—even the chairman is addressed as "Brother Chairman." The colored men were present and they, too, were addressed as "Brother." Their meetings were daily, and lasted indefinitely. The roll was called each time by the units represented in the Association, viz: Boiler Makers, Sheet Metal Workers, Electrical Workers, Car Men, etc., to day laborers. The total was then announced. I could but wonder how the result would show up if we called our roll by the units of the church—Board of Stewards, Sunday school teachers, Woman's Missionary Society, Epworth League, and privates. They had reports from committees, which revealed the old fact that a few are doing the work. This developed the matter of how to deal with the slacker, always a problem everywhere. They dealt very definitely with such.

The men that I saw are serious, earnest-looking men and I suppose that most of them are members of some church; many good men of my own congregation are in the strike, among them one of my stewards. There is one thing that is very clearly and prominently in evidence, and that is that there seems to be one unpardonable sin, and that is the sin of scabbing. It permeates the whole of their utterances. When the strike is over, the officers and managers of the roads, the Federal judges, the policemen and everybody will be forgiven, but the scab may not be—it is a "sin against brotherhood."

I have written this letter largely to let the brethren know that they will be welcome to these meetings, and that they may speak without reservation upon the higher things, and expect a hearing. Brethren, visit your local union and help spread the cement of brotherly love and the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. It will not only bless you, but it will benefit all concerned.

SOME EXTRACTS FROM A RECENT PAMPHLET ON OUR SOCIAL PROBLEM.

By Rev. E. N. Evans.

"Jesus, the world's greatest Teacher and statesman, did much to clear away the confusion of thought that hangs like fog before the rising sun, when he clarified the distinction between SIN and Crime, a vital matter too much overlooked by our statesmen and preachers, a key to the students of civilization and our social problems."

* * *

"FORGIVENESS of sin does not PARDON crime, nor does it RESTORE to former social position those who have violated the law of State or wise customs of society. The social order has a right and duty to protect the HOME as the only secure foundation of an enduring civilization. No civilization has ever or will ever long endure if it neglects to protect the sanctity of the home or the purity of the race. The mere play at the enforcement of laws against social vice, or at best its enforcement only against the weaker and less criminal of the co-partners in the social crime, will never reach the root of this evil. Let the State get a firm legal grip on the male offender, the basest of criminals and vilest of human wretches, stop this legal inequity and social injustice, and you will start something worth while."

"The State nor society can deal with SIN as such. They have no power on earth to forgive sins; and, we might add, less disposition to forget scandal. There are sinners who are not criminals. Their intent, purpose and character declare them in a class apart from the criminal element in our social order. The State can have no rightful jurisdiction in their cases, and society is impotent to deal with them. SOCIALIZED CHRISTIANITY cannot deal with them. Social reformers can not reach their needs. Mere social reform is not sufficient. They need forgiveness and cleansing from sin and a regeneration of life.

"PUBLICITY is not a cure for social evil. It is food for scandal-mongers and social gossipers who never build, but destroy the right kind of civilization. The absence of information is the only remedy for scandal and gossip. Why report to State or publish to society, when they can do us no good? When this, the saddest of all things that may come to our homes, confronts us, let the foolish cease to talk and the wise go into action. SECRECY IS YOUR WORD AND YOUR WAY. Come aside to HIM who hath power to forgive sins, and can make us anew. If Jesus can not forgive these their sin and make them new creatures, then all our hope is vain. If there is a place where these may hide away with Him and be led to trust Him, and find there forgiveness and the 'NEW LIFE,' they ought to be led there. A voluntary retirement from society is honorable to all parties at interest and is socially just."

"Visiting the sins of fathers and mothers upon the children to the third and fourth generations is a physical law and does not apply in the moral realm. Eating sour grapes by the father and mother does not set the children's teeth on edge. Social evil breeds the curse of a communicable disease that affects the body, not the moral character of an infant. These little ones are in no sense responsible for their own unwelcome coming. We never select our parents. We have no volition in our physical birth. If we are born wrong, it is not our fault. We have a chance and a call to be born again, and to be born right. In this we have a volition and a prayer. These little ones, as innocent as the angels of heaven, are ready to fill the vacancies in childless homes where they are needed. And they are a blessing there. Do you believe that Jesus can really forgive sins and make us a new kind of folk? If not, then it is no use to talk to you. If you do, then let us say, 'Help us to get these poor crushed victims—penitent ones—to Him through our MEMORIAL HOME FOR YOUNG WOMEN.'"

MISSIONARY OPPORTUNITIES AT OUR DOORS.

By Dr. R. L. Russell.

Recently I have had the opportunity of visiting some points in Southern Illinois with Bishop Darlington, and making a trip through portions of the Denver Conference with Bishop McMurry. I found these two bishops profoundly interested in the work of our church in these needy places.

We have not made rapid progress in either Conference, which is not a favorable comment on our statesmanship when we consider the length of time we have been there and the opportunity we now have in each of these Conferences.

We have lost many of our best opportunities because we did not have the money nor the men to accept them, nor did we have the foresight to see them. That is neither here nor there. What we must do now is to strengthen the work we already have in these two Conferences, and have vision enough to enterprise the Kingdom in the many places awaiting us. I have reached some conclusions:

1. We cannot remain cramped in the few places where we are now operating. To do so is to die. Our men already on the field must be more energetic, not only in their present charges, but they must evangelize the unchurched regions around them.

2. We must put some new men in each of these Conferences. The bishops are looking for them. We do not need men in the fields who have been failures elsewhere. We appeal to men because of the love of Christ and humanity to take up work in these mission fields in the same spirit as one would take it up anywhere in the world.

In Colorado we spent one of our rest days with Rev. Robert E. Dickenson, who has done such splendid work in Colorado Springs and elsewhere.

One day's trip took us by Ford 55 miles out on the plains from Trinidad. The people had gathered under a few trees in a creek bed for the day's service. Many of them had come many miles, but were there early and stayed late, eager to see and hear. The Bishop preached a strong and much appreciated sermon before noon, the writer giving them a practical talk after lunch. This section of the State is larger than New Jersey or Rhode Island, yet there is only one preacher there. He simply cannot cover this territory. We must have two more men for the two new circuits to be formed there at the next session of the Conference. A Ford and living will be provided the men who will undertake this heroic and pioneering work. There is no better climate in the world for people who may be fearing or fighting the tubercular plague. If any preacher is interested, write Bishop W. F. McMurry, 1119 Fourth Avenue, Louisville, Kentucky. We could use six men for work of this kind in Colorado.

One day was spent with the efficient Epworth League worker, Rev. R. E. Noliner, in the Conference League meeting at Pueblo. This was their first annual session and they were delighted with the beginning. Brother Nollner and I drove out to Beulah, investigating a location for a Rocky Mountain Summer Assembly. There is no lovlier place for summer gatherings than Beulah. Further investigations will be made and, with the proper encouragement and endorsement, there may be established there this Summer Assembly, which will mean much to our work and workers in the heart of the Rockies.

Southern Illinois and Colorado present great Home Mission opportunities and we should no longer delay a larger program for our church there.

May we not hope to hear from some real missionary heroes who will undertake the missionary task at our very doors?

ARE MINISTERS BUSINESS MEN?

We educate our ministry specifically for the work of that ministry, and we set them apart for that special work with the distinct understanding that they will not enter the fields of business, no matter how strongly those fields may call. And because the minister does not meddle with business—business men who are immersed in it six or seven days in the week, receive the impression that the minister knows nothing about business. They look upon him as a somewhat of a recluse and a book-worm, and they conclude that he has little or no business ability. And they get to believe this thing so firmly that they begin to joke about it, and finally they boldly declare that the minister knows nothing about business and should therefore have nothing to say about it; and occasionally we hear the cheap sneer, "oh, he's a minister; he doesn't know anything about business."

It is a small matter,perhaps, and yet it is one which works a manifest injustice to our preachers. They may be preachers, but they are more than preachers; and leaving out of account a very few of our most prominent business men, we should be inclined to assert that our ministers as a class would more than average up in business and managerial ability with any class of business men in the country.

We are not ignorant of, and we do not wish to ignore, the striking exceptions. We know there are a few men who are never on time, possibly even at their own weddings. We have heard of preachers who know remarkably well how to get into debt and remarkably little how to get out of it. We have heard of preachers who could not agree with any one, not even with their own wives. We have heard of others who could "sit and sing themselves away" on the very verge of a volcano. Some of these stories may be exaggerated; some of these preachers may never have had any existence; but granting all that has been claimed as to these cases, the fact still remains that these were exceptions. The average minister is usually a good business man.

In the Methodist Church the best proof of this, and all the proof that is needed, will be found in our record as a church. The Methodist Church as it exists in Canada to-day, is to a very large degree under God, the creation of the Methodist ministry. We have not yet the figures for the year 1922, but for 1918 the record shows that Methodism in Canada and Newfoundland had 3745 churches, 1562 parsonages, and seventeen colleges, the total value of these being nearly $11,000,000, and the total debt on the whole property being less than $5,000,000. And the total raised for all church purposes that year was $6,753,991. We submit that this record is proof enough that our Methodist ministers, as a class, have no small ability in handling the financial problems of the church.

We do not desire in the least to detract from the value of the services of our successful laymen, but we claim that every intelligent layman will recognize that the financial enterprises of the church depend usually in no small degree upon the financial ability of the pastor in charge. And in the face of such a record as Methodism has written, we think the Methodist ministry needs no further recommendation as successful business men on rather a large scale.—Christian Guardian.

EQUIP THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

By Dr. Charles M. Sheldon.

Whatever else the Sunday schools of the world do in the working out of a program, one thing seems to stand out clear, and that is the teaching of the practical ideals of Jesus. But before that can be done effectively, the church must give the Sunday school its right place in the educational rank of positive forces in the new world order.

And by that is meant defining the Sunday schools of the world as the greatest educational institutions of the world. They are not organized to teach art or science or mathematics or languages, but they are organized to teach boys and girls about God and justice and truth and right living. If religion is greater than any other knowledge, then certainly it is not claiming too much for the Sunday school that it is the highest educational force we have, and if so, then the churches must put it in the highest place of honor and value.

How much does the American citizen, well-to-do, in the average church, pay to have his boy or girl educated in the Sunday school? What proportion of the church members' income is given to the church for equipping the greatest educational force in the world? Most Sunday schools carry on their wonderful work under the worst handicap. No high school would endure for a moment the pitiful school-room equipment that the churches provide for their Sunday schools. Is it any wonder that the boy or girl looks upon the Sunday school often with indifference and even with contempt?

The time has come for the members of the churches of America and the world to pay the price for religious instruction. There is money enough in the average church to put up well-furnished religious educational buildings for the tremendous teaching of religion and conduct. We have cheapened religion by letting the church give it to us as if we were objects of charity. Salvation is free. But religious education ought to cost something.—The Christian Herald.

OVERSPEEDING.

'Twas mighty lucky the other night
The fairy police were out of sight!

For a young and reckless firefly,
Taking every knoll on "high,"
Tore a hundred miles an hour
By tree and knoll, by bush and flower,
And ran, with only a tail light, crash
Into the trunk of a mountain ash,
And with a terrible bang and hurtle
Stood on his nose and then turned turtle!

'Twas mighty lucky the other night
The fairy police were out of sight!

THE BIRD IN THE CLOCK.

Little Sophy's head was bowed down like a bush loaded with snow. And then her tears began to patter, patter.

She had hoped that there would be lots of trees and birds, and all such homelike things, in the new American town to which her parents had moved. And there was only one bare, dead, little cottonwood tree in front of the house.

And about the church there wasn't even the smallest twig for a bird to light upon, though they had trilled and sung all summer in the heavy boughs which reached out so close to her village church in Sweden.

Then Sophy's head was quickly lifted as she thought of that place; it came up straight and happy like a bush when the sun has come out suddenly upon it and made all the snow tumble from it.

Yes, her good old pastor's face had been like the warm sunshine as he had kissed her and said, "You must look for happy things when you go over the great ocean."

Were there any things like that to see here? Yes, for her mother didn't look half so pale and sick as she used to. And her father and brother Carl now got such good pay for all their work.

The more she thought, the bigger blessings she saw.

And when she went into church with her father the next Sunday morning she tried hard not to think how narrow and bare it looked. Then she almost clapped her hands in joy as she saw the gilded picture of a bird at the bottom of the clock near the pulpit.

"Such a golden beauty," she whispered to herself. "And we can see it all the time as we sit here."

And the church seemed to be full of sunshine.

As little Sophy stood by the church door very early on Sunday she saw a sad-looking man coming down the street.

"O sir," she said as she ran to him with her heart full of pity, "you must come in and see our pretty bird in the clock. It cannot sing even one little trill. But its wings shine all the time."

"A bird—in a clock? Why, what do you mean?"

But as the man looked into Sophy's pleading blue eyes and felt her warm little hand slipping into his, he said, "Yes, child, I will go with you."

"I am so glad that you understand some of my Swedish words," laughed Sophy. "And I'm sure you'll like the bird."

But the little picture looked very plain to the man, though he tried to praise it as much as he could.

"And what makes you like it so?" he asked.

"O God just sent it to make the church look more homelike. But if I had not remembered what my good old pastor said I might never have looked around sharp like and seen it just as I do. That made it shine and take much sorrow out of my heart. I hope it will help you."

"I hope so. My little girl used to come down here to Sioux City with me. She died two months ago. I was thinking much about her as I walked down the street this morning, where we used to ride together so much. And it seemed to me there was no God or he would not have taken her away from me. But you think he is good?"

"Oh, yes, I know it right here in my heart."

Sophy's face shone so that at last the man said, "The world does look brighter. My little Minnie must be safe with the Lord who loved her. If that bird in the clock makes you happy, I ought not to complain when I have my great farm where the corn grows so high, and the plum trees are loaded with fruit every year. And my dear wife and little Peter are very kind. You must come out and see them some day, and hear the real birds sing in the cottonwoods and the box elders."

"Then you will love the Lord?" said Sophy almost as though she had not heard a word about the corn and the birds.

"Yes, my dear child."

"I'm so glad our pastor told me to look for happy things over the great ocean," said Sophy. "We'll never forget the shining birdie in the clock."—C. N. Sinnett, in Northwestern Christian Advocate.

THE ROBBER WEEDS.

Up in the sky the sun blazed hotly, and its rays reached all the way down to a certain back garden where a little boy and girl, Robbie and Roberta, were both just on the verge of tears. They had been pulling weeds until they were both very hot and tired; and there were still a great many left. Mamma had gone up-town that afternoon, and before leaving had asked the twins to weed the back yard.

Both children felt sure that mamma had no idea how many weeds there were or she wouldn't have asked them to pull them all in one afternoon. But mamma was gone, and both Robbie and Roberta felt they should finish the task before going to play.

"Oh, isn't it hot?" complained Robbie, mopping his brow.

"Yes, 'tis. Don't you just hate these old weeds?" asked Roberta, pulling at a particularly stubborn one.

Just then Aunt Helen called from the back porch:

"Hadn't you children better come rest on the steps and let me tell you something about those robbers?"

"Robbers!" cried Robbie.

"Robbers!" echoed Roberta.

"Yes, robbers," repeated Aunt Helen.

"Those are called robber weeds," she continued as the children settled comfortably on the steps by her side; "and one time a few years ago the seeds of them were left here by a circus that camped just outside the town. These circus owners had to carry a certain kind of prairie hay for the elephants, and this weed with the bright yellow bloom happened to be in with the prairie hay. The next year after the big circus camped here great quantities of this weed sprang up on the camping ground"—

"But why do they call it the robber weed?" asked Robbie eagerly.

"I was just coming to that," smiled Aunt Helen. "They call it that because it chokes out all other things that start to grow near it. It sends out long roots near the surface of the ground and drinks up all the nourishment, and the grass soon dies around where this weed grows. It robs the other plants of all the moisture—just drinks it all up until they wither, and"—

"Oh, the horrid things!" cried Robbie; "it shan't rob our nice grass—just watch me!"

"And me, too," said Roberta.

And before Aunt Helen could finish her story the twins were making sport of pulling robber weeds.

"Watch me pull this big robber!" cried Robbie.

"Watch me pull this one," laughed Roberta.

"I think you will have all the robbers driven away within a half hour at the rate you are going now," called Aunt Helen; "and when you have finished and washed your hands and faces nicely, you will find me on the front porch—and I think there will be a plate of cakes and a pitcher of iced lemonade—so hurry, dears."—Beth Slater Whitson, in The Watchman-Examiner.

The sower who casts in the seed, the father or mother casting in the fruitful word, are accomplishing a pontifical act, and ought to perform it with religious awe, with prayer and gravity, for they are laboring at the kingdom of God. All seed-growing is a mysterious thing, whether the seed fall into the earth or into souls.—Amiel.

DIRECTIONS.

All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Printed Lab l on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after three or four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.

Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper.. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

THE POLL ON PROHIBITION.

We are sure our readers are interested in the progress of the poll on the prohibition question being conducted by the Literary Digest. In the issue of August 5, the results of 480,000 votes are given. Summarized, they are as follows:

In favor of a strict enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Law, 181,704;

In favor of modification of the Volstead Law to permit the sale of light wines and beer, 196,864;

In favor of repealing the Eighteenth Amendment, 101,475.

Although the votes recorded from Louisiana and Mississippi thus far are compartively few, it is of interest to see how the sentiment in these two States is expressing itself. The figures are as follows:

Louisiana—For strict enforcement, 12; for modification, 13; for repeal, 3.

Mississippi—For strict enforcement, 236; for modification, 200; for repeal, 102.

We repeat what we said a short time ago, that it is not a question whether we shall have Constitutional prohibition or not—that matter is already settled—but it is a question as to whether or not we shall have an enforcement law that will make the Eighteenth Amendment effective. Under the terms of the Amendment itself, Congress has the power to declare what alcoholic content renders a beverage intoxicating, and it is evidently with the hope of influencing Congress to modify the present law that the "wets" are laying such stress upon the showing thus far made. Practically all those who express themselves upon the saloon, even though they are in favor of light wines and beer, declare that the saloon has passed forever. The logic of their own position should convince them that the best way—practically the only way—to get rid permanently of the saloon is to maintain the present law. If liquor dealers could be relied upon at all to obey the law, there might be wines and beer without saloons; but experience has proved that they will not, as a class, obey it, and to permit the legal sale of light drinks would be sure to result in the illegal sale of the stronger ones.

As we see it, there is very little encouragement for the extreme "wets" in the result of the vote thus far. Of the 480,000 votes already cast, only 101,475 are in favor of the repeal of the Amendment, leaving 378,568 in favor of strict enforcement or only a modification. The Digest has just sent out 2,000,000 ballots to women, and we predict that when the returns from these are in, the result will be still more discouraging to the "wets."

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Brother Byron Smith, of Peoria, Miss., has been a reader of the Advocate since 1875.

Rev. A. T. Long, of Barlow, Miss., writes that the work on his charge is moving along nicely.

Rev. J. B. Cain, our pastor at Ellisville, Miss., assisted Rev. P. H. Howse in a good meeting at Pinola, Miss., last week.

Bishop Sam R. Hay and Bishop H. A. Boaz sailed for the Orient on July 27. Dr. and Mrs. W. W. Pinson sailed at the same time.

The Florida Christian Advocate now goes into all the homes represented in 104 churches. The budget plan is used—and it works.

In making mention last week of laymen who were very helpful in the Seashore Camp Meeting, we inadvertently omitted the title, "Dr." before the name of J. C. Ballard. We beg his pardon.

Rev. J. Cude Rousseaux, pastor of Mangum Memorial Methodist Church, Shreveport, La., reports an attendance of 33 at prayer meeting on August 2.

Rev. and Mrs. R. T. Ware, Mooringsport, La., announce the arrival of a daughter in their home, on August 2. She has been named Gurial Elizabeth. Blessings upon the little one!

An agreement has been entered into between Central College for men, and Howard-Payne, a junior college for women, both at Fayette, Mo., by which their work will be closely co-ordinated.

Dr. Russell H. Conwell, of Philadelphia, is reported to have said recently that out of 5000 marriages performed by him during the thirty years of his ministry, there has not been a single divorce.

Dr. C. M. Chapman, of Shelby, Miss., accompanied by his family, is spending the month of August on a vacation, his congregation having voted him this expression of appreciation. The work goes well at Shelby.

Prof. Chas. S. Pettis has been elected president of Morris Harvey College, Barbourville, West Virginia. He is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin, and is a son-in-law of the late Bishop A. Coke Smith.

Mrs. T. D. Lipscomb, wife of our pastor at Grand Cane, La., was operated on for appendicitis at a hospital in Shreveport on August 1. The operation was serious, but we are glad to learn that she is getting along well.

Rev. R. I. Collins, of Shannon, Miss., writes: "We are moving along nicely on the Shannon and Nettleton circlt. Good meetings have been held, with good results. We have a fine Epworth League at Nettleton. The Lord is with us."

Prof. James N. Hillman, State Secretary of the Virginia Board of Education, was recently elected president of Emory and Henry College, to succeed Dr. J. S. French, resigned. Dr. French has been appointed presiding elder of the Knoxville District.

Dr. Geo. S. Sexton, president of Centenary College, Shreveport, La., delivered the address at the laying of the corner stone of the College Hill Methodist Church, Texarkana, Ark., on Friday afternoon, August 4. Dr. Sexton founded this church thirty-four years ago.

Mrs. Geo. S. Brown, of New Orleans, who spends the summer on the Seashore Camp Ground, is actively interested in every movement that looks toward the improvement of the place. She was instrumental in having a better lighting system installed in the tabernacle.

The prayer meeting at Oakdale, La., Rev. A. M. Shaw, pastor, made a good showing in the month of July. The smallest attendance for the month was 78, and the largest was 111. The average for the month was 86. August started with an attendance of 95.

Rev. L. L. Roberts, our active and efficient pastor at Columbia, Miss., recently sent us 42 additional subscriptions to the Advocate, making a total of 197 now going to his people. Brother Roberts heads the list in the circulation of the church paper in the three Conferences.

Dr. H. F. Tolle, pastor of Capitol Street Methodist Church, Jackson, Miss., and his young son Bob [illegible] the Advocate office an appreciated call on Monday of this week. It was inspiring to hear Dr. Tolle tell of the work of the "Flying Squadron" in Jackson and neighboring towns.

According to the Sunday School Messenger, a newsy bulletin issued under the auspices of the North Mississippi Conference Sunday School Board, the total receipts for Sunday School Day thus far are $667.20. We wonder if every Sunday school in our three Conferences has observed the day as the Discipline directs.

Rev. G. D. Purcell, our pastor at South Mansfield, La., writes us that the church building at that place was destroyed by an electrical storm on Tuesday afternoon, August 1. Only fire insurance was carried on the building. We have no douht but that under the efficient leadership of Brother Purcell the building will soon be restored

Miss Cora Perkins, one of the consecrated Sunday school workers of the Louisiana Avenue Methodist Church, this city, has recently returned from Lake Junaluska, N. C., where she took courses of study in Sunday school work. She is teaching a class in "Life in the Making," at Clinton, La., this week.

The Commission on Constitution, authorized by the recent General Conference, has been announced as follows: Bishops—W. A. Candler, Collins Denny, W. F. McMurry; Clerical—J. E. Harrison, J. A. Anderson, J. L. Clark. M. L. Carlisle, C. W. Tadlock, W. A. Christian; Lay—S. B. Adams, J. L. Kelly, C. B. Ames, M. E. Lawson, J. E. Cockrell, J. T. Allison.

Rev. C. Norman Guice, formerly of the Mississippi Conference, now one of our most successful general evangelists, is holding a meeting at Columbia, Miss., Rev. L. L. Roberts, pastor. The singing is being led by Prof. R. L. Milam, evangelistic singer. Prof. Milam is open for engagements during the month of September. His address is 9 Crew Street, Atlanta, Ga.

We acknowledge the honor of an invitation to attend the marriage of Prof. C. C. Norton and Miss Mable Alberta Binning, at the First Baptist Church, Knoxville, Tenn., on Thursday evening, August 24, at eight o'clock. Prof. Norton is a son of Rev. and Mrs. H. L. Norton, of the Mississippi Conference, and is engaged in teaching in Alexander College, Jacksonville, Texas. May heaven's richest blessings rest upon this fine young couple.

Chaplain John A. Randolph, stationed at Fort McPherson, Ga., is on a four months' leave of absence at Lake Junaluska, N. C., at the expiration of which on November 30, he will retire from active service. An impressive farewell service was held in his honor at Fort McPherson on the Sunday preceding his going away. Col. Randolph is a member of the North Mississippi Conference, and is one of the best known chaplains in the army.

Rev. Julian S. Duncan, one of the splendid young members of the North Mississippi Conference, now attending Emory University, would like to assist in some meetings in North Mississippi during the month of September. His address after August 26 will be 44 Court Strect, West Point, Miss.

Brother Duncan has practically completed his work for the Bachelor of Divinity degree in the Candler School of Theology, and will come up for regular work at the next session of the North Mississippi Conference.

The Methodists of Logtown, Miss., have given their pastor, Rev. E. L. Alford, a vacation trip to Lake Junaluska, North Carolina. He will attend the Conference on Life and Work. It is useless to say he was delighted with this announcement. We hope he may be benefited physically, mentally and spiritually.

A telegram from Rev. Waldo W. Moore, dated Biloxi, Miss., August 7, says: "Camp Ground Sunday school and patrons have given nineteen dollars on Ford car, Dawson and others are increasing fund. Chalmers has helped. The Advocate and editor are truly our friends. Brethren, read ths Advocate of July 27. Put the plan to work. One hundred dollars have been given so far. Cooper gave $25."

We take the following news item from the "Big Brothsr," of Greenville, Miss.: "Seventy-seven names have been added to our church roll this year. Twenty-five of them have been added during ths past two months. We now have 710 names on our roll. Possibly twenty-five of these ought to be stricken from the roll because they have been lost sight of, but that still leaves us almost 700 who are in reach of the church. What a vast army that is, and what a work we have to do to train this army! It is enough to make the leaders quake and tremble in their shoes."

THANKS TO OUR FRIENDS.

We desire to express our thanks to the following friends who have sent us two or more subscriptions recently: Rev. L. L. Roberts, Columbia, Miss., 42; Rev. W. H. Giles, Slidell, La., 5; Rev. J. C. Rousseaux, Shreveport, La., 2; Rev. R. I. Collins, Shannon, Miss., 2; Rev. T. B. Cottrell, Vicksburg, Miss., 5.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The presiding elders of the North Mississippi Conference are requested to meet me in Winona at 9 a. m. on Wednesday, Sept. 20, for a consideration of the interests of the Conference. The Conference Missionary Secretary, president of the Board of Missions, chairman of the Evangellstic Committee, and the Conference Secretary of Education are also requested to attend this meeting that we may confer over the interests which they represent. W. N. AINSWORTH.

THE WEDDING-GARMENT.

By Rev. Ernest A. Miller, Ph.D.

"It is so easy to get into the church nowadays." This is a fairly frequent remark—usually made by thoss of the older generation. They further complain: "Church rolls are padded with names of folks who are not Christians." "What the church most needs is a good weeding out."

Possibly these critics have a considerable show of reason on their side. Children are received into the church before they arrive at the age of personal choice. Evangelists and pastors save themselves from meager totals and accessions by invading the Sunday school for a killing. This indiscretion of forcing is often followed by the greater indiscretion of negligence after the children are signed in the church. A child in the church should be nurtured, instructed, guided, encouraged, fortified, trained, used. Joining the church, church membership, is a mere form to be filled with a deep spiritual content by education and service. To consider a child secured spiritually because he has joined the church is uttermost folly. When you receive a child into church membership you have enlarged and intensified your obligation towards him. Unless by your prayers and interest he continues to go forward in the church, he will go back until his initial covenant is nothing more than "a scrap of paper." Church rolls are padded with the names of those who joined church as children and straightway were left criminally alone. They show no particular interest in the church anad in the Kingdom now. What would you do with such names? The church has nothing but names in such instances.

Further, there are those who signed a card, shook the evangelist's hand, or stood up in meeting. Then and consequently they were received into the church. A very easy route. Our friends of other days tell about an altar, a demonstration, a sound experience, a clear testimony. But where are the evidences of transformation in these times in which we live? However, these members are in. Their names are just as prominent on the roll as anybody's. Their faces are almost stranger to the sanctuary. Not all, to be sure, but some. Every church seems to have some extra-mural members. What shall we do with them?

Also there are some in the church who do not live according to the principles of Christianity. One will not deny that judgment belongs unto God. But if a churchman swears, it is plain that he is not true to the church. If he does business in a dishonest way, anybody can see that he is dishonoring the church. If by some crooked or unjust system of finance or industry he is harming his fellows, he is a sinner, and it does not take a prophet to say so. Men who are termed outsiders are quick to pick these flaws. Every personal worker knows that. You say to a man for whose salvation you have been praying: "Will you not become a Christian and join the church?" He retorts by citing the case of so-and-so who is a professed Christian, a member of your church, and he himself would not stoop to the things that so-and-so stoops to. Say what you like, he has put a poser up to you. So-called insiders may not find so much fault with the fellow church-member in question. He may be a man of influence. He may pay generously to the church. What can we do with him and his kind?

The Word makes it quite clear that there is a Visible Church and there is an Invisible Church. And these are not altogether the same. Mostly so, I think, but not altogether. That is, the majority of those who really belong to the kingdom of God are members of the formal church. But—say it softly in our human ignorance—it would seem as though there are some whose names are on our church books whose names are not duplicated on the Lamb's Book of Life. And, on the other hand, there are some who have never joined the church here who are making sure of an entrance into heaven.

Answers to the perplexing questions of absolute requisites for church affiliation, and the wisdom of expulsion in cases of disloyalty, may be found in some of the parables of the Teacher. The parable of the marriage feast and the guest without the wedding-garment is most illuminating. It seemed easy to get into the feast. "Go ye therefore unto the parting of the highways, and as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage feast." Apparently the insiders here did not notice the man without the required garment. Or it made no difference to them—they did not care. But the king came. "He saw there a man who had not on a wedding-garment: and he saith unto him, Friend, how camest thou in hither not having a wedding-garment? And he was speechless." If the other guests did advise him of his lack, he could excuse himself; he could talk them off. But there was no arguing with the king. The man had nothing to say. "Bind him hand and foot, and cast him out into the outer darkness; there shall be the weeping and gnashing of teeth."

What is the wedding-garment? with what must a man be clothed to be a member of the true church? Remember the King will come; he will unerringly read our fitness or unfitness. The wedding-garment is an inner quality with a consistent external expression. Paul exhorted the Galatians thus, "Put on Christ." He wrote the Colossians thus, "Put on charity." Every man must come into the true church by way of Calvary. That is, "Ye must be born again." He who comes into the church proudly, claiming his own merits, is not clothed with the wedding-garment. We must acknowledge our sins, they must be forgiven, we must take on the character of Christ, if we are to be ready for the coming of the King. This does not mean the same for children as for adults. It does mean accepting Christ for all. It does mean receiving him more completely as capacity and opportunity enlarge. Some lose their wedding-garments because they forget Chirst, they leave off charity. Giving one's heart to God is not a final act. Joining the church is not an eternal guarantee of spiritual safety. We must grow in grace or lose our wedding-garment.

What shall we do with the apparent traitors to the Kingdom—those who have a church membership but an inconsistent life? Leave it to the King. He will come, and it is his right to judge and expel. The church discipline may give some authority for expulsion. But in the main that should be left to God. The parable of the wheat and tares directs that way. It is our business to receive people into the church according to rule and custom. It is our business to make a church in which souls can have the fairest chance at Christlikeness and growth. It is God's business to keep the Kingdom roll and to appoint the final destination of all.—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

A SCHOOL FOR EVANGELISM.

One great note, if not the greatest note of this quadrennium, must be evangelism. And why not? Is not this the chief business of all Christianity?

If we have summer schools to study methods of church work, why not have a school to study this, the most important of all subjects?

This school of evangelism this year will be held at Lake Junaluska, N. C., August 17-27. Programs have been sent to every bishop, presiding elder and pastor. We hope it will be announced from every pulpit, and that we may have a large attendance of both the ministers and laity from every section of the entire church.

Classes will be conducted in "The Sunday School and Evangelism," "The Layman and Evangelism," and "The Pastor and Evangelism." Bishop Collins Denny and Bishop W. N. Ainsworth and others will be speakers for the 11 o'clock and the 8 o'clock hours. Every address will center around this one theme.

Make your arrangements to be at "The Lake" at this time. Programs and information may be had by writing the undersigned, or J. Dale Stentz, Lake Junaluska, N. C. R. L. RUSSELL,

Each cloud has of silver a lining,
Though we may not see its light;
The sun has not ceased its shining,
Though hidden awhile from our sight.
Be faithful and active and earnest,
In idleness never sit down;
The better the dark cross you carry
The brighter will sparkle the crown.

MRS. MARY S. WEBB MYERS was born in Sumpter County, Alabama, April 28, 1838. She was married to Mr. W. P. Myers at the home of her parents, in Livingston County, Alabama, on January 7, 1857. She died at the home of her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Brown, at Minden, La., on May 2, 1922, having just passed her eighty-fourth birthday. She joined the Methodist Church in childhood, and for something like three-score years and ten, until the time of her death, she continued a faithful and devoted member of it. As long as health and strength permitted, she was a regular attendant on the services of her church, and even when increasing feebleness, intensified by a fall which crippled her, prevented her attendance, she manifested a lively interest in all of its work. In a remarkable degree she retained, in spite of the growing infirmities of age, an intelligent interest in what went on about her. She was a cheerful and patient sufferer, and always enjoyed and appreciated the visits of her pastor and other friends. A large family connection is left to mourn her passing. Of twelve children born to her, five are still living, one son and four daughters. Forty-three grandchildren and thirty great-grandchildren have blessed her life, of whom a large number are still living. In addition to her own descendants, the Webb family of Minden, of which she was a member, constitute a large circle. Who can estimate the influence of such a life, covering a large part of a century, devoted in a quiet and unostentatious way to those high ideals of social and religious life which underlie the best in our American civilization, and influencing so large a progeny by the transmission of such ideals?

W. WINANS DRAKE.

Shreveport, La.

CALVIN P. JACKSON, son of John Lanfair and Cynthia Elizabeth Jackson, was born near Torza Methodist Church, southeast of Sardis, Miss., on June 15, 1851, and spent his whole life in this community. When death came his body was laid to rest in the church yard, after funeral services led by Rev. Ben P. Jaco, assisted by Revs. J. H. Arnold, R. A. N. Wilson, E. G. Mohler and J. D. Wroten, on July 20, 1922. The unusually large attendance of friends and the great profusion of flowers of exquisite beauty indicated the universal esteem and affectionate regard in which he was held. On December 9, 1874, he was married to Miss Clara Stainback Dugger, of the same community. Of their eleven children, seven survive him, viz.: Mesdames J. M. Kyle, J. H. Land, W. E. Segrest, Ray Davidson, W. J. Cox, A. B. Friend, and W. F. Patton. He was never more happy than when surrounded by his children and some or all of his twenty-one grandchildren. He was an active and successful business man, as also public spirited, serving his community and country as an officer of the law. While I was pastor of that church I had religious talks with him and he was a regular attendant upon church services and supporter of the church, though not a member. At his death he assured the enquirer that he was not afraid of death and was ready to meet God. He was my personal friend, and with many others I shall miss him greatly. With friendship's gentle hand we spread the mantle of charity over all his errors and firmly resolve to avoid making them in our lives; while with the warmth of brotherly love we make to glow all his noble virtues and purpose to make our lives lustrous with holy living in this world, and by faith in Jesus Christ seek life everlasting.

His friend, BEN P. JACO.

Winona, Miss., July 25, 1922.

D. O. SUMMER was born in Newberry, South Carolina, February 16, 1841, and died June 18, 1922, crossing the span of eighty-one years in the flight of time, attended in his last hours by his wife, his brother, A. L., and all of his children: John L., Van, Mrs. Emma Whyte, Mrs. Lela Walker, Mrs. Rovilla Lewis. He was buried at Hattiesburg beside his son, Thomas O., who died nearly twenty years ago. The funeral was attended by many friends, and there were numerous floral offerings. He came from a family which had highest conceptions of duty and deep religious convictions. Within less than a month after the outbreak of the Civil War he enrolled as a volunteer in the Confederate army. He received his baptism of fire and blood early in the struggle; and though thrice wounded, he was in the conflict when the Stars and Bars went down at Appomattox. On a moral question his friends always knew where to find him. He was a consistent member of the Methodist Church; and frequently during his last years expressed his willingness to meet the final summons.

HENRY G. HAWKINS.

Newton, Miss.

On July 3, 1922, the death angel called for the spirit of MRS. ELIZABETH DELOACH ALEXANDER, wife of the late J. M. Alexander. Mrs. Alexander was born on June 1, 1873; she was married to the above-named on January 5, 1892; she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at the age of eleven years, under the pastorate of Rev. T. W. Lewis, now of the Memphis Conference. Her mother, two children, son and daughter, with her many friends, who mourn her going, say that as daughter, wife, mother, friend and neighbor, she was everything that could possibly be expected of any one—true to her church, to her home, to her friends and loved ones. We miss her, but heaven is enriched by her going.

H. N. McKIBBEN, P. C.

Miss MARY MATHILDA DICKERSON was born in Perry County, Mississippi, at Augusta, October 8, 1837. She joined the Methodist Church in early childhood and remained true until her death, June 2, 1922. She was married to James M. Grayson on July 8, 1869. We laid her away in the old Leaf River Cemetery near Moselle in the presence of her sorrowing children, grandchildren, friends, and relatives. The character of her life and teaching is reflected in the lives of her children, who are faithful members of the Methodist church. Let it not be said that the good is always buried with the dead, for it lives on to bless the succeeding generations. Such a long and faithful life ought to be a challenge to us to follow on. Christianity must indeed be true, else it could not satisfy the deep longings of a heart for three-score years.

Ellisville, Miss. J. B. CAIN.

RESOLUTIONS.

When, on Sunday morning, July 9, 1922, the immortal spirit of our beloved leader and friend, MRS. W. M. WILLIAMS, passed to its heavenly home, a pall of sadness fell over the whole community which to many can only be lifted in part until we see her face to face in that home not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. In all activities of the church she will be missed. Especially shall we, the members of the Missionary Society, miss her wise leadership, able counsel, and loving and tender friendship. To all with whom she came in contact she was ever kind and gracious, and many bear witness to her generosity and loving deeds. Hers was a life of service for others. The ideal preacher's helpmate, the loving wife and devoted mother, her influence has gone out to the uttermost parts of the world and not only her own, but also many other children rise up and call her blessed. As a neighbor and friend she was kind and thoughtful. In her work in the church and Sunday school she was faithful and generous, and all the honor and glory was given to her Lord and Master. Therefore be it resolved:

That we extend to the grief-stricken husband, children, sister and nieces our sincere sympathy, believing our Father knoweth best. "The treasure was lent us for awhile and then recalled; O help us, Lord, to say, 'Thy will be done.'"

That these resolutions be spread on the minutes of our Society and a copy be sent to the bereaved family, our town paper, The Booster, and the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed by: Mrs. Jas. Hand, Mrs. M. O. Jordan, Mrs. T. W. Cooper.

Ice Cream Powder

ICE CREAM THAT MOTHER MAKES GOES FAST

Up to very recent times home-made ice cream was not the real thing at all. Now when mother (or the maid or the cook) makes ice cream she uses one package of Jell-O Ice Cream Powder and one quart of rich milk for half a gallon of ice cream—and she never fails to have "good luck."

Jell-O Ice Cream Powder is sold by all grocers, two packages for 25 cents.

MISSISSIPPI EPWORTH LEAGUE CONFERENCE.

We are giving you this week reports from the Committee on Junior and Intermediate work, and the Committee on Resolutions, which were adopted at the Brookhaven 1922 Assembly.

We wish to call especial attention to paragrph 5, 6, 7 and 8 in the report on Resolutions. Would it not be well for each Chapter to adopt Resolutions of like manner and live up to them to the letter?

In too many cases our Leaguers fail to support their pastor by regularly attending the church services. It has been well said that the preaching of the Gospel is the biggest thing in the world. Let us fall in line and be always on hand, ready to lend a helping hand in every form of church service.

A number of Epworth Leagues have been helpful this summer in filling the appointments of their pastors while they have been away holding meetings or taking a much needed vacation.

Others have taken over the Wednesday evening prayer services during the pastor's absence. These services have been well conducted and both pastor and congregation have been delighted. Is your League ready to offer this kind of service?

We have found as a rule that Epworth Leaguers are honest, sincere, God-loving young folks eager to serve and do the will of God. Let us place ourselves in a position where the church can use us at any time and at any place.

Rev. L. J. Snellgrove, who was a most welcome visitor at the Assembly, writes this to our President:

"En route to Biloxi, I went by the Epworth League Assembly at Brookhaven and spent the week with the Leaguers. There are many things to be said about the Assembly, but I am going to mention the thing that impressed me most, and that was the Christian spirit manifested by the young people. To be brought close to them is to know the desire of their hearts for a better life. I am persuaded all that they want is a chance. This week was a feast to my soul. It was inspiring to see them as they went about their work with their heart and life in it, and there were many who offered themselves for life service to be used anywhere the Lord may call them. The many inspiring testimonies that were heard are the evidences of what God is doing for the young lives. May God's richest blessings rest upon them and upon the Assembly for the next year."

We are giving you this week, too, the Epworth League Song which won the Epworth League pin at the Assembly. This song was written by Miss Louise Preston, of Vicksburg, who is known and loved by so many of the Leaguers of the Mississippi Conference.

If we can "wake up" our District Secretaries and Chapter Corresponding Secretaries, we hope to have some news from the field next week.

J. H. WEEMS.

Report on Junior and Intermediate Work, Adopted at Epworth League Assembly, Brookhaven, Miss.

We, the members of the committee on Junior and Intermediate Work, recommend the following:

1. That there be an increase of 35 per cent in Junior-Intermediate Leagues this year.

2. That the Senior Leagues recognize more the responsibility resting upon them for the Junior-Intermediate Leagues.

3. That the Junior-Intermediate work be given a prominent place in each District Institute held.

4. That all Leagues organized strive to attain a Standard of Efficiency as outlined by the Central Office.

5. That every Junior and Intermediate Superintendent be enrolled in a Superintendents' Training Course.

Signed:
Mrs. J. M. SMITH, Chairman.

Report of Committee on Resolutions, Adopted by Epworth League Assembly, Brookhaven, Miss.

We, the committeo on resolutions, submit the following: Resolved:

1. That we show by letter our appreciation of Dr. I. W. Cooper's kindness in giving us the use of the college for the Assembly.

2. That a letter of appreciation be sent to the Scout Master of Brookhaven, for the use of the Scout paraphernalia.

3. That the committee thank by letter Rev. W. H. Lewis, local pastor, the local chapter of the League, McGrath & Son, the First National Bank, Brookhaven Bank & Trust Co., and the Merchants Groeery for the entertainment they have so generously rendered.

4. Also that we thank Dr. G. C. Hounshell, E. O. Harbin, Miss Grace Gatewood, Miss Sadie Donnan, Miss Williams, Miss Maggie Flowers, Miss Mary Hoffman, President Hawkins and Secretary Miss Kile, and other Conference and district officers for their kind services.

5. That we pledge our support to the pastors and urge the Leaguers to attend church.

6. That we endorse the attitude of the church toward worldliness and urge a more construetive social service work and Christian social life.

7. That we urge co-operation with the Junior and Intermediate Leagues.

8. That we urge the study of the teachings and history of our church in order that our Leaguers may be well informed and loyal members of the church.

Respectfully,
O. S. LEWIS, Chairman.
HESTER SHARBROUGH, Secretary.

OUR LEAGUE EMBLEMS.

Tune: "Joy to the World."

Hail! Epworth League—true gulde of Youth,
March on with flag flung free;
Its gold for servlce, worth and truth,
Its white for purity,
Its white for purity,
Its white, its white for purity.

The modest violet, your flower,
Shows constancy and love;
Your badge, the Maltese Cross, each hour,
Our Christian live, would prove,
Our Christin lives would prove.
Our Christian ,our Christian lives would prove.

Daily your motto, "All for Christ"
We'll bravely strive to live;
And to this world of sin and strife,
A Savior's love to give,
A Savior's love to give,
A Savior's, a Savior's love to give.

Sunday School

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES

The Circuit Institute of the Harrisville circuit met with the Rexford Sunday school on the fifth Sunday. A good program was carried out. One young lady who was sick had her part written out and read—a fine idea. Reports from the schools showed progress. Each school reported some progress on its goals for the quarter, but none had reached them; so they reset the same goals, enlarging them, for the next quarter. Prof. J. R. Linn, of Millsaps College, delivered a very fine address on "The opportunity of the Sunday School Teacher." The crowd was unusually large. The people were interested. It was a fine meeting.

I have been at Rexford teaching and preaching. Such crowds! The young people have responded in an unusually happy way. We completed "Organization and Administration." I regret that no one stood the examination.

They are planning to build three Sunday school rooms to their church. Their church and Sunday school are growing unusually fast. The spiritual tide is rising. We had a very very fine consecration service. Many offered themselves, many professed faith, and 15 united with the church. This was a great occasion.

Don't forget the Sunday School Day offering. It is very important to the work. Pray for the work and the workers. Yours in Him,

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

Not Feeling Much Better.

Many are not being benefited by the summer vacation as they should be. Notwithstanding much outdoor life, they are little if any stronger now than they were. The tan on their faces is darker and makes them look healthier, but it is only a mask. They are still nervous, easily tired, upset by trifles, and they do not eat nor sleep well.

What they need is what tones the nerves, perfects digestion. In other words, they should take Hood's Sarsaparilla. Pupils, teachers, and others generally will find the chief purpose of the vacation best subserved by this great medicine which "builds up the whole system."

If a cathartic or laxative is needed, Hood's Pills will give entire satisfaction. It is difficult to conceive of anything better for biliousness or constipation.—Adv.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

News From The League At Bunkie.

A big "watermelon feast" was given on the church lawn in Bunkie on Friday, July 21. About 60 people were present, including 19 from the Glenmora League who came down in a body, and about 10 of the P. Y. P. U. The rest were Bunkie Leaguers.

A great time was enjoyed by all, ending with the usual "face-washing" stunt.

On Sunday, July 23, the Bunkie Leaguers, 20 strong, went to Bay Hills and put on a model Epworth League program. A Standard Epworth League was explained by Miss Mary Lyles. The Leaguers there promise a 100 per cent report next year at the Assembly. They are greatly interested in being represented at Mansfield, for they know that it means everything to their League.

REPORTER.

NEWS FROM OUR FIELD SECRETARY.

Back Home and Ready for Work.

Hello Leaguers: How's the work progressing at your place? Fine I hope. I have just returned from Virginia and North Carolina where I put in three weeks of hard assembly work. Some folks think I went on a vacation; well, as to work it was far from such, but nevertheless it was, for my, my, what blessing I received!

Tell you the straight of it, Leaguers, the past two months have been most wonderful months for me, and they shall never be forgotten. Blessings have come to me through the lives of you young folks which will always be sweet to memory and I want you Leaguers in the Louisiana Conference, Holston Conference and those at the General Assembly, Lake Junaluska, to know that you all have helped me on to a higher and holier life by being associated with you this summer.

Now what do you say if I tell you, in brief, about "our" trip. Yes, it was "ours," for Misses Nena Collins and Grace Cook were along and Rev. L. Clegg joined us at Junaluska. Well, you remember we were excused from the final banquet at Mansfield in order to make our train in Shreveport for Holston Assembly at Martha Washington College, Abingdon, Va., which was having its opening the same hour as Mansfield closed, and as I was an Instructor I had to be there by Wednesday night; so off we went from Mansfield. The official driver, W. G. Banks, Jr., at the wheel with his lady friend, Miss Johnson, from South Louisiana, by his side. Miss Cook and my family made up the party to Shreveport. There we were joined by Miss Collins and Mrs. Roy Moore. Bidding our families good-bye, we rushed across state after state doing nothing for thirty hours but eat and sleep. Well, we certainly did eat enough, for Nena's friend gave her a big box of candy just before she left home and we were compelled to eat it all.

The trip was fine—cool all along—and as it had been raining all along we were not disturbed with dust. We arrived in Abingdon about 9 p. m., Wednesday, and were officially introduced about 9:30 the same night. We all took up our work the first thing Thursday morning and, my, how time did fly!

This was Holston's second Assembly, and the writer has had the pleasure of attending both and at the close of this Assembly I was privileged to present their first Christian Culture Diplomas.

Another privilege which shall never be forgotten was the opportunity to conduct the two final Praise Services on the final Sunday and Monday nights. Oh, how wonderful did they respond, and at the two services five were converted, and I have received a letter since returning home telling me of another. I do not remember the exact number of volunteers but there were a great many and a large number of them designated their field, Home and Foreign.

Well, as much as we hated it we were compelled to separate, so my part left Abingdon Tuesday for Asheville, N. C. Now, on our way to Asheville we had to stop over at Morristown, Tenn., the home of the "Milk-fed-Chicken." We arrived there about 5 p. m., and lo, Billy Sunday was there; so I got in touch with my friend Rodeheaver, the singer, and he took us over in his car, gave us platform seats and also escorted us back to the hotel. We received extra good service there by the hotel management, for I forgot I was not speaking to a Leaguer when I told the lady manager that the ladies with me were my secretary and treasurer. My, a man with his secretary and treasurer! Clear the road, boys! Then when I met my friend Rodeheaver and he was so nice, the manager was convinced that she had a great capitalist in her midst. However, we left Morristown at 7:10 a. m., early enough to prevent her finding out differently.

For seven hours we traveled along the banks of the French Broad River, and oh how I wish I could explain to you the beauty of its scenery. We arrived at Lake Junaluska one day early and our plan was to get a bit of rest; but lo, we were immediately put to work, and from that first hour I was on the go.

Our class work opened Friday morning in the Mission Building and everything started off fine. We walked a bit over a mile to classes every day. It was my privilege to be on the General Assembly Staff and I taught a class each morning on "Conference Activities." Then in the afternoon I had charge of the Recreation. Miss Collins and Miss Cook were kept busy borrowing some one's umbrella to keep out of the rain, but lo, the sun did shine and I quickly lost the ladies, for they were boating with a kind gentleman from Georgia.

Owing to the heavy rains on July 3 and 4, we were compelled to observe our 4th on the 7th, and, as is the usual custom, we hiked to the top of Eagles Nest Mountain, a distance of three and a half miles high. Great trip. Grace and Nena did some real mountain climbing that day.

Leaguers, I wish I could explain the beauty of that land to you, but it is beyond my language. I have a large number of pictures, though, and hope I will be able to show them to you when I visit your place.

Our Junaluska program closed with a Life Service meeting Sunday night, July 9, and this was indeed a great service. It was my privilege to conduct the Praise Service on the final night and, my, what an army of folks who were on their feet testifying for Jesus.

Our Louisiana party, accompanied by a young lady from Mississippi, set sail early Monday morning in a big seven-passenger Studebaker car for a day's ride through North Carolina; and, say, we certainly had some trip. We arrived at Chimney Rock, about 35 miles east of Ashville, about one o'clock, and oh, how good that fried chicken dinner did taste up on the side of that mountain.

Leaguers, again my soul is flooded with the thought, and space will not permit me to go into detail of the wonderful things we saw. After driving back to Ashville we had the pleasure of going through the great Grove Park Inn. What a wonderful building!

We also had a short visit in Chattanooga visiting Chicamauga National Park, including Missionary Ride and the National Cemetery. The afternoon was spent on Lookout Mountain, and many interesting things did we see there. The trip was climaxed by a rain bath, and with that we decided to hike for the sunny South; so at 6:40 p. m. we were found in a Pullman headed for Shreveport.

Oh, how true is the statement, "The Heavens declares His glory and the earth His handiwork."

Here we are back home and at your service. Let us do big things this year and receive the blessings our Lord has for us.

Yours all for Christ,

J. B. GRAMBLING.

FROM COLUMBIA, MISS.

Last Monday we began preparations for our revival meeting by starting prayer meetings all over our town by the women, and nooday prayer meeting at the theater for the men. We held three prayer meetings all the week. On Wednesday at noon we had about 250 men at the prayer meeting. Our meetings began Sunday, July 30, at 11 o'clock; at night we had the Flying Squadron from Jackson, Miss., with us. One hundred and sixty business men came down to tell of the great things the Lord has done for them, and they were a great blessing to us. They returned to Jackson on the late train. The 9 o'clock service Monday was great, a large crowd and a fine service. Rev. C. N. Guice is with us, doing the preaching, and his singer, Mr. Milan from Atlanta, Ga., is conducting the singing. The meeting begins well. All the indications are for a great meeting. Pray for us.

A VISIT FROM MISS BRAND.

My Dear Mrs. Neal: Miss Brand came to our Conference last week, spending a few days with me and going from here to the Corinth District last Saturday. I have asked Miss Rogers to write something for the information of our women concerning the present status of our Rural Work. I hope she will send this item to you to forward to the New Orleans Christian Advocate. By the time for the September Bulletin, I hope to have something ready concerning this work.

On Wednesday of last week we had a group meeting of nearby missionary societies in our church here which was also attended by many ladies from the missionary societies of the other denominations in town. Miss Brand gave a good message concerning rural conditions and needs, as did also Miss Hudson, who has charge of the Lee County Health work under the auspices of the State Board of Health. There was special music and the program seemed to interest the ladies. At its conclusion, we adjourned to the Sunday school rooms for a social hour over the punch bowl.

For the remainder of the week Miss Brand went with Miss Hudson on survey in the rural sections of the County. One morning, she spent with Miss Webb, the social service worker in our cotton mills. She thought this morning very illuminating and I think these things have helped her to know something more of her field.

I realize the difficulty of her work from this time till the Annual Conference, because the territory is so scattered that little that is really definite can be accomplished; but it is well for our preachers and women to know that she is on the ground and ready to co-operate when we have the definite thing for her to do. This work is yet in the experimental stage, even in places that have been able to concentrate. You may remember that it was my idea to establish a Demonstration Center, but the majority of the Executive Committee voted for a Field Secretary. For the remainder of this year, the Field Secretary is, I suppose, just as well as the other, because it gives us time to find the best place for our center and to formulate plans for continuing the work there. Yet her work till Conference will necessarily lack definiteness.

Miss Brand is ready to take hold where there is a hold to be secured. I suppose she will help advance the Sunday school work, the Woman's Missionary Society, and all those forces that are already established, and that she will organize where there seems a possibility. During the vacation days a great work can be done by getting together groups of children for a story hour, a vacation Dally Bible School for women and children, and any work of that nature that can be done with groups of people for a few days at a time. She is resourceful and adaptable. Your friend,

BELLE CLARK.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, Almighty God, in his all-seeing wisdom, has taken from us our beloved friend, and untiring Christian worker, MRS. EVA LAUGHTER ELDER; and whereas the long and intimate relations held with her as member of the Woman's Missionary Society, where her influence was ever a strengthening power and inspiration, we feel that it is eminently befitting that we record our deep appreciation of her worth. Therefore be it resolved:

1. That in the death of Mrs. Elder, the church and our Society have lost a loyal and faithful member, leaving a vacancy and shadow that will be deeply felt by all. She was at all times in thorough sympathy with the missionary cause, and responded happily to every call of the auxillary, deriving great spiritual strength and uplift from its meetings.

2. That our community has lost one who regarded its interest prayerfully, and whose devotion to the cause of Christianity was nothing short of inspiring. She always expressed an unfaltering trust in God, and her greatest comfort was in communion with Him and in the study of His Word.

3. That we, the members of the Missionary Society, extend our deepest love and sympathy to the heart-broken companion, loving daughter, the aged mother, and devoted sisters, and we pray that this great sorrow may sweeten their lives and strengthen their religious faith. May the Heavenly Father, in whom she so implicitly trusted, guard, guide, and keep them in peace and love.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and Times Promoter for publication, and that a copy be entered on the minutes of our Society.

Signed by: Mrs. C. J. Langston, Mrs. Ivy McKinney, Mrs. L. S. Clayton. Cockrum, Miss.

CHINESE PLEDGE GREAT SUM FOR MOORE MEMORIAL.

Rev. Sidney R. Anderson, of Shanghai, in report dated June 21, 1922, gives the three outstanding features of the quarter as follows: "1. Launching of the Household Survey—this contemplates a very interesting survey of every household where there is a member of the Moore Memorial Church. The card contains questions drawing out certain information which will be invaluable to the future work of the church. We will at the same time be able to know exactly where all our members are, and plan to have a church map, which will show this information at a glance. This survey is under way, having eighteen volunteers, men and women, who will finish it by Conference time. 2. Decision of the Moore Memorial Church to undertake the raising of one hundred thousand dollars Mexican for the new $400,000 Mexican church at this place. This is no doubt the greatest financial undertaking that any church in China has ever attempted, and is worthy fruit of the labors and sacrifices of those missionaries and Chinese who have given their lives toward building the foundations which we have here. 3. Big Get-Together meeting of the Moore Memorial Church Membership. This is the beginning of a plan whereby all of the members shall come to know each other and to have a community feeling, sharing each others' difficulties, and being inspired by each others' endeavors."

OVER 10,000 INDIANS IN THE WORLD WAR.

Over 10,000 Indians served in the World War. In the past eight years the Indians have spent $18,000,000 for homes, barns, and modern farm implements; 37,000 Indian farmers cultivate 1,000,000 acres; 47,000 are raising live stock worth $38,000,000, says a census summary in The World Almanac. The 2,100 Osage Indians (in Northeast Oklahoma) received over $7,000 apiece income in 1920 from oil and gas lands they had leased. There are 419 Protestant and 208 Catholic missionaries among the Indians, and 657 churches. Church-going Indians number 106,176, of whom 58,838 are Catholics. Of the Redskins, 138,193 speak English; 91,331 read and write English; 196,841 wear citizens' clothing; 83,402 are United States citizens; 29,738 are voters; 26,949 are engaged in industries other than farming and stock-raising (fishing and native textiles); 6,504 families keep milch cows; 44,195 families live in permanent houses, and 10,946 families in tents; the birth rate is 31.67 per 1,000 population, and the death rate is 22.33 per 1,000 population; 3,049 able bodied and 8,033 disabled Indians receive Government rations without laboring or paying therefor; 61,800 children go to schools, which cost the Government over $4,700,000 a year. The Indians own 156,966 horses and mules, 211,938 cows, 1,361,315 sheep and goats.—The World Almanac.

JUST A WORD FROM BROOKSVILLE, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: We have just closed a great battle here for the Lord, and still the battle goes on. July 25 we closed a ten days' meeting here, which was a great spiritual uplift, not only to our church, but also to the whole town.

Some thirty or more promised to quit dancing and card-playing, and as I saw my people, whom I love, going forward and giving Brother W. A. Wilson, our Conference evangelist, their hand, saying that they were giving up everything that was questionable, my heart leaped for joy, and tears of gladness flowed down my face, for I knew that they meant what they said, and that we were going to have a better town.

Eternity alone can only tell what the meeting was worth, but as a visible result fifteen joined our church, and three joined the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Brother Wilson is a man of God, so he fights sin in every form. God bless him! We all have been lifted to a higher plane of Christian experience, and Christian living because of his coming in our midst. We thank God for sending him this way.

We have served some mighty good people, people that we loved—and we love them yet—but we are serving NOW some of the best people in the world. Since the first day we landed here, they have been mindful of us, always sending us something that is good to eat, giving us a good warm hand-shake, greeting us with a smile, saying kind things about us, till we are compelled to say, with the Psalmist of old, "The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places; yea, I have a goodly heritage." Psalm, 16:6.

So I thank God and take courage, and move on. We are expecting to report "Everything in full, Bishop," in November at Water Valley.

RENWAR VS. RHEUMATISM.

It is certainly a pity that so many people suffer year after year the intense pains of rheumatism when it can be so easily expelled from the system by the simple treatment of taking Renwar Rheumatic Salts. Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood; and in order to effect a complete cure, it is necessary to entirely eliminate this acid from the blood. Renwar is guaranteed to relieve or your money is refunded. It contains no injurious drugs. It is the one sure remedy, and it does not in the slightest degree injure the stomach or affect the heart. Mr. Joseph L. Boehmer says, "One 50c bottle has done me more good than all sanatorium treatment, and what it did for me, why should it not do the same for others? Should any one doubt the virtue of Renwar and the certainty of curing this malady, refer them to me." FROM FRANKLINTON, LA.

Dear Dr. Carley: The Rev. E. H. Cunningham, member of the North Mississippi Conference and stationed at Okolona, Miss., was with me in my meeting here, July 16-23. He is a strong gospel preacher. His sermons were pleasing and convincing, and all denominations heard him gladly. Large crowds attended the services throughout; church people were deeply moved; twelve new members were received, and four children were baptized. Brother Cunningham is one of the best and most agreeable helpers I have ever had with me in a meeting. He will live long in the heart-memory of my people, and the good effects of his splendid work will abide.

The attractive music, directed by the Rev. J. B. Grambling, our own Louisiana Conference Epworth League Field Secretary, added much to the interest and good accomplished in the meetings. He also conducted an Epworth League Institute, devoting twenty minutes to the work each evening following the regular service. Fine idea! He completely won the young people, the church appreciated his work, and he went away with the good will of everybody. For the very gracious revival we "praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

Faithfully,

L. W. CAIN.

VALUE OF FARMS IN U. S.

The average value of land and buildings per acre of land in farms in the United States in 1920 was $70.94, as compared with $39.60 in 1910, says The World Almanac in its summary of the latest Federal Census.

The average value of land and buildings per farm for the United States as a whole in 1920 was $10,514, as compared with $5,471 in 1910.

The value of implements and machinery per farm in 1920 was $558, as against $199 in 1910.

The average value of a farm in New York State in 1920 was $9,879, as against $6,732 in 1910; in New Jersey, $10,499 ($7,610 in 1910); in Pennsylvania, $8,550 ($5,715 in 1910).

In the census reports a distinction is made between farmers operating their own land only and farmers who hire some land in addition to that which they own. The former are classified as "full owners" and the latter as "part owners." The value of farms operated by full owners in 1920 was $30,717,193,565 and of those operated by part owners, $9,156,810,001. The corresponding figures for 1910 were: Full owners, $17,310,639,016, and part owners, $5,056,295,262.

CHILDLESS HOMES MADE HAPPY

Presence of Little Ones a Great Blessing

Four Interesting Letters

Cortland, N. Y.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I was weak and wanted to become strong and have a child. My husband read about it in the 'Cortland Standard and thought it might help me. It certainly did for I now have a lovely boy fifteen months old who weighs forty pounds. I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to my friends and you can certainly use my testimonial in your little books and in the newspapers, as it might help to make some other childless home happy by the presence of little ones as it has done mine."—Mrs. CLAUDE P. CANFIELD, 10 Salisbury St., Cortland, N. Y.

Married Three Years

Brooklyn, N. Y.—"I am certainly very thankful to you for your Vegetable Compound. I was married three years and did not have a child. My husband had often heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and he made me take it and I became the mother of the healthiest little boy I know. When my friends tell me their bad feelings the first thing I say is, 'Take the Vegetable Compound.' I am willing for you to use these facts as a testimonial."—Mrs. ANTOINETTE MASANO, 113 Nostrand Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

St. Louis, Mo.—"I want to tell you what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me seven years ago. I was run down and had a weakness such as women often have. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and after being married sixteen years became the mother of a sweet little girl. I now have four lovely children—three fine boys and the little girl six years old. I had longed for children all the while and wept many a day and envied every woman with a child. I was 36 years old when my first baby was born. I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to any woman who is ailing with female weakness."—Mrs. J. NAPIMAN, 1527 Benton St., St. Louis, Mo.

Was Weak and Run Down

St. Louis, Mo.—"My mother took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound when I was a girl, and when I was troubled with cramps I took it, and later when I married I again took it to make me strong as the doctor said I was weak and run down and could not have children. I took it and got along fine and now I have three girls. So you know why I keep the Compound in the house. I am a well woman and do my work and sewing too."—Mrs. JULIUS HARTMAN, 2501 W. Dodier St., St. Louis Mo.

IT ISN'T THE CRURCH, IT'S YOU.

By R. R. Newberry,
in the Christian Herald.

It isn't the preacher's flowery prayer
Or the way the choir sings,
Or the size of the coin your neighbor gives,
Or the help your brother brings.
It isn't the size of your favorite church,
Or the cost of your favorite pew,
Or the style of the clothes the members wear;
For it isn't the church, it's you.

It isn't the way the work is done,
Or the way the money's spent,
Or whether the gospel's all brought in,
Or whether there's some that's sent.
It isn't the kind of creed they love,
Or peculiar things they do,
Or whether the doctrine suits your taste;
For it isn't the church, it's you.

For a chain's as strong as the weakest link,
And it breaks with a heavy load,
But a church that's full of the links that pull
Can level the roughest road.
If you get in time with the Master's will,
With your heart and your labors, too,
You will love your church, though it has its faults,
For it isn't the church, it's you.

Jesus said: Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God.—Matt. 5:8.

FROM THE LENA AND HARPERVILLE CHARGE.

Dear Brother Carley: Will you grant me a little space, as I want to talk to you of a series of meetings held in this vicinity only a few days past? Our pastor came to us on Monday, having given the day before (the 4th Sabbath) to Sunday school work. If you know Brother G. G. Yeager, it is needless for me to attempt to accord to him that meed of praise he so justly deserves. I see from the Conf. Minutes he is marked "Effective," and of his efficiency none will doubt who are privileged to hear his earnest gospel messages.

The weather was not the best, but a full attendance day and night attested the interest taken, and close attention proved Brother Yeager's preaching to be of a high order, sowing precious seed that will produce abundant fruit and that will be as "Bread cast upon the waters that will be gathered up after many days." One young man united with the church—a rich heritage of the narvest.

I should remind you, Brother Carley, that the Advocate has for many years had a complete galaxy of resplendent torch-bearers in the editorial chair, the sainted Galloway, Dr. Black, Dr. Meek, and many others that I recall have passed into the Great Beyond—but I'm sure that your work is nothing disparaging and your light not less bright than theirs. Pardon the length of this letter and accept my very best wishes for your future service to our great church paper.

ANNUAL MEETING ON THE SEASHORE CAMP GROUNDS.

The editor, being a very modest, retiring man, we fear nothing will be published about the annual meeting at the Camp Grounds; and so, as a regular attendant, I would like to let the readers of the Advocate know that it was the best attended in years. It was not, in the old-time sense, a revival, for in one short week not much could be accomplished in the way of altar services; but Dr. Carley gave us the gospel, pure and sweet, and many were helped in their Christian lives. The singing was led by Rev. Frank Collins, with Mrs. Nettie Sutcliffe Morris at the piano, assisted by several other musicians and a volunteer choir.

Dr. Carley's father was present at nearly every service and about twenty other ministers were in attendance at different times. Most of the preachers are compelled to go to their homes to fill their own pulpits on Sundays, and so it is not always possible to get a preacher, but it was a great gratification to have Dr. F. N. Parker for a month, and he gave us many fine sermons.

A splendid Sunday school has been organized, with from 100 to 150 present every Sunday; not only has all literature been paid for, but a good contribution was handed Rev. W. W. Moore for his automobile, and a splendid offering sent to Korea. About the middle of August there will be a summer Christmas tree, the gifts to be sent to the Houma Mission. Some of the ladies on the grounds interested themselves in installing a new lighting system in the Tabernacle and this is a marked improvement.

Houses are all occupied and all who are here testify to the fact that no more cooler, delightful place could be found to spend a sumer.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE DEATH OF BISHOP JOHN C. KILGO.

Again the church is called upon to mourn the death of one of its chief pastors. On Friday, August 11, Bishop John C. Kilgo, after a long illness, passed to his reward. He was not an old man at the time of his death—he was born in 1861—but he had given his strength to the church and his frail body yielded at last to the ravages of the disease against which he fought valiantly for a number of years. He was well known in Louisiana and Mississippi, where he rendered his last service in official charge of an episcopal district.

Bishop Kilgo had a winsome personality. He loved companionship—and he was a lovable companion. In the social circle he was brilliant as a conversationalist, ready with story and anecdote to add charm and interest to his native powers of keen observation and profound reflection. He was "easy to get acquainted with," which is merely another way of saying that he was simply a brotherly man with a big heart who delighted to be with his friends that he might enjoy with them the pleasures of social intercourse.

Bishop Kilgo was a great preacher. When he was at his best, the great themes of the gospel glowed with the earnestness of his own great soul, and the mighty doctrines of Christianity became the sure possession of those of his hearers who followed his impassioned pleading. It was our privilege to hear him preach a good many times, and we were always struck by the fact that he preached on great subjects. The pulpit for him was no place for the discussion of trivial matters. His own experience of the gospel truths made him a preacher to the souls of men, not merely a lecturer who was interested in some abstract phase of religion.

There was a tenderness about Bishop Kilgo that became one of his outstanding characteristics as he advanced in years. It may be that his own physical sufferings made him more keenly susceptible to the gracious influences of sympathy and brotherly love; at any rate, he was all gentleness as he neared the end of his journey. His farewell address to the recent General Conference was an affectionate tribute to the church he loved and to the brethren with whom he had labored, as well as an expression of serene faith in the God to whom he had given his life.

With some of Bishop Kilgo's views and policies we could not agree, but we loved him as a man and honored him as a bishop, and we join with the whole church in paying tribute to the memory of one of its translated servants.

THE POWER OF PUBLIC OPINION.

A press dispatch last week announced that prohibition may not be referred to either humorously or seriously in any of the theaters of the Keith vaudeville circuit hereafter, the explanation being that so many complaints had been received by the management from patrons who object to the anti-Volstead jokes that they decided it would be better to eliminate them altogether. We have only the newspapers as our authority for the truth of this report, but we take it as a fine illustration of what public opinion is able to accomplish when it expresses itself in a way that will affect the pocketbooks of those who have no special convictions on a subject themselves. The average business man desires to make money out of his business, and in order to do so he must have some regard for the feelings of those who support his enterprises. It may not be altogether true that theater owners and moving picture promoters always give the public what it wants; but it is true that they are not going to try to force upon people what they plainly do not want. The people of any community and of the country at large have it within their power to determine just what forms of entertainment will be offered them by those who makes a living by catering to their desires. Organized public opinion can also determine the policy with reference to any matter of public interest.

THE LAW'S DELAYS.

The American people might reflect with great profit upon the expeditious manner in which justice is meted out to criminals in England. It is a standing reproach in this country that those who violate the law are able, by taking advantage of legal technicalities, to evade for a great length of time the just payment of penalties due, and oftentimes to escape them altogether. The assassins of Field Marshall Sir Henry Hughes Wilson were captured, tried, condemned, and executed within forty days of the commission of their crime. In the United States, the probability is that these men would have been able to prolong the legal processes for months—perhaps years—with the strong probability that they would never have to pay the extreme penalty. When guilt has been unquestionably established, nothing is to be gained by a delay in punishment. If our courts would "use a little speed," they might have considerably less business to attend to.

THE TELEPHONE AND MODERN LIFE.

Dr. Alexander Graham Bell died a few days ago. There is nothing especially significant in that announcement—except that Dr. Bell was the inventor of the telephone, which has become so much a part of our modern business system that we scarcely ever stop to think how people managed to get along without it fifty years ago; yet there were no commercial telephones at that time. "The world do move," though some people have a mighty hard time realizing it. We could get along without telephones to-day, but business would be "slowed up" to an extent almost inconceivable. A man who would refuse to use the telephone to-day because it is a modern invention, would be considered a freak; yet there are those who are always talking about the "good old times" and lamenting the fact that things are not as they were. We prefer to look forward rather than backward, though we can sympathize with Dr. Bell, who, it is said, had the telephone removed from his residence because the ringing of the bell annoyed him. (We had to stop writing just then to answer the telephone, only to find that the person calling had been given the wrong number.)

A TRIBUTE TO METHODISM.

Premier Lloyd George, of Great Britain, recently delivered an address in connection with a movement to secure funds with which to restore Wesley's Chapel. In the course of his remarks he paid the following tribute to Wesley and to Methodism, which is worth passing on to our readers: "Wesley was undoubtedly the greatest religious leader the Anglo-Saxon race ever produced. Just like the Reformation, the indirect influence of the Wesleyan movement was probably greater than even its direct influence. That is the story of all great religious movements. I hear from your president that its members and communicants at present do not number far short of forty million. I think that when John Wesley died there were seventy thousand members in England. That is the largest Protestant community in the world. But its indirect influence was greater still. It revived every religious community in the Anglo-Saxon world. It put new blood into the veins of the older communions. Lecky has pointed this out in a very eloquent passage, and so has Sir George Trevelyan in his recent able book. When one bears in mind that all this work was accomplished in connection with the powerful and vigorous race which I prefer to call the Celto-Saxon people, one can imagine that its influence has been not merely on the British Empire and America, but on the destiny of the whole world." It is no small thing to-day to be a member of the Methodist Church.

"NEVER SAY DIE."

Barnaby Rudge's crow probably had no idea in connection with his oft-repeated cry, "Never say die;" but the mere words carry a meaning that is worth a great deal to the man who can grasp it. There can be no insuperable difficulties in the way of the accomplishment of a needed result. There may be great difficulties, yes—but all these will yield sooner or later to the man who simply will not give up. "Be sure you are right—then go ahead," is mighty good doctrine.

THE LAND OF OPPORTUNITY AND THE MAN OF DESTINY.

(The Baccalaureate Address delivered by Rev. W. L. Duren, D. D., pastor of Rayne Memorial Methodist Church, New Orleans, La., at the recent Commencement of Centenary College, Shreveport, La.)

Mr. President and Members of the Class:

In undertaking to address you upon this occasion, I am not without a profound sense of the honor which you have conferred upon me. Neither am I unmindful of the responsibilities of the occasion. Not that I hold myself responsible for an address whose literary finish would do credit to the masters; nor do I feel it incumbent upon me to prescribe for the troubles of the world on the one hand, or for your success on the other. I may say frankly that I do not expect you to remember even fragments of what I shall have to say. And yet I do hold myself responsible for setting before you an ideal that may help you to a proper valuation of your surroundings, and of the generation to which you belong.

Speaking, then, out of an experience of my own, I would say that this is the time in the life of a young man when he needs a peculiar direction and encouragement. The very order and arrangement of his studies naturally bring him to a feeling of having reached the summit of cultural attainments. And equally as naturally does he develop a sensitiveness of expectancy which is destined to be rudely shocked by painful realities. Hence, this is an opportunity to speak a word of caution lest that expectancy be turned into the bitterness of disappointment. And it is a time when a word of encouragement may give a more pleasing prospect to the task of solving the problems of life.

So instead of undertaking a theme that shall be literary in the sense of being classical, or that shall be profound in the sense of being philosophical, I am choosing to speak a word concerning the South and the Southerner—the Land of Opportunity and the Man of Destiny. May I say that it is no part of my purpose to approach this theme in any provincial or hero-worshiping spirit, although I should not be ashamed to do that if the occasion seemed to indicate it. But I think that we are not primarily concerned with the South as a land of romance and ruin where charm is linked with pathos; nor as a land dominated by a massive type of architecture that sheltered the baronical heroes of a golden age; neither as being a melancholy spot where abode an extinct type of greatness in statesmanship and oratory. I shall speak of the South as being by every token and indication the land of opportunity, and as destined to furnish the stage for the drama of the next hundred years in American history. Then I shall try to lay emphasis upon the preeminently important fact that the Southern man of vision and culture is to be the star performer in that drama.

Whatever we may think about any particular pilgrimage of men, they have all, for the most part, been inspired by a passion for the discovery of some land of opportunity. Christopher Columbus was thinking of an oriental El Dorado when he turned the prow of his little craft into the deep mysteriousness of the unknown Atlantic. The mad rush of the "Forty-niners" and Horace Greely's "Go West, young man," were the results of a frenzy produced by a gold-bearing land suddenly lifted out of the darkness of the unexplored. And the business interests of to-day, which seem to be disposed to say to the aspiring young man, "Go East," are influenced largely, no doubt, by the allurement of a few magnificent salaries, and a few examples of Southern men who have achieved splendid business success. But regardless of what may be said in defense of historic pilgrimages, or in justification of particular instances, they are in most cases but refined forms of the grotesque chasing of the will-o-the-wisp. And no matter what may be achieved, there is an irretrievable loss of some of the most invaluable assets of life; and there is always a loss to the section by the transfer of the national wealth represented by the highest type of citizen. And yet, in spite of all protests, the disposition of our young men has been to seek a forum to conquer rather than to build a forum from which to conquer. They have been content to accept a challenge to a strange arena with all its attendant disadvantages rather than invite a contest to their own.

Historically, I think there can be no person so uninformed as to deny the South's ability to take care of itself. That royal company of statesmen, orators, and military heroes which it gave to the nation need neither apology nor defense. They established themselves in the forum of the nation, and their voices were heard in the courts and councils of the empires of the whole world.

Socially, our position is equally secure. For in Southern society the spirit of the Cavalier and the finest qualities of knighthood came to perfect flower. And they came to perfect flower because the sterner elements of both were softened by the frankness and freedom of country life, and by the grace of inherent democracy. And I may say in passing that the racial purity and the homogeneity of the Southern people have been such that, in spite of all their political misfortunes and industrial handicaps, they have been able to preserve the integrity of their social life.

With reference to the religious position of the South, we may speak with the same tone of assurance. I do not mean that we are a better people than others; but I do mean to say that if there is virtue in clinging to the "old paths," and if there is merit in following the pathway of the fathers without looking either to the right hand or to the left, then the credit for that belongs to us. I hasten to say, however, that I do not mean by this statement to place a premium upon narrowness; but rather to indicate our conservatism in matters of religion. In this connection I would call attention to the very significant fact that not one of the forms of rationalism which have troubled this country had its birthplace in the South. And I will go even further than that and say that outside of cosmopolitan centers, this type of religion has had but small following in the South. In this reflection I am not bringing "railing" and certainly not a new "accusation" against other sections. More than a hundred years ago it was said by Washington Irving: "....whenever any stones fall from the moon, the greater part of them is sure to tumble into New England."

But the really important item of consideration, it seems to me, is the industrial South. Up to the invention of the cotton gin, the South surpassed New England in industrial pursuits. But subsequent to that invention each section followed the line of least resistance—the South turned to the production of cotton, while New England turned to its manufacture. And in this connection it would be well to remember that the manufacture of cotton fell to New England because at Fall River, Massachusetts, is a natural condition of atmospheric saturation which is absolutely necessary to successful cotton spinning. And at that time the South did not know, nor did any other section know, how to produce atmospheric saturation artificially.

But our first concern is not with our industrial history. Our primary concern is with the industrial endowment, and the economic possibilities of the South; for there lies the prophecy of future greatness. May I give you a hasty review of some of our charted resources, as given in figures compiled by The Manufacturers' Record? The South has one-third of the landed area of continental United States; three-fifths of its coast line; three-fifths of its navigable rivers; all of the aluminum clays, turpentine and rosin; practically all of its sulphur and phosphate rocks; seventy-five per cent of the natural gas gasolene; sixty per cent of the natural gas; fifty-seven per cent of the petroleum; fifty per cent of the lumber; forty-eight per cent of the asbestos; forty-five per cent of the lead; forty-two per cent of the zinc; and forty per cent of the asphalt, not to speak of an abundance of coal and iron and the other things necessary to build a great economic and industrial empire.

Then add to this gift of nature the fact that we are now producing a cotton crop the value of which is more than double that of the annual output of both gold and silver in the whole world. And we are producing all of the cotton-seed oil; all of the peanuts and peanut oil; all of the cane syrup and sugar, and most of the sweet potatoes of the country. We produce eighty per cent of the rice; thirty-six per cent of the corn; we have thirty-seven per cent of the hogs; thirty-three per cent of the cattle; and literally a thousand other things. And in addition to all this we have numerous growing ports, and among them, for all our industrial tardiness, the second port of the United States. With such a rich natural endowment, with such an unlimited range of production, and with such facilities for distribution, who will dare to say that the South is not the real land of opportunity?

Hitherto we have been confused by the hum of the thousands of spindles in Massachusetts, by the dense clouds of smoke that have poured from the stacks in Pittsburg, and by the screaming whistles of the ocean liners that come and go in the harbor at New York. And we have found it hard to recall the industrial concessions of a century. But the day has come when we need to realize that we are not industrial mendicants, and we are not dependent upon any other section.

Young gentlemen, you are not living in a provincial corner of the world; but you are living in the most favored spot upon which the sun shines, and you are living in the very center of what is destined to be a great industrial empire.

It is not necessary to say that the factors and the possibilities which I have been describing have been here from the foundation of the Republic. The owners of Dixie have composed a stock company whose wealth and resources were almost beyond computation. But, though possessed of such enormous wealth of resource and productivity, freaks of fortune have delayed the coming of the day of Southern ascendancy for more than a hundred years; and through lack of knowledge we have submitted to be industrial vassals. But at last the people of the Southland are awake. From ocean to ocean, and from the Mason and Dixon line to the Mexic gulf they are ready for industrial conquest. They are watching expectantly, and listening for the imperial tread of the Man of Destiny. In the hour when the glories of triumph are gathering, and when the horizon is reddening with the dawn of a new day, to whom can the people turn? To whom will they turn? In the chapter of the South's political misfortunes she has written one chapter in her own blood—that she will never forget her own. She will call her Man of Destiny from the ranks of her own sons.

This Man of Destiny is the center of our interest this morning. We are accustomed to say that in the very nature of things he must come from among the best trained men of the time. And when we have said that we have not said anything that is in any wise different from what has always been true. The truth is that we are disposed to be stampeded by eccentricities of genius, and to over-value every "diamond in the rough." I dare to tell you that every solid advance that history has recorded has been under the direction, not of prodigies, but of prepared men. Moses, who was the deliverer of a race of slaves and the writer of the fundamental moral code of a thousand generations of men, was instructed in all the wisdom of the Egyptians. Ezra, whose task it was to restore the law after the captivity, was a ready Mesopotamian scribe, which was the learned class of his country; and besides that he was "the scribe of the words, of the commandment of the Lord." St. Paul received a Greek education at Tarsus, and was then brought up at the feet of Gamaliel in Jerusalem. And it was of John Wesley, one of the best educated men of his day, that the historian Lecky said that the history of the England of his time could not be written without taking him into account. It would seem that Mr. Ford is about the only exception to this rule in our time, and he is really no exception; for while he has built up a great industry, he has signally failed in every instance of his undertaking public leadership.

Nearly five hundred years ago Philip the Good of Burgundy instituted the order of the "Golden Fleece." It was his thought to gather into a royal order the group of crowned heads, who, in his opinion, were destined to rule the world for all time. But at the very moment that this order was being instituted, Laurence Coster, an obscure citizen of the city of Harlem, was printing a grammar by means of movable type. It was his thought to lay a foundation for giving letters and literature to the whole world. And be it said that through the ministry of that peasant printer, and in spite of the "effulgent trumpery" of the "Knights of the Golden Fleece," a decadent and defunct line of kings has been left the melancholy privilege of reciting the memories of glories that have gone forever. And history has given an authoritative approval to that brilliant saying of Victor Hugo: "The dominant point of an epoch is not a head that wears a crown, but a head that bears a thought."

Young gentlemen, this is not the day of muzzle-loaders—it is the day of automatics; and the only legitimate place for the muzzle-loader is in the museum. The need of the hour is not ancestors, but men—trained men, college men. Every book that you have studied, while it may have been a record of achievement, is in a larger sense a blue-print of the larger fields into which you may enter, and which you must occupy. It is the re-echoing of the "Greater things than these shall ye do" of Jesus as he relinquished to his disciples the responsibility and the record of a divine crusade.

This Man of Destiny will not only be a man of culture—he will be a man of high and heroic purpose. I read in a recent magazine article that the average man uses but thirty-five per cent of his brain capacity. I do not know whether that statement is true, but I do know that no thirty-five per cent man will ever be the leader of a worthy generation. I am not saying this to discourage any man. I am saying it rather for his encouragement. There is certainly a chance for every heroic soul among men who are really doing just one-third of what they are capable of doing.

In this connection I would say further that it is neither necessary nor worthy to consider prospects of success. Who laid the pillars of history? And who have been the authors of the world's greatest achievements? It was John Ruskin who said in substance: "If the tiny mica-flake as it moved down the bottom of the ancient river, too light to sink and too faint to float, could have had a mind, it must have thought of a hopeless eternity of matter. A tiny mica-flake, a despised atom of the earth. And yet, by the silent processes of nature, that very atom of sand was woven into a substance as of imperishable iron, out of which the axe of God hewed the Alpine towers, which for thousands of years have stood in hoary grandeur, wearing their crowns of spotless white." The force of all this is to say that there is no measuring what even the average man may be able to achieve if all that he has is held in the iron grip of a great resolve.

Just one other thought about this Man of Destiny: I do not think that any description of him will be complete if it shall leave out his faith. Of course, he will be a man who has a firm grip on the social and economic opportunity of his time, and he will have the wealth of its culture; but by every indication he must have also a grip upon the truths which give a spiritual undergirding to everything that is worth while.

Not long ago I had the privilege of listening to an address by one of the most distinguished students of economic condition and, perhaps, the greatest business expert in America. At the conclusion of his address he said that that great ocean liner, the Lusitania, was designed and built with a guaranteed speed, and with the promise that it would go quite beyond the guarantee. But on the trial trip it failed of the guarantee by a knot and a half. They stoked the furnaces, increased the ballast, and lightened the ballast; but all to no purpose. Under the stroke of her mighty engines the sea was churned into foam, but still she lagged behind. Designer, builder, and owner were all in dismay. Then they wired one of the greatest marine architects in the world, and asked him to come and look the vessel over. The architect wired them back: "Send me your blueprints." They did so, and in due course of time received this message: "The ship is properly designed, and properly built. Increase your propeller from eighty to one hundred feet. All she needs is a better grip on the sea." They increased the propeller as indicated, and from that day to the tragic day when she went to her resting place off the Irish coast she never failed to make good the promise of her builders, nor to satisfy the ambitions of her owners.

Young gentlemen, located as you are in the land of opportunity, trained as you have been in the very best that a splendid and historic institution has to offer, and your bosoms a-throb with high resolves, your last need will not be met until you get a grip upon that which enters into the making of all manhood that is worth while—faith in God. But, when to your material treasure you can add the treasure of a great experience of God, you will be able to say with a new meaning both to yourself and to the world: "I'm glad I'm from Dixie," because you can stay at home, and have a man-size task, and receive the rewards of a man's toil, and be a man among men. And you can turn to account the sanctified energies of your soul, not for the gratification of a passion for ascendancy, but for the making of a better world. And a better world will pay homage at the shrines which you have helped to build, and will bless the Land of Opportunity for its Man of Destiny.

SCRIPTURAL PURIFYING.

By Arthur Madison Shaw.

Paper II.

Now, without regard to the question of mode, what is baptism? To this question many answers are given. We shall examine but three.

I. "Baptism is a birth—a being 'born of water.'" This answer is based on an erroneous interpretation of Christ's words to Nicodemus, in John, 3:5; "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God." How much an immersion is like a birth! Coming forth from the water, as the new-born come forth into the world!

But the text, as most Bible students know, does not refer to literal water at all. To be "born" means to be "borne," the word in our translation being from the Anglo Saxon, "bear" or "bare." Everything is borne of its mother, or parent, and partakes of the parent nature. Thus, to be born comprehends the whole process of reproduction. That Jesus meant this is evidenced by what He added in verse 6 "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is Spirit." To say that it means literal water reduces the whole to an absurdity; for it would follow that "That which is born of the water is water."

You may ask, then, "What does this language mean?" It means the "Water of Life," or of Salvation. It is interesting in this connection to study St. John's use of the word "water." In the very next chapter, John, 4:14, Jesus said to the woman of Samaria, "But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." In chapter 7:37-38, He says: "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink. He that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, from within him shall flow rivers of living water." Can that mean literal water? Again, in 1st John, 5:6, "This is He that came by water and blood, even Jesus Christ; not by water only, but by water and blood," etc. The same figure runs through the Book of Revelation: as in chapter 22:1, "And he showed me a pure river of water of life, proceeding out of the throne of God." A man must indeed be "born," or "borne," of this "water of life" or of Salvation and of the Spirit, in order to enter the Kingdom.

II. "Baptism is a burial"—a following Christ "through the liquid grave." Are we not so taught in Rom. 6:3-4: "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into His death? Therefore, we are buried with Him by baptism into death," etc. How much immersion is like a burial!

If you mean a modern burial, there is some resemblance; though, even then, the element is poured on! A corpse, laid in a grave, is not buried. It is buried only when the earth descends upon it! On the other hand, if you mean the burial of Christ, it resembles that about as much as plucking a flower resembles fighting a battle. The tomb of our Savior was a cave, not digged down, but hewn out, in the side of a cliff. It had a square door, which one could enter by stooping. The body of Christ was carried through this door—from the "stone of anointing," and laid on a trough-like bench or shelf of the rock. There was a groove or trench in the rock, at the bottom of the door, outside, in which a large, round stone rolled back and forth, serving as a shutter.

It was this heavy, wheel-shaped stone, that the angel rolled back—and Jesus came forth alive! Is there anything in a modern "dipping" in water that resembles this burial and resurrection?

III. The correct answer to our question is, "Baptism is an act of ceremonial purification with water." The Lord's Supper was appointed to symbolize the death of Christ: no other symbol is needed—and none was given. Baptism symbolizes purifying, and has no reference to death, except possibly figuratively—as one who is purified may be said to have died to his old life. The Jews had long been familiar with the ceremony. See John, 3:25-26: "Then there arose a question between some of John's disciples and the Jews about purifying. And they came unto John, and said unto him, Rabbi, He that was with thee beyond Jordan, to whom thou bearest witness, behold, the same baptizeth, and all men come to him." The question "about purifying" clearly had reference to Christ's authority to baptize; that is, to purify. If they were in error, John did not correct them: and the writer of this Gospel seems not to have discovered their error!

These purifyings were always by sprinkling, as illustrated in Lev. 14:3-7, concerning lepers. In Numbers, 8:6-7, we read of the purifying of the Levites, who were servants of the temple: "Take the Levites from among the children of Israel, and cleanse them: and this shalt thou do unto them to cleanse them: sprinkle water of purifying upon them."

These purifyings were carefully observed in the time of Christ. Mark 7:4: "And when they come from the market, except they wash, they eat not. And many other things there be, which they have received to hold, as the washing of cups and pots, brazen vessels, and of tables"—that is "beds," or "couches."

Now, in John 2:6, we read, "And there were set there six waterpots of stone, after the manner of the purifying of the Jews, containing two or three firkins apiece." Did they immerse themselves, their vessels, tables and couches, in the "waterpots?" Not at all; for their mode of purifying was by sprinkling! In Heb. 9:10, the writer says, concerning these purifyings, "which stood only in meats and drinks and divers washings," etc., and the word rendered "washings" is the Greek "baptismois." Thus, these ancient purifyings are, by the highest authoirty, called "divers baptisms!"

Chirstian baptism is, then, like these ancient cleansings, a ceremonial purification with water; let the mode be what it may!

Oakdale, La.

MY WIFE—AN APPRECIATION.

By Rev. T. W. Adams.

The shadow of a great sorrow hangs over our home. The purest, noblest and best one of our family circle has left us. At 4:25 o'clock, Sunday morning, June 4, 1922, the Father in Heaven said to my dear wife, "It is enough, come up higher!" With bleeding hearts we bowed in submission, and said, "Thy will he done."

Five years ago, when I was pastor of the Court Street Church, Hattiesburg, Miss., she had a very painful illness that continued for several months. The physicians had no hope of her recovery then; she rallied, however, from that spell, hut never fully recovered. During the following years she was a great sufferer, but bore all of her suffering with perfect patience. Her patience and suhmission to God's will were perfect. She implicitly believed in the goodness and love of God. Her faith was beautiful and sublime. Never in my long pastoral service have I witnessed such loving trustfulness in God's will.

My wife was the first-born in the family of Mr. Leroy P. and Mrs. Martha C. Thompson, of Madison County, Mississippi. Theirs was a real Christian home. In that home circle were cultivated the graces and virtues inculcated in our holy religion. Growing up under such ideal environments, she was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Chureh, South, in her early girlhood. She developed into womanhood riehly possessed of a charmingly beautiful character. She was greatly loved by all who knew her. She was conspicuously free from everything that mars the beauty of womanhood. There was nothing in her young life that bore any semblance to the crudities that characterize the new woman. She kept herself entirely free from such ugly things. She held herself, soul and body, as too sacred to be profaned hy any careless mixing with the world. In her life as a girl and young woman she was transparently pure and good. It was in these years of unfolding beauty of her pure life that she won my heart. I said then that I would marry her or never marry at all. After three years of ardent wooing I stood at the altar by her side, and we were joined together in holy wedlock. For nearly forty-eight years we lived together in a very holy and happy union. I thank God for His goodness in giving me such a holy woman to enrich and gladden my heart and life. Under God, I owe everything I have been and done to her. Without her, I would have been lacking in the very things I needed to balance and strengthen me. In her character were the elements I needed to re-enforce and strengthen me. The adjustment of these contrarieties made our lives worth living. I review these forty-eight years with gladness of heart for what they have meant to me; meanwhile, my heart is fearfully distressed at my irreparable loss.

The Lord has been good to me in sparing her to me for so many years. That she leaves me now is a grievous personal loss; if it had come sooner the loss to the church would have been added to my own. The last five years she had been too weak and too great a sufferer to do more than pray for the success of our Zion, and to show by her pure and holy life the charm of a life mellowed by divine grace. That she was helpful to others in her living testimony day by day will declare itself in the bettered lives of all who saw her during the eight weeks of her desperate and fatal illness. Her quiet and sweet triumph drew us all closer to God. The sting of death's terror has lost its keenness. Without a shudder she went down to the brink.

We were married on the 30th day of September, 1874, she having just passed into the 25th year of her life. I was licensed to preach one month later. It was largely through her influence that I decided to enter the ministry. My sense of a call to preach was definite and clear, but I had hesitated. God used this precious woman to pull me into line with His will. From that day until the end she stood steadfastly by me with words of cheer. The way was rough, very rough at times, and dark clouds often overcast our way, bnt she never tremhled. She always said to me, "God has promised to go with you alway; He will keep His promise." She endured many and great privations. Our fourth child was born on the first work that paid me over two hundred dollars salary for the year. Of course that meant very hard living, actual lack of the necessities of life; yet in all of this hardness she never faltered. I have never seen such heroic faith and such perfect consecration to God's work. I have thought many times that she was worthy of a place in St. Paul's roster of heroes. Her faith and love and loyalty were tried as by fire, but she endured as seeing Him who is invisible.

My sainted wife was in her God-chosen sphere as a wife and mother. Next to her God she held her husband in reverence and love. Her greatest joy was to smooth the way for him and to cheer him in all of his work for God. It was enough for her to hear him say that she had done her work nobly and well. Her influence in every work I have ever served and in every parsonage home we have ever occupied has been eminently helpful. My parishioners always loved her and trusted her fully. Her sweetness of spirit and discreetness of speech healed many a breach. She loved everybody, and won the love of all. She went a long way more than once to mitigate and soften things when I had gotten into an obstreperous tantrum. I owe her a debt that I can never pay. I am sure she is enjoying her reward in Heaven. The joy of it all will linger with me. In this matter I am reminded of David's ministry to Saul. His harp quieted Saul's turbulent spirit. It drove the evil spirit from him. The evil spirit returned and disturbed Saul anew. My wife's tender voice and soothing touch had a staying quality. Its charm remained indefinitely. There was the genuine and abiding charm in it all. I hope it will stay with me the remainder of my days.

She was an ideal mother. Seven children were born to us. She received every one of them as a special gift from God, and felt that with every such gift He imposed a tremendous responsihility. She keenly felt the grave responsibility of training the children God gave her. When I have suggested that she needed help in caring for the children she would reply always, "I am always glad when you can put a cook in the kitchen, but I can never turn our children over to the care of an ignorant and superstitious negro woman. A child needs a mother's holy care." She gave her best to care for and train her children to be pure and worthy. She instilled it into every one of them that life was too divine a thing to be seamed and soiled with sin. She taught our only son that there was no double standard in morals; that it was his sacred duty to live as true and pure as his sisters. She had no patience with the saying, "A boy must sow his wild oats." She always claimed by faith her only son for the ministry. It was a great joy to her to see him ordained an elder at the McComb Conference in 1918.

Of our seven children, four were in Heaven awaiting her coming. There are three here sorrowing with their afflicted father at the going away of the one who has cheered us and brightened our lives by her tireless and loving ministries. Our three daughters by their lives and work are worthy products of their mother's prayerful and tender training: the eldest, Mrs. L. A. Toler, who lives with me; Mrs. W. R. Butler, who lives at Jackson, Miss., and Mrs. P. M. Buie, who lives near Brookhaven. In the companionship of these noble daughters I shall have to seek my solace for the remaining years of my life.

The death of our dear son was a great blow to my wife. From this she never fully recovered. While she never murmured nor repined, unbidden tears spoke eloquently of the cry of her heart for his presence. He was the joy of her heart. Their mutual love was beautiful and sweet. His letters to her were full of the breathings of romance.

My wife's religious life was without demonstration. Her experience of grace was satisfying, but unemotional. She was uniform and steady. Her heart was fixed on God. She daily read the Bible and prayed much. She fasted every Friday. She was altogether free from doubts. Communion with God was the daily habit of her life. In the forty-eight years of our married life she was ready for Heaven every hour, I am sure. To her all the way to Heaven was Heaven. Judging her by all of God's rules, I would say that she was a perfect Christian. I am confident that she is in Heaven.

LET US GO ON.

The Treasurer of the Centenary Commission reports that to August 1, the Centenary receipts total more than $14,900,000. In this amount are included interest on deposits, liberty bonds, and several miscellaneous items. Amounts paid by churches, Sunday schools, and Epworth Leagues total nearly $14,300,000. As will be noted, we have paid about forty per cent of the total Centenary pledge. The amount due is eighty per cent, hence, we are far below the standard fixed in the program of the Missionary Centenary and in the pledges of the membership of the church. It needs not be said that the work of the church in mission fields—foreign and home—suffers because of this shortage. In some instances there is threatened abandonment of enterprises to which the church pledged its faith, and in every department of the work there is serious embarrassment because of the delay in Centenary payments.

All recognize that we have been coming through some trying times, and it was to be expected that Centenary payments would not be kept up to the one-hundred per cent standard; it is not a fact, as some believe, that we went beyond our ability to pay in the pledges made to the Centenary. The increases in amounts paid for other causes during the past three years go well beyond the total of our Centenary pledge. We rejoice that the church has made such progress in the matter of support of local work, and we believe that the Centenary has had some large part in making possible these increases. We have come now to where the enterprises of the Kingdom demand the giving that demands real sacrifices. With the promise of better times, many of our people who have not been able to give can take care in part at least, of their Centenary obligations. The church is not going to repudiate its program of world service; whatever the cost, we will carry through the work we have pledged to do, and in the doing of this work when it really costs something to meet our pledges, we will come into new experiences of faith and of devotion to the Lord's cause.

FROM THE PELICAN PINES.

By Rev. S. A. Steel, D.D.

After a couple of weeks in a good meeting at Malvern, Ark., I ran over to Springfield, Mo., to preach the Baccalaureate sermon for the Southwest Teachers' College. The service was at night, and was in the open air on the campus. The audience ran into the thousands. There were 2000 teachers, and the whole occasion was imposing and full of interest. My text was: "In the beginning God;" and although I had been preaching three times a day in the open air for two weeks, my voice was clear as a bugle and easily reached the vast audience. It pays a public speaker to take care of his voice. I greatly enjoyed meeting again, Rev. C. M. Hawkins, now pastor of St. Paul's Church in Springfield, and my former presiding elder, Rev. C. H. Briggs. In the morning I heard Dr. Briggs preach a strong sermon on the text: "What is man that thou art mindful of him?" In which he diseussed "Evolution." The sermon would make a very useful tract for the times on a subject now attracting the attention of all intelligent people. It was a special pleasure to meet Mrs. Matthews, the venerable widow of Rev. John Matthews, who makes her home with Dr. Hawkins, her sin-in-law. Though in her 85th year she is aetive, and able to attend chureh, and to make a younger generation hope they will be as vigorous when they reach her age. Both Hawkins and Briggs are sound in the faith and uninfected with the germs of modernitis.

Returning home, I found some very interesting literature on my desk. In it was a small book entitled: "Causes That Led to the War Between the States, by J. O. McGeheé," of Richmond, Va. I am glad to add this valuable little volume to my library of Confederate history. It is especially full of information about the time between the election of Lincoln and his fatal eall for troops to invade the South. Northern histories suppress the facts of this eritical period, because they fix the whole responsibility for an unnecessary war on the North, and largely on Mr. Lincoln himself, who preeipitated the struggle by his unconstitutional resort to force to coerce a free people. The Daughters of the Confederacy are doing a noble work in promoting the truth of history, and this little book ought to be put into the library of every public school in the South at least, that our own people may not be misled by the partisan histories written by the North. On one occasion a son of Mrs. Harriot Beecher Stowe, whose vile story of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," did so much to inflame popular prejudice against the South, visited Nashville, Tenn., and made an address to the students of Fisk University. He was reported to have said: "You have heard the Southern people ealled 'rebels,' but that is a mistake. The real rebels were the people of the North. They rebelled against a Constitution that admitted slavery." He told the truth, and this little book gives the evidence of it. Read it, and hold your head up. I am a great admirer of Demosthenes, and he speaks for the South when he says: "I maintain that if the issue of this struggle had from the outset been manifest to the whole world, not even then ought Athens to have shrunk from it, if Athens has any regard for her own glory, her past history, or her future reputation. * * * There are noble defeats, just as there are noble deaths. Even after the defeat you have nothing to regret; you have done your duty. That is the essential thing. No, you have not failed, Athenians! I swear it by the dead on the plain of Marathon!" That is the noble attitude of the South before the bar of history. God have mercy on the seurvy wreteh that, cialming to be a Southerner, would apologize for the past. After it was all over, when General Lee was amid the quiet academic shades at Lexington, he said: "We had, I was satisfied, sacred principles to maintain, and rights to defend, for which we were in duty bound to do our best, even if we perished in the endeavor. * * * If it were all to be done over again, I would act in precisely the same manner." We need to tone up our self-respect as a people when a persistent Northern propaganda floods the South with literature about Lincoln.

Another broehure is "Southern Miscellanies, by Robert L. Preston, of Virginia." Mr. Preston's pamphlet is a scathing review of sundry utteranees of Henry Watterson that reflected on the South. It is enough to make "Marse Henri" try to burst the bars of his prison and return to vent an impotent rage toward such an exposure of his political inconsistencies and rampant follies. If some of our Southern Methodists who are in favor of "Unification" would read this pamphlet, they would feel that what they need is a good fumigation to rid them of the germs of infidelity to the eternal eause of truth. Heaven save us from union with a people who have such a record!

Sometime ago, Dr. A. T. Robertson, the distinguished professor in the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, sent out a "Denominational Traet" in which he said: "The purpose of this tract is to show how unanimous modern scholarship is in favor of immersion as the meaning of baptizo, and the New Testament teaching and practice." A Methodist preacher in Clayton, N. C., named C. T. Thrift, stepped out into the middle of the highway, with a modern automatie theological rifle, and has literally riddled Robertson. I find two of his pamphlets on my table, and if I am a judge, there is not enough left of Robertson to go through with the form of burying the remains. Every pastor has to meet this issue. The Baptists are aggressive. Their zeal for their doctrines is commendable, as their error is deplorable. But if any pastor is pestered with Baptist error, let him write to Brother Thrift and get his pamphlets, and put them in the homes of his people, and it will put a long quietus on the subject of baptism. Like Paul, the Lord called me to preach the gospel, and the matter of baptism is too small for me to waste my time on it; especially when such a champion as Thrift is at hand. By the way, he lays the Baptist pope, Dr. Truitt, across his lap, and gives him a good spanking. I enjoy seeing the performance. Several other of the Baptist big boys need similar spanking for the naughty things they have said about people who do not hold their erroneous views. Let us be loyal to our doctrines. Methodist theology is thoroughly scriptural, and while irenieal in spirit, Methodism is positive in belief. We need just what the Baptist Sunday School Board has provided for the Baptists: a series of "Denominational Tracts" to put in the hands of our people to educate them in our faith. We need a tract on "The Divine Authority of the Holy Scriptures," "The Virgin Birth of Jesus," "The Divinity of Jesus," and sundry other truths, to counteract the errors of the Destructive Higher Criticism that are spreading among our people. But they might select Higher Critics to write the tracts; so the last error would be worse than the first. But they can't muzzle men like Thrift, and we may be saved by the independent press.

REVERY IN A MOUNTAIN FOREST.

By F. A. Dicks.

No bells or roar of cars, only the gentle pattering of the raindrops on the leaves of the big oak trees, which ever and anon swell into a soft, sweet chorus when a swirl of the cool mountain air caresses them gently and casts the drops down as a shower of pearls. Truly a morning for restful thought and of drawing near to the temple of nature. Is it strange that the ancients divided their worship among deities, when so many phases of darkness, storm and sunshine reign supreme for a time, and then resign the scepter of authority, each in succession occupying the throne to dispense good or evil to man—to charm or terrify? How those trees enjoy the bath! Some say that vegetable life is of a higher order than generally thought—that it possesses the power to enjoy and suffer, not so acutely as the animal with its network of telegraph nerves, but still to a marked degree has the sensation of well-being, or discomfort. Whether that be wholly true, those waving leaves seem as though they were a lot of healthy, fun-loving children having a big happy time, and I for one think that they are clapping their hands and dancing for sheer happiness. Then, too, there are such shades of differences—some, like enthusiastic natures, are reveling in delight, while others are like that tall, stately pine, which merely sways its slender, green Christmas Tree candles a little now and then, just to enter somewhat in the spirit of the hour, without losing sense of dignity. The man who wrote that pathetic appeal, "Woodman, Spare That Tree," must have had down deep in his consciousness, the truth that the life of a tree has many features of the life of man, and that it is closely akin to the crime of murder to fell wantonly one of these "Creator's thoughts in wood."

How blessed are these quiet hours among the trees, far away from the pushing elbows of the crowd! Sings there not a message for me in the low, sweet tones as the wind sweeps through the waving leaves? It breathes a gospel of content and good cheer; sings of the folly of burying one's soul beneath the dross of gold; of trading the approval of conscience for a column of figures in a bank book; of selling trust in human nature, and becoming a blase, hardened fighter on the firing line of modern business. It tells how much sweetness life has in store for those who love the Master and believe there's good in every human heart, if we but touch the secret spring of its hiding place. As the pulsing tones soften to a whisper, now 'tis like a dear childhood melody; it sweeps over the heart strings, the rock-a-bye slumber song sung by a sainted mother, putting the little heartaches to flight, and invoking the mystic fingers of the "Sandman" to close our eyes in delicious, trustful sleep. Is it not worth the while to lay your head on the bosom of Dame Nature, the mother of us all, and draw fresh inspiration and hope, to continue the struggle of right against wrong—to nerve one's self to triumph over temptation, and so to live that when the final hour comes, to deliver one's soul to the Angel of Death, unafraid—battle scarred it may be, defaced by imperfections, yet through faith in the Savior, to be counted worthy of a home in the perfect life?

NEARLY ONE MILLION.

The Sunday schools of the church did not quite reach the goal of $1,000,000 in Centenary giving by August 1. The total is $990,288.39—close to the million, but the goal not reached. Full reports from the Sunday schools throughout the church doubtless would have carried the figures well beyond $1,000,000. We are disappointed that the total receipts are yet below the million mark, but we rejoice that so good a record has been made by the Sunday schools of the church.

The Virginia Conference Sunday schools are so far in the lead in Centenary giving; their total to August 1, $120,835. Next in order are: South Georgia, $54,830; North Georgia, $52,664; North Alabama, $50,615; Western North Carolina, $47,467; Florida, $39,193; Holston, $37,242; North Texas, $35,952; Central Texas, $35,574; Alabama, $34,779. All of these except Florida are large Conferences, and on the basis of membership should have leadership in Centenary giving. Many of the smaller Conferences have made as good record when we use as a basis per capita contributions. With the good showing already made our Sunday schools will carry the total of Centenary contributions well beyond one million before 1922 ends. To this date we have not made as good record as for 1921. Let us make the special effort during the several months ahead and carry the total for the year well beyond that of 1921. See that the Centenary pledge of your Sunday school is paid to date, and that the amount is sent to Jno. E. Edgerton, Treasurer, Centenary Building, Nashville, Tennessee.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The presiding elders of the North Mississippi Conference are requested to meet me in Winona at 9 a. m. on Wednesday, Sept. 20, for a consideration of the interests of the Conference. The Conference Missionary Secretary, president of the Board of Missions, chairman of the Evangelistic Committee, and the Conference Secretary of Education are also requested to attend this meeting that we may confer over the interests which they represent.

MY AFTERNOON TEA.

The Four-o'-clocks announce the hour;
The Daisy stops to prink;
The Rose is flushed, the timid dear—
I'm rather nervous, too, I fear.
All's ready now, I think.
Beneath the apple blossom tree
I entertain my friends at tea.

Upon my mossy table there
I place each tiny cup;
Relief my busy hand receives—
The sun comes trickling through the leaves
And promptly fills them up.
What more delicious can there be
Than acorn cups of sunshine tea?

Aristocratic are my guests,
And in position high,
Arrayed in crimson, blue, and brown—
I never saw a finer gown
Than wears Miss Butterfly!
I'm so delighted, for I see
That most successful is my tea.

LITTLE BLACK HOGGIE.

When the little black Hoggie lost himself he was round and fat and he had a curly tail, but when he lost himself he lost his tail also.

The little Hoggie lived in a clover field. How do you suppose he lost himself? Listen, and I'll tell you. He lost himself under a corn field. You are wondering how he could get lost under a corn field. This is the way he did it. He crawled right under the rows of growing corn.

At the far end of the clover field a big red tile came out from under the corn field and poured its water into a merry little brook which went splashing on its way through the clover field.

The little Hoggie and his brothers came there every day to play in the brook. One day, when the little black Hoggie came, the big red tile was dry. Not a drop of water was coming out. The little Hoggie blinked his eyes and looked again. But there was no water. "Now, that is strange," thought the little Hoggie. Then he scrambled up the bank to the big tile and peeped in. "The water's gone, sure enough. Perhaps the ducks drank it," said Hoggie to his friends and brothers who were with him. "The ducks are always drinking water, you know."

"Beware!" exclaimed an old Hoggie. "Once I peeped into that tile and a weasel nipped my nose."

"No difference," said the little black Hoggie, and he climbed into the mouth of the tile. Just then a black furry thing flew past him and scampered away among the clover blooms. But the little Hoggie didn't mind that. He was used to minks.

The little Hoggie started up the tile. "There is plenty of room here," he said to himself. "If anything comes, I'll turn around and run out again." So he went up the tile, which was getting smaller all the time. "Now," thought the little Hoggie, "if anything comes, I'll have to back out, for I can't turn around." But nothing came out of the dark and the little Hoggie kept bravely on, slowly creeping up, up the tile.

It began to feel pretty tight. But he was a brave little fellow and blinked his eye in the dark.

"Nothing is going to happen to me if it is dark. Nothing is going to happen to me," he kept saying over and over to himself.

Then all at once something did happen. The little black Hoggie was fast in the tile. He pushed and grunted and strained his muscles, but he could not move, could not even wiggle a toe.

"Now here I am!" he exclaimed, "tight as a knob in a door. Whatever shall I do?" He began to think pretty hard. "What shall I do?"

What do you suppose he did do? Squealed, of course. Pigs always squeal for help when they get into trouble. The little black Hoggie kept squealing until he was so tired he could not make a sound.

"Oh, dear," he said. "I think it is supper time, and now I shall have to stay here."

Then the little Hoggie fell asleep. All the time a weasel had been coming up the tile. When the weasel saw the little Hoggie he sniffed. "Now, what's this? A pig, to be sure." Then he took a nip at the little Hoggie's tail. Oh, how he squealed. The weasel ran away, but the little Hoggie kept on squealing.

The little Hoggie's master had missed him the night before, and now he was plowing corn right over the little Hoggie's head. The farmer had told his wife that the little black Hoggie, the one with the ring in his tail, was missing.

"Oh, surely," said she, "the little Hoggie can take care of himself."

And all the time he was fast in the tile under the corn field. He had neither supper nor breakfast. He was tired and hungry and full of cramps. Little pains went darting all over him. He began to squeal with all his might. Then, all at once, he heard a horse neigh. "Now, that's old Billy," shouted the little Hoggie. Then he squealed again.

The farmer heard it and stopped his horse and looked all up and down the corn rows, but no pig did he see. He went on to the end of the field and back again. The little Hoggie heard old Billy whinny and he squealed his loudest.

Once more the farmer heard and stopped his horses. "Surely that noise comes right out of the ground," the farmer told old Billy. "Where can that pig be? Can he be in the tile?"

The little Hoggie squealed again, and then the farmer was sure that he would find him in the big red tile. He hurried away to the barn and came back with a long shovel. He dug right down to the tile, broke it open with a big hammer, and pulled the little Hoggie out.

Pretty soon the little Hoggie had forgotten all about the dark and the cramps. Then he scampered away to the clover field, laughing all the way to think what fun he was going to have telling the other hoggies about how it feels to stay all night in a dark tile under the corn field. He didn't mind so much about the loss of his tail. Wasn't he going to be a hero, now? And he was.—Christian Observer.

DREAMING DAYS.

By Willie C. Page.

Dreaming days of summer fill the heart with pure delight,
As the bird notes trill and echo among the leafy trees;
Tho first dawn of morning sends out gleams of golden light;
Adown the paths of noon-tide strays the fragrant breeze.
Tho heart is filled with gladness by the glory in the west,
By the flowing fountain; when the twilight voices chime,
Heav'n enshrouds the earth and folds all things to rest—
Far away upon the cloud-ships float the sails of Time.

The heart is filled with raptures to hear the South Wind sigh,
As it drifts about the garden where the crimson lilies blow;
In summertime tho sunlit hours go slowly flitting by,
Drowsing—sweet as bells at twilight chanting soft and low.
The heart is lifted upward by tho mysteries that gleam,
Spread out in golden splendor on Summer's blithesome way,
Climbing vines aflame with blossoms, the vesper star's soft beam,
Gay ravelled threads at sunset that knit the close of day.

If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

BISHOP KILGO'S ADDRESS TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

In view of the recent death of Bishop Kilgo, we feel that it is peculiarly appropriate to give here his address to the recent General Conference—delivered when he was in great feebleness of body, but strong in faith. It is a touching utterance.

"Mr. Chairman and brethren: I very much dislike to consume your time; but I feel a burden of painful gratitude that must try to utter itself. I am such a great debtor to you that silence would be to me a perpetual shame. So let me say to you, as best I can, in the name of our God and Christ: 'I thank you.'

"I got a good start in the world. I came out of Scotch and Welsh and English and Dutch folks; the best of it Scotch. I came from a religious people, and early, seemingly almost before Mr. Wesley, on my mother's side we were Methodists. My people on my mother's side have been preaching the gospel more than one hundred years, and on my father's side eighty years. So I started well in religion. I got a good theological start. 'Now I lay me down to sleep; I pray the Lord my soul to keep,' was my first lesson. I have never fogotten it, and I have never revised it, and I say it now with even more heartiness than when my mother taught it to me and I said it at the trundle-bed. My text book was Caper's Catechism. 'Who made you? God.' That is a good start. I started up where God does things. And from my mother I was taught much good theology, and it stays to-day, and I need it to-day, and I say frankly to you, having passed through unspeakable storms of pain and loneliness and burdens of the heart, nothing has stayed with me but what I have brought down from Him. God has been with me, in such utterances as: 'Commit thy way unto the Lord, and trust in him, and he shall bring it to pass,' 'He forgiveth all thine iniquities and healeth all thy diseases,' 'The Lord is my shepherd,' and all those beautiful things that he has told us.

"And so I come now to take out my mule and hang up my harness; and I do thank God that I have kept the plow in the ground. Now that I must go home, I am tired. I have had a happy time. I was born in a Methodist parsonage and, therefore, was born and fetched up in the best of places, among the greatest people, the cleanest-handed and highest-minded, and God came where I was, and I was guarded against all the dirt and the mud out in the street. They kept the parsonage gate shut when I was a child, especially when a circus came, and I never was under a circus tent in my life, and to-day I am so glad of it. I tell you that all the ignorance I have got of wickedness and vice is a part of my highest virtue and all the knowledge I have of falsehood and wrong is my secret shame. I am a happy man. I am happy with my brethren. I love them. I have had a good time with them, and I have preached and prayed with them in little log cabins, and I have eaten with them, corn pone bread and fried bacon and turnip greens, and I have said prayers with them. And I have been with the best you have got, too, in your cities and in your towns and in your colleges, and everywhere I have been happy with our people. I have loved to preach, and I have preached with all the might I had. I believe some folks who have heard me will testify to the truthfulness of that statement. Whether they liked the quality of it or not, they certainly had no complaint to make of the quantity.

"Brethren, I want to tell you that you have a great Church. It has been a great home to me. In my childhood, how sweetly it nursed me in its blessed arms, how it fed me, how it mothered me! And my only complaint is that I fear sometimes that maybe my grandchildren won't have as good a Church mother as I had. She led my feet, and in dangerous paths she kept me protected. I am not concerned about how rich we are. I am not concerned about how much of that stuff we have in our pockets God knoweth we are rich enough, and we are vastly richer than we are consecrated. And I am not troubled much about the democracy that is aroundome. But I am concerned about the sainthood of all of us. When He comes he shall be admired in his saints, and his saints shall judge the world. Brethren, let us be jealous for the sainthood of our own souls and the sainthood of our people. Then we can look after the geography of it, the extent of it, and other things. That is not what concerns me most now for myself and for you. I often hear things and wonder what He thinks of them. I don't want to hurt His feelings. He has not done anything against me. He never hurt my feelings. I don't wish to hurt His feelings. And when in the last day I look Him in the face, as I hope I shall, I don't want to see any frown there. I have been all sorts of things in your Church; junior preacher, local preacher, circuit preacher. I have been college agent and college teacher, college president, and for a short space of four months I was station preacher once, and I have been presiding elder. I have had good appointments, and I want to say to you: Love your preachers. Love your preachers' families. Take care of them. Love the preacher's wife and children; they are good folks. Look after your parsonages, and brethren, love your bishops. I love them. I love to love, and I love to be loved. It hasn't helped me any to cross this country through swamps and mighty streams and to read harsh words or selfish words about myself. You will help your bishops by loving them . They are good men. I have been with them. I don't believe there is a man on the Lord's earth that loves our Church just like they love it. You can trust them. You belong to God's family, one wing of it. Love Him, and love each other because you love him, and say your prayers a heap of times and say them a long time, and say them mighty solemnly. God doesn't like you to talk lightly with him, although you may label it prayer. He likes a broken and a contrite heart.

"Now, brethren, I could never get through talking because I owe you so much, but I want to thank you the best I can. I assure you I love you, and I have tried to keep at my tasks; and when you are talking with God about yourself sometime, put in a word for me, will you? And he will hear it. I shall do a little work around the yard for him awhile yet, and I will do it the best I can. O God, on these, my brethren, let the Holy Ghost come down and on all our Church direct thy blessings, in the name of Christ, our Lord, Amen."

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

A Government statistician has estimated that 11,335,000,000 letters passed through the mails of the country last year.

Glenn E. Plumb, author of the celebrated "Plumb Plan" of railroad operation and ownership, died in Washington recently.

Rev. W. L. Duren, pastor of Rayne Memorial Methodist Church, is spending the month of August on the Seashore Camp Ground with his family.

Rev. R. H. Harper, pastor of the First Methodist Church, this city, is spending the month of August enjoying a vacation voted him by his appreciative people.

Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt, pastor of the Louisiana Avenue Methodist Church, this city, is assisting Rev. J. W. Porter in a meeting this week at Columbia, La.

We learn from the Midland Methodist that Dr. D. M. Ausmus, of the Board of Education, and Dr. J. J. Stowe, of the Board of Missions, will both take pastoral charges in the Tennessee Conference this year.

Lord Northcliffe, the great newspaper owner of Great Britain, died on Monday of this week. Through his sixty papers he was one of the most powerful figures in British public life. He was fifty-seven years old.

According to the Boston Transcript, there are 113 newspapers and fourteen magazines owned and managed by Negroes in the United States. Included in these are ninety-six secular, twenty-three religious, and eight fraternal publications.

Rev. T. L. Hulse, presiding elder of the Henderson District, Louisville Conference, has been elected editor of the Central Methodist to succeed Dr. W. E. Arnold, resigned. We regret to see Dr. Arnold give up the work in which he has been eminently successful, but we welcome Brother Hulse to the fraternity of the tripod.

Rev. Percy Lee, a local preacher of the Lake Charles District, has been appointed to serve as pastor at Rayne, La., until Conference, after which it is his purpose to attend Southern Methodist University. The vacancy at Rayne was caused by the going of the former pastor, Rev. J. B. Douglas, to Czecho-Slovakia to engage in missionary work.

Hon. H. H. White, of Alexandria, La., has been declared the nominee from the Eighth Congressional District for membership on the State Board of Education. The State Board of Education elects the State Superintendent of Education; hence it is a very important body. The Board will have no more efficient member than Mr. White.

We received on Monday this word from Bishop W. B. Beauchamp, written in Prague, on August 1: "A great revival on in this section led by our preachers; will organize Mission August 3, with over 4000 members and 18 congregations; Bible School will open in September with some twenty-five students. Work going in a wonderful way. Pray for us."

We learn from the monthly bulletin of the Centerville charge, Mississippi Conference, that the church at Centerville is being wired for electric lights, and that as soon as that work is completed, plans will be undertaken looking to the building a Sunday school annex. Rev. Victor G. Clifford is the pastor.

The meeting at Marks, Miss., in which the pastor, Rev. C. A. Northington, was assisted by Rev. W. C. Swope, general evangelist, came to a close on August 6. There were forty-two additions to the churches of Marks, and a gracious revival of religion throughout the community. One remarkable feature of the meeting was the fact that every person who professed conversion joined some church.

Dr. J. C. Granbery, professor of Sociology in Southwestern University, is heading a movement to establish in the South a magazine that will take rank with those published in any other section of the country. There is no reason why such a magazine should not succeed—certainly Southern people read widely, and they have both the literary and the financial ability to make a magazine worth while.

Lafayette, La., Rev. Leon I. McCain, pastor, led again for the month of July in prayer meeting attendance.

According to an exchange, during a period of forty-one years eighteen per cent of the graduates of Allegheny College have entered the ministry. Seven Allegheny men have become bishops in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Rev. J. W. Dorman, of Louisville, Miss., has been ill for a considerable length of time, having been in the hospital a good part of the time. We are glad to know, however, that he is beginning to be able to look after the affairs of his charge.

Christian workers all over the country will be glad to learn that the Bible at least is getting back to pre-war prices. For the first time in almost five years the American Bible Society is able to offer Gospels with heavy paper cover for one cent. An edition of the Gospel of St. John is already off the press and the other Gospels will be prepared in the same style and in various languages. One is amazed that a book of 64 pages, so attractively covered, is issued for the price of one cent.

Miss Zoe Dobbs, a sister of Bishop Hoyt M. Dobbs, will be social director of the women's department of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn, Ala. Miss Dobbs is a distinguished educator, being a Master of Arts of the University of Wisconsin, and a Doctor of Philosophy of Columbia University. The position she holds at Auburn is one of the most important in the institution.

We recently made mention of the fact that Chaplain John A. Randolph has retired from active service in the army and that he is spending the summer months at Lake Junaluska, N. C. From a recent issue of the Atlanta Constitution we learn that the farewell service for Chaplain Randolph at Fort McPherson was a very touching and inspiring occasion. In addition to special addresses by representatives of the post, a letter from General John J. Pershing expressing high personal appreciation of the service of Chaplain Randolph was read; a gold-handled umbrella, suitably engraved, was presented by the United Spanish War Veterans; a beautiful watch, chain, and K. T. charm were presented by the officers, warrant officers, field clerks, and their families, engraved as follows: "To Chaplain John A. Randolph from his Fort McPherson friends in appreciation of his loving kindness and helpfulness to them. July 30, 1922." On Monday night, July 31, the Fort McPherson Masonic Club gave the Chaplain a farewell reception and presented him with a handsome Masonic ring. We understand that Chaplain Randolph will be ready to take an appointment at the approaching session of the North Mississippi Conference, to which he belongs.

PRAYER MEETING ATTENDANCE.

We have received the following reports of prayer meeting attendance last week: Algiers, C. C. Wier, pastor, 55; Mangum Memorial, J. C. Rousseaux, pastor, 56; McNair, Miss., M. L. McCormick, pastor, 31.

ARE YOU GOING TO SCHOOL?

I wish I might speak a word to every Methodist girl in the North Mississippi Conference. There are several thousand that should be in college next year. There will be several hundred that will attend some college. I find in my work for our educational institutions that there is comparatively little definite knowledge about our church schools. Grenada College, in the heart of the North Mississippi Conference, is thought by many to be only a secondary school; many others do not even know of it. Much of this is honest ignorance. Our church leaders should know and should enlist themselves in the interest both of the institutions and of the young people.

We have at Grenada one of the best colleges in the South. It confers but one college degree, the Bachelor of Arts, but it seeks to make this the most thorough. It confers diplomas in Voice, Piano, Violin, Art, Domestic Economy, Expression, Stenography and Typewriting. The work is most thoroughly done and her graduates take their places with the very best of other schools. No school in the State has a better course of study in these departments or does more thorough work. To these are added now a course in Religious Education and a course in Physical Culture. A young lady can get in Grenada College the course of study she desires and the best instructors to be had. State educators who know vouch for the thoroughness of the work done at Grenada College.

Graduates from Grenada College are given State license to teach in the schools of Mississippi without further examinations. This license may be transferred to any other State. Grenada is a great Teachers' College. Girls preparing to teach will do well to get their training at Grenada College.

The accommodations cannot be surpassed. Elegant dormitories, light, steam heat, good fare, large beautiful campus and healthful environment, a mineral well on corner of campus, all make Grenada College an ideal place for a college. The prices are very reasonable. Board, lodging, laundry, library fee, tuition, all expenses except specials, are only Three Hundred Dollars for the entire session. A home atmosphere and a religious environment that cannot be excelled anywhere make the college both a safe place and a pleasant place to spend the college days. Last year every student of the school was a member of some church, most of them active workers.

Send for a catalog and see for yourself the work given. To all ambitious, aspiring girls we solicit you as students. The dormitory space is limited to TWO HUNDRED. We want the best to be had. We ask every Methodist to help us to find them.

J. H. HOLDER,
Conference Secretary of Education.
New Albany, Miss., August 1, 1922.

AN ENDURING CIVILIZATION, AND UNIVERSAL PEACE.

By Rev. E. N. Evans.

Can men, build an enduring civilization and permanent universal peace on any other than those principles announced by the world's greatest Teacher and Statesman? Can man serve two masters? Can we serve God and Mammon?

Read the second Psalm, and then ask yourself who owns this earth, Christ or Mammon? The things we seek, and for which we pray, are not "hand-me-downs." Permanent civilization and universal peace are not arbitrarially bestowed. They are attainments—things to be achieved, conditions resulting from right and true relationships. The prayer we should pray is, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." You can't legislate the world into a permanent civilization or to universal peace. They don't come that way.

The world war is not over yet. Autocracy is not dead. While we have a little breathing spell, autocracy moves to the plane of Economics, and the battle lines follow. To get what we want and what God wishes us to have, we must be the kind of men who are worthy such things. It's all in the kind of men who are on the job. A mammonistic church and mammonistic statesmen can never bring to us these things, so devoutly to be wished. A true, noble, unselfish CHRISTIAN STATESMANSHIP is the world's most urgent need, a statesmanship that can and will make generals and military forces unnecessary.

The war between capital and labor can not be permanently settled by laws. We need and must have different kind of men. The Golden Rule will not work with unregenerate human nature. We must come at the matter from a different angle. Nothing so draws and unites men as that of a common danger on the one hand and a great, worthy and common OBJECTIVE on the other hand. We are our own worst enemies, destroying ourselves among ourselves because we are confused and do not understand either our true relationship to material things or the one to the other. We disagree about our assumed rights and ownerships, we go mad and cut and slay each other, and destroy the property over which we contend till we are the fewer and the poorer. We needed this property and these people. We have played the fool for years and centuries unnumbered. And we shall continue to do so till we come to the principles announced by the world's greatest STATESMAN.

"Where there is no vision the people perish." The eminent demand of the day is a mighty prophet. "And behold a greater than the prophets is here," but who will hear Him? Men of vision, of ideals are mocked and cast out. Not many of the world's greatest men were ever understood or praised by their contempories. The Hebrews are not the only ones who stoned their prophets in one generation and in the next generation built their monuments. The world is still in this kind of slaughtering. Our own country has just completed the job of building a monument to an assassinated president, and has another politically paralyzed. Men do not readily take to visions, and when a man gets ahead of his gang he generally pays the penalty in some manner.

Jesus gave His great vision years after they had crucified Him, and could do Him no more harm. His great vision and purpose of it all still stand; but who can, or will, read it? Now if we had a real world vision, that would explain all the past—the rise and fall of kingdoms, empires, dynasties and republics; the coming and going of civilizations in all the past; the present titanic struggles and "where do we go from here?" our temporary relationship to it all; what is the purpose and the end of it all; some great and worthy OBJECTIVE to be attained. Would it not be worth while to stop and listen to such an one? To find ourselves and get straight in line with this eternal purpose and plan?

The great and final objective of God, in keeping with His original and eternal purpose, is "A NEW EARTH and a NEW HEAVEN, INHABITED BY A SINLESS CITIZENSHIP, worthy of eternal life. This earth and all material wealth is only a means to the end decreed. Sinning men, reborn and made anew and right, are to be those immortals. What we do, or do not do with this earth or with ourselves does not alter the plan or change the great objective. We just shift things around a little and go on and leave all that we found here. But what we get and set in shape in ourselves, spiritualized and immortalized by right use, we find and have there. If we could get into men's minds and hearts this great divine, and to us common, OBJECTIVE, and these means to that great end, we might have men who could see things in their real and true light. This would end the conflict.

New Orleans, La.

REVIVAL AT BAYOU SCIE, LA.

We have just closed a great meeting at Bayou Scie Church on this charge, with a number of conversions. This is an old country church that has been neglected, and it looks good for something better. I was assisted by my daughter, who played the organ, and two other young ladies of Zwolle, both of whom are life-service volunteers. Miss Agnes Vaughan, who led the singing, and Miss Mary Jones, who taught the children games, had charge of the story-telling hours, and all did a great amount of personal work. It was the finest combination, for a gospel team, I have had. I believe, as a result of their work, the young people have a vision that they have never had before, and we are looking for greater things from this old church. W. F. HENDERSON, Jr.

The God of Peace: Now the God of peace, • • • make you perfect in every good work to do his will.—Hebrews 13:20, 21.

FROM BISHOP BOAZ.

Bishop H. A. Boaz sailed on July 27 to take up his work as bishop in charge of the Conferences in Korea, Japan and Siberia Manchuria. Shortly before he left the home country he sent to Centenary headquarters in Nashville, the following message for the church:

"I congratulate the church most heartily on the splendid way the Centenary campaign was conducted and the excellent results obtained. The securing of pledges, however, was not sufficient. The payment of these pledges will be essential in order to carry out the work of the church. The new fields have been opened and new pledges made to our friends on the mission field. They are our representatives. We must stand by them in the payment of our pledges. By looking over the records of the work in the Orient, I find that great progress has been made and a wonderful work accomplished by means of the Centenary contributions. The foundation has been laid and the way opened for a greater work in the future. The Centenary funds must be collected promptly that the work in these needy fields may be prosecuted in the most efficient way. Our representatives on the field are depending upon the church at home to supply the sinews of war. We must not fail them."

GIRLS! LEMONS WHITEN SKIN AND BLEACH FRECKLES

Squeeze the juice of two lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of Orchard White, which any drug store will supply for a few cents, shake well, and you have a quarter pint of harmless and delightful lemon bleach. Massage this sweetly fragrant lotion into the face, neck, arms and hands each day, then shortly note the beauty and whiteness of your skin.

Famous stage beauties use this lemon lotion to bleach and bring that soft, clear, rosy-white complexion, also as a freckle, sunburn, and tan bleach because it doesn't irritate.

"THE SOUTHERN CAPITOL OF SOUTHERN METHODISM."

The Southern Assembly, designated by one of our leading editors, Dr. T. N. Ivey, as the "Southern Capitol of Southern Methodism," has so far surpassed all previous records in the points of attendance and program in all her past history. Unusually strong programs have been presented under the direction of the Epworth League Board, the Wesley Bible Class Federation of Western North Carolina, the General Sunday School Board, with its great corps of teachers and their Training School and now the Standard School of Missions under Dr. C. G. Hounshell.

One of the outstanding events of the summer will be the dedication on July 30 of the great Mission Building. This building stands on a high hill, symbolical of the work which the Southern Assembly undertakes to do.

The hotels and boarding houses were never so well prepared to care for every comfort and give every convenience to the most exacting guests, giving the most reasonable rates to be found anywhere in America at a place similarly situated.

If you have never visited Lake Junaluska, this beauty spot of Western North Carolina, by all means plan to attend this summer. Send for a railroad certificate which will entitle you to one and a half fare for round trip. Tickets good returning up to September 15.

The following conferences are still to be held:

July 28-Aug. 6—Standard School of Missions.

August 7-13—Conference on Life and Work.

August 7-13—Daily concerts by band of 37 pieces.

August 14, 15, 16—Chautauqua.

August 17-27—School of Evangelism.

In addition to the programs offered in the auditorium for those who wish to attend, special advantages are offered at Lake Junaluska for clean, wholesome recreation, including gulf, tennis, bathing, boating, fishing, beautiful walks and drives, and horseback riding.

Why not plan to spend some of your vacation at least at Lake Junaluska? J. Dale Stentz, business manager of the Southern Assembly, will be glad to furnish any printed matter, railroad certificates and any other information you might possible desire.

THE OVERWORKED MOTHER.

It is a mother's constant temptation to serve her children in lesser deeds that rob her life of its most important property—to forget herself and waste her soul in the routine demands made by her children. But let every mother know that the best way to serve her children is to keep alive in her breast the importance of her own personality. Let her know that the time will come when these little ones will need more than the sacrifices of the nursery. Some day they will need her companionship. They will need her to be large-minded, up-to-date, so that they may share their men's and women's problems with her. Happy is that mother who grows with her children! Happy she who keeps to herself in their childhood sacred hours for her own self-culture, renewing ever the oil in her lamp, that to them her supreme gift may be a constant and increasing light!—Christian Century.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Dear Leaguers and Friends: Did you know that Dr. R. H. Wynn, Dr. W. Winans Drake, Dr. Alonzo Early, Rev. Albert S. Lutz, Rev. R. H. Harper, Rev. J. W. Pearson, Mr. Stephen S. Thomas, Mrs. R. H. Wynn, Mrs. J. G. Snelling and others all agree that the EPWORTH LEAGUE ASSEMBLY is the greatest piece of constructive work being done in Louisiana Methodism, for it is there that we are recruiting and training LEADERS for the church both to-day and to-morrow? You would say the same thing if you should attend one of the sessions.

These same people together with many others, have indorsed the program of intensive training which our program of field work is doing among our young people as the greatest need of the church to-day.

Our plan this year is to reach every local chapter in the Conference with an institute on League work. They all want it and are asking for it as never before. The time is now or never.

"Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest? Behold I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already unto harvest." Shall we neglect so great an opportunity?

Your State organization is all lined up 21 strong and every one of these officers is on the job. But it's up to you to say whether we can stay on the job or not.

If we are to do the work YOU must help us secure GIFTS to the amount of $3,000 during the SEPTEMBER CAMPAIGN.

We earnestly ask you to join us in prayer each day asking that our Heavenly Father lead us in this great work, and if it is His will then set His seal of approval upon it by a financial victory during September.

Talk to your friends about the State work, tell them what has been accomplished under the new program and what we are hoping to accomplish, ask that they join you in daily prayer. We must enter this campaign upon our knees, for prayer will bring victory.

WE ARE COUNTING ON YOU.

BIG DRIVE. SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 3.

Let us go over the top on that day and have the entire amount paid to the State Treasurer, Miss Grace Cook, Monroe, La., by the 9th of the month.

Watch for the next letter telling about "Big Drive Day," and Banners which will be awarded.

Yours for a greater League and church, JAS. B. GRAMBLING, Field Secretary La. Conf. E. L.

Leaguers, read this portion of a letter from Miss Sadie Mai Wilson. Miss Wilson's address is 2146 Carlton Avenue, Nashville, Tenn.

"I am writing to some of the fine young people I met in Mansfield. I wrote fouteen letters to-day, but I just can't keep in touch with all. I do remember them in my 'Morning Watch'—sometimes as groups—sometimes as individuals, but I can't write to each one regularly as much as I'd like to. There were some young people whom I didn't get to talk with. How I wish they would write to me, for that might help a little.

"We had splendid meetings in Kentucky and Missouri. If all these young people can go to their homes with the Reincarnated Christ in each life we can hope for great things. Of course, there are disappointments, but there are also glorious achievemens. My faith would never let me be a pessimist. I can realize with our young people that it is harder to lose self in preparation that it is to lose self in service. We must learn that oft times the greatest service comes during preparation."

Lake Charles District.

The Lake Charles League entertained the Women's Missionary Society at a Stunt Party. The League rooms were appropriately decorated with old maids and sun flowers. Among the stunts were "Just a sound from Sousa's Band" and "Old Maids organizing a Lonesomeless Club." We wish we could all have been there to enjoy the fun.

The following report from DeRidder Intermediate shows that somebody is on the job. Watch out, Seniors, or this League will walk away with all honors.

"The Intermediate League of DeRidder, La., enjoyed a social and business meeting on the church lawn Friday evening. Many of the members were dressed in costume. Chairs were arranged on the lawn and between the reports of the officers stunts were quickly staged, forming a series of pleasant surprises. At the close of the business meeting there was a plantation scene.

"The League has done splendid work during the last quarter. At the close of the preceding quarter 18 members were promoted to the Senior and yet our present membership is thirty-two with an average attendance of twenty-five. We have one Bible class and are planning for a class in Mission Study. Written reports were read and each department is trying to bring its work up to a written plan of activity. Fourteen members have joined the quiet hour covenant."

Baton Rouge District.

On July 10, the district secretary and Mr. A. R. Wallis of Baton Rouge organized a Senior League at Live Oak Church, Watson, La. There were twenty-nine young people who joined. This is the kind of work that Leaguers everywhere rejoice to hear about.

Mr. Grambling conducted a two-day Institute in Franklinton. Bogalusa and Fisher Leagues were represented. Class work and a good time all helped to make this Institnte a success.

Sunday School

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

It is a good thing to make a promise and it is equally good to keep that promise. Have you forgotten to send in the money your school contributed on the fifth Sunday in January to pay the expense of the District Standard Training Schools? Such schools have been held in the Sardis District, the Corinth, and the Columbus. The work has been done according to promise, but the expenses have not been fully met. Another matter, did you read the list of schools in the last issue of the Messenger, that have reported on the observance of Sunday School Day? It is late, but not too late to make a more creditable showing than that. Is this a fair question? Can a man claim to have "everything in full," when he has neglected as important a matter as observing the one day set apart for the training of the children and young people and of taking an offering to extend the work of the Sunday school?

The Columbus District S. T. S. held at Ackerman had an enrollment of 35 students, 27 credits were issued, 13 schools were represented, 5 volunteered for life-service, 13 volunteered to give the best of their thought to religious education. One group of young people from the Salem Church came 15 miles over rough roads in a truck and were on time every day. Some people call that "pluck, grit, pep;" call it what you please, such young people have a glorious future. God has a place for them in his kingdom. Numbers in this school testified that they experienced a deeper work of grace than at any meeting they had attended this year. A few said they learned more than during any previous week of study. Rev. A. T. McIlwain, P. E. of the district and Rev. W. L. Storment, pastor, each took a course. Their observation was, a man must get into the work to appreciate its worth. You will have to take your hat off to such men and pray that their number may increase. Revs. E. S. Lewis, A. T. McIlwain, and Mellville Johnson delivered messages at the evening hours. These messages were of a high order and would rank with the best preaching of this day or of any day. The school at Ackerman was another step forward.

The officers and teachers in the Aberdeen District who live near Houston are to have an opportunity of attending a similar school to the one held at Ackerman. The date of this school is August 28-September 2. Miss Ramey is to teach Primary Organization and Administration; Mrs. Randolph is to teach Pupil Study; Dr. Milden is to teach the Principles of Religious Teaching; and Mr. Gladney is to teach a course in "A Methodist Church and Its Work." If any one wants a folder giving full information or if you have made up your mind to attend this school write to Rev. E. E. McKeithen, Houston, Miss.

FROM KOSCIUSKO CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Carley: I am now in my revival campaign. My first meeting was at Spring Dale, where I was assisted by Rev. J. A. George, of Duncan, Miss., who came to us on Monday and preached through till Friday night, to the delight of all who heard him. The Lord honored his messages—the church life was greatly quickened, and six young men and women were added to membership on profession of faith.

Our presiding elder, A. T. McIlwain, was with us at Salem, bringing us great messages in connection with the third quarterly conference.

I am at East Union this week, assisted by W. D. Bass, of Corinth, Miss., with his big tent. We are having great congregations, with manifest power in each service, and a great victory is in sight. "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

W. A. BOWLIN, P. C.

FROM POPLAR SPRINGS, MERIDIAN, MISS.

In appreciation of the splendid work done by Rev. W. A. Hays and family, of Poplar Springs, the Official Board voted a two-weeks' leave of absence for their pastor with salary paid in full during his absence. Brother Hays and family left this morning for the coast, where they will spend this vacation, and the good wishes of the entire church go with them.

The splendid constructive work that Brother Hays has done for the past three years at this place cannot be estimated. This church boasts of one of the most efficient Epworth Leagues in the Conference and this is due to the untiring efforts of Ralph Hays, who has served faithfully as president and is always on the lookout for something better. The League conducts a public program once a month in place of the regular prayer services for that week, and the pastor feels that he can call on them in any emergency, even to the filling of his pulpit sometimes when he is absent, which they have done several times with credit to themselves.

The congregation is praying for a greater outpouring of God's Spirit that they may help the ongoing of the Kingdom here.

CHURCH REPORTER.

FROM FLORA, MISS.

Dear Brother: Everything goes well on the Flora charge so far this year. In the first place, we had a very fine meeting in March, held by Dr. McIntosh and his singer, Edd Philips. This meeting was far-reaching and still we see the results. Our Sunday school has almost doubled in numbers, and our prayer meetings are well attended and about 50 per cent of those in attendance will pray in public. Yesterday morning, Monday, we organized a men's prayer meeting, with 45 in attendance; this morning we had 57 present from 7:30 to 8 o'clock. The ladies organized a prayer meeting at 7:30 this morning, with 27 present. The outlook in Flora is good for a sweeping revival throughout our charge. Pray for us.

Your brother in Christ,
August 8. J. H. FOREMAN.

FROM SPRINGHILL, LA.

My Dear Brother Carley: We are glad to report that the Lord has been very near to us in the past ten days. We started a series of evangelistic meetings here Sunday, July 23, and from that date until August 2, God surely poured out His Spirit upon us. We had as our preacher for the special services Rev. T. W. St. John, formerly of the Texas Conference, and God certainly used him in a wonderful way. With such a preacher as we have with us, there is no possible reason why the good work should not continue. There have been 25 members added to the church, and about 35 conversions.

Our pastor is a man of much prayer, and as a result of his efforts the members have been led nearer to Christ and many who have not been attending service are coming out. It is safe to say that our church is better today than it has ever been. Our motto is, "Springhill for God."

Yours to win,
SCRIBE.

FROM THE CORINTH CIRCUIT.

Dear Brother Carley We have just closed our Box Chapel meeting of the Corinth circuit. The Rev. E. R. Smoot, of First Church, Corinth, did the preaching. They say it was the greatest meeting in the history of the church. Our people were greatly revived and are enjoying the old-time religion. Great crowds thronged at the old church, so much so that many could not get sitting or standing room. God came in great power, saved many precious souls, and 20 came into the church; and more are to follow. Some will go to other churches. As Rev. E. R. Smoot preached the gospel in the old-fashioned way, the Spirit of God sealed the truths and burned the same into all our hearts and we all got happy and are still happy on the way.

The people of First Church, Corinth, love their pastor, and he loves them, and Corinth circuit people and pastor love him, too; he is the man with the message.

We will begin our meeting at Gains Chapel to-morrow with Rev. W. M. Young, of Leland, to do the preaching. We are praying and hoping for a great time. Pray for us.

D. R. McDOUGAL, P. C.

A PECULIAR AND UNUSUALLY BLESSED EXPERIENCE.

Yes, Dr. Carley, some one did "borrow" the Ford and has never brought it back! What do you think about that? But why did some one get this news to your columns so quick and not tell about Tom Morrow, of South McComb, being so wonderfully converted the very same day the Ford was taken, I think it was? I know for a man like Morrow to be saved from sin and hell to a life of righteousness and joyful service is more important news than to have a Ford taken off the street while engaged in religious worship, but I haven't noticed it in your columns yet! Well, he has "got it" all right and is telling it and almost shouting it as he drives his old truck over the streets of McComb.

But to my subject. It was certainly a peculiar feeling and experience to walk out on the street to get your new Ford and find it gone—really gone! You instinctively walk up and down the streets somehow expecting to see it. You walk fast and don't know it. After awhile (when I saw my wife's tears) I began to realize it was really gone! Not long afterwards, when I got a chance to fall upon my knees, I felt the glory of heaven in my poor soul, and was actually reminded of the words of Job: "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." The devil, no doubt, got the Ford as he got Job's property, etc., which had been given him by the Lord, so there was some kind of a Power seemed to hold me steady and assure me it was all right, and while it was a peculiar experience, it has been an unusually blessed experience. I was blessed so greatly that I remarked to many who would ask about the matter, that I was going on to heaven if I had to walk. I meant it, too! Well, I have walked right on, trying to glorify God in every way. But several voluntarily told me I must have a Ford. I thanked them, cried sometimes and shouted some. So, on Monday, August 7, I drove another new Ford into the nice garage that was here when the parsonage was bought. It isn't all paid for, but friends say they are going to remember me as the pay days come and go. It has been unsolicited on my part. I have had it insured for $500 against fire and theft! Who could blame me? We have dedicated it to God and His work. He is blessing us in our church and in our home, so we thank God again and again, take new courage, and press right on up the Highway to where sorrow and sighing shall flee away. Amen! In holy love,

J. A. WELLS.

REVIVAL AT BENTON, MISS.

Dear Mr. Editor: Just a few words about our revival at Benton. If there be those to deny the power of God and, too, declare the day of great revivals past, they should visit us.

Brother S. F. Harkey and family, of Union, Miss., came to us the fifth Sunday in July and spent ten days in our midst.

Brother Harkey preached the plain, old-time Gospel of Jesus Christ. We prayed and worked with him. We had many old differences and disputes settled. Men and women who had not spoken for years were led together. God came in power, revived our church, and saved lost souls.

The last service I shall never forget, as we lined up forty around the altar, and received them into the church, with five others yet to be received. In this crowd were all ages, from above threescore and ten down to seven years.

Old men who have spent their lives in Benton say they have never seen it after this fashion. No, and the pastor can truly say the same. Bless the Lord, we serve a great God who can and is anxious to do for us far above that we can think or ask.

Brother Carley, when we returned to the parsonage after the close of our last service, our house had leaked all manner of good things to eat and money, too. God bless our dear people and help us to lead them aright. Pray for us.

Fraternally,
E. A. KING, P. C.

FROM PLEASANT HILL, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: Things are moving along very well on this charge. I have just held two good meetings on my charge—closed the last one at Marthaville last night. I took in a class of eight young people there yesterday on profession of faith.

The writer did the preaching for the above meetings.

We held our meeting here at Pleasant Hill the last of May, which was a very helpful meeting. By brother, Rev. E. C. Cargill, of Italy, Texas, did the preaching. Many souls were blessed.

We give God the praise, and expect to round out a good year's work.

If not providentially hindered, the writer goes to Provencal next Saturday night for a meeting there with our pastor and his good people. Pray for us that God may give us a gracious meeting.

Yours in the work.

ORGANIZATION MEETING. WOMAN'S DEPARTMENT, BOARD OF MISSIONS.

The recent General Conference made some changes in the Constitution of the Board of Missions.

The Board consists of three coordinate departments, one of which is a Woman's Department.

The membership of the Woman's Department consists of the fourteen women elected by the General Conference as representatives of their Annual Conference, one woman at large, the President of the Woman's Missionary Council, and the women Secretaries and Treasurer. These women constitute a committee of the Board to make plans and policies for the women's work of the church to be put into effect through the action of the Board.

Those elected by General Conference are: Mrs. R. L. Hobdy, Alabama Conference; Mrs. J. H. Spilman, Kentucky Conference; Mrs. S. A. Montgomery, Louisiana Conference; Mrs. J. H. Dickey, Louisville Conference; Mrs. H. L. McClesky, Mississippi Conference; Mrs. F. F. Stephens, Missouri Conference; Mrs. I. J. Ayers, New Mexico Conference; Mrs. S. G. Smith, North Arkansas Conference; Mrs. Luke Johnson, Nerth Georgia Conference; Mrs. Nat Rollins, Northwest Texas Conference; Mrs. R. P. Howell, Pacific Conference; Mrs. J. W. Mills, Texas Conference; Mrs. Lee Britt, Virginia Conference; Mrs. S. H. Bowman, Western Virginia Conference; Mrs. W. F. Tillett, at large.

(All the otber Conferences of Southern Methodism are represented in the Board of Missions by either a preacher or a layman.)

In addition to the above, the President of the Woman's Missionary Council, all the Secretaries, and the Treasurer of Woman's Work are members of the Department. They are: Miss Belle H. Bennett, Miss Esther Case, Miss Mabel Howell, Mrs. J. W. Downs, Mrs. J. H. McCoy, Mrs. F. H. E. Ross, Mrs. H. R. Steele, Miss Estelle Haskin, Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb, thus making twenty-four women who form the Woman's Department of the Board of Missions.

The Woman's Department met in Nashville, Tenn., June 27-28, 1922, for the purpose of studying the new Constitution and of organizing itself into a Committee on Woman's Work in accordance with the Constitution.

After two days' consideration of the issues involved, the plans and methods necessary for the conduct of the work, the adoption of by-laws to be submitted to the By-Law Committee of the Board, and other necessary actions, the Department perfected its quadrennial organization by the following elections: Chairman, Mrs. Luke Johnson; Recording Secretary, Mrs. Nat Rollins.

A recommendation was sent to the Board that Miss Mabel Howell be authorized to go to the Orient in the interest of the building enterprises and other needs of the Woman's Work at this time when representatives to the General Work are going. This recommendation was approved by the Executive Committee of the Board the following day, and Miss Howell will sail on August 10. She hopes to return within five or six months.

The women of the Department elected by the Board of Missions to membership on the Board Committees are as follows:

Executive Committee—Mrs. W. F. Tillett, Mrs. Luke JohnJson, Mrs. J. H. Dickey.

By-Laws Committee—Mrs. F. F. Stephens, Mrs. R. L. Hobdy.

Home Base Committee—Mrs. S. H. Bowman, Mrs. J. H. Spilman, Mrs. Nat Rollins, Miss Mabel Howell, Mrs. J. W. Downs, Mrs. H. L. McClesky.

Candidate Committee—Mrs. W. F. Tillett, and all the Secretaries.

Estimates Committee—The President of the Woman's Missionary Council and all the Secretaries.

The meeting of the Woman's Department was characterized by a spirit of harmony and prayer, which resulted in a consciousness of the presence of the Spirit of God.

The Committee adjourned with a sense of oneness in its determination to faithfully discharge the duties laid upon it, believing that the organized womanhood of the church has before it yet greater opportunities for accomplishing His will and sharing in tbe bringing in of his kingdom among all men.

Mrs. LUKE JOHNSON,
Chairman.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

In reading the Christian Advocate this morning, I noticed where a Woman's Missionary Society in Mississippi was doing good work, meeting four times a month regardless of bad weather. This inspired me to write of our Society here, of which we are very proud. We have about forty members. Most all respond when called upon for any task, great or small.

It is now the first of August. Neither heat nor rain, of which it seems we've had more than usual, has kept us from having good attendance at all meetings, four and sometimes five each month. We sometimes hear members say (not here) "it's entirely too warm now to meet only twice a month," and yet those same members go to other clubs regularly each week. I see no meeting that we could very well leave off: First one is the business meeting, very important; next two are for Mission Study and Voice programs, which have been especially fine this year, and the fourth is a Social meeting with usually some kind of a quiz and something nice and refreshing to eat, which adds "spice" to our busy lives. I suppose we meet tbe fifth from habit or as proof that we really do enjoy getting together. However, our meetings are always full of interesting, inspiring and helpful features, due to our lovable President, Mrs. F. S. Clark, and Mission Study teacher, Mrs. R. M Brown.

We are now studying tbe last chapter of "Marks of a World Christian," by D. J. Fleming. It is perfectly splendid and no Society should miss studying tbis book.

From an enthusiastic member of the Woman's Missionary Society, Merryville, La.

"Each day I school myself to feel
That what I havo and where I chance to bo
Is, for my present growth and future weal,
The best for me.

"Each day I seek for higher, better patbs
Than feet of mine have ever trod—
Paths nearer to my brother man,
And closer God.

"Each day I try to touch some burdened life
And by that touch to make it strong.
To add a little to the world's great good
And weaken wrong.

"Each day—which means in every moment mine—
I turn to tasks, yet tasks made sweet
Because I've laid them first
At Jesus feet."

FROM BISHOP BEAUCHAMP.

Whatever service Bishop Beauchamp shall give to the church during the years ahead, Southern Methodism will remember him always as the man under whose leadership was made the inspiring record of the Missionary Centenary. To him the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will be debtor always.

It was fitting that Bishop Beauchamp should be given oversight of our work in Europe, for this work would not have been possible but for the Centenary. To fail to carry it on, would be to turn from one of the best opportunities that has yet come to Southern Methodism. This work will continue, and the assignment of Bishop Beauchamp to the European field is our pledge that we will continue to use this great opportunity.

Bishop Beauchamp is now in Europe, with his headquarters at Brussels. From a statement given shortly before he sailed for Europe we quote as follows:

"The first payments of pledges came due at a time when we could go into Europe and help relieve the terrible suffering across that continent. Many thousands of children have been fed, groups have entered our orphanages in Belgium, Poland and Czecho-Slovakia. Our church has realized a great joy in being instrumental in helping to save the child life of the whole of central Europe. Not only is this true, but it came at a time when the need in Europe was spiritual quickening and when the need of the evangelistic message was as manifest as the hunger of the bodies of those whom we were feeding. So the evangelistic message has been welcomed in a wonderful way across that section of the Slav world occupied by the two nations of Poland and Czecho-Slovakia. It is merely a statement of fact to say that the Centenary power and impulse and spirit have been felt across the whole world in quickening the life of faith and enthusiasm of world-wide Protestantism."

The Bishop's statement closes with the following message and appeal to the church at home:

"We enter the new quadrennium with a united church and the entire ecclesiastical organization of our church behind this Centenary program. Certainly at no period in the history of the Centenary program has it had behind it quite such a united and enthusiastic constituency. We confidently, therefore, count on all subscribers, as they behold what wonderful things God has wrought through these gifts that they have made, to keep on paying until every pledge has been redeemed and to the completion of the Centenary program. Through all the days to come in the history of our church this period will stand out as one of the notable accomplishments of Southern Methodism."

Epworth League.

A VISITOR AT RAYNE MEMORIAL.

During the past month we of the Rayne Memorial Epworth League have been greatly honored in having among us such a lovely Christian character as is found in Mr. Gidman, of Liverpool, England.

Mr. Gidman has lead our League service on two occasions, and is always glad of the opportunity to serve his Master by taking some part in the service. His talks and prayers have been an inspiration and blessing to all of us, and we wish that we might have shared him with our fellow Leaguers of the city.

Mr. Gidman is at this time employed by the Leyland Steamship Company, but is a volunteer for British Missionary Work and will be stationed, when he completes his course of training in the British Mission in Central Africa.

He is very greatly interested in our League work and especially in our African missionary work in the Belgian Congo.

We give below, because of its beauty and comfort, a beautiful song written as a response to "Abide with Me," which was given the writer by our above-mentioned brother.

I Will Abide.

"I will abide, though night is drawing nigh,
Tho' clouds and darkness now obscure the sky;
I know thy sorrows, see thy falling tear,
Give me thy hand, for I am ever near.

Tho' earthly joys are fleeing fast away,
Lean upon me and I will be thy stay;
My grace is all-sufficing, rich and free,
Have perfect faith, I will abide with thee!

My eye is watching o'er thee, troubled child,
My arm shall guide thee, though the path be wild;
Midst storms and tempests to my bosom flee,
Be not afraid, I will abide with thee!

A little while and then it will be light,
Thy faith shall be exchanged for perfect sight;
No fears to vex thee, nothing to molest,
For thou shalt be with Me in perfect rest!
When friends forsake thee I will be thy friend;
My love shall keep thee until life shall end;
And when heaven's golden gate thine eye shall see,
I will, eternally, abide with thee!

Cured Her Rheumatism

Knowing from terrible experience the suffering caused by rheumatism, Mrs. J. E. Hurst, who lives at 508 E. Olive St., B-355, Bloomington, Ill., is so thankful at having cured herself that out of pure gratitude she is anxious to tell all other sufferers just how to get rid of their torture by a simple way at home.

Mrs. Hurst has nothing to sell. Merely cut out this notice, mail it to her with your own name and address, and she will gladly send you this valuable information entirely free. Write her at once before you forget.

RESOLUTIONS CONCERNING AMUSEMENTS.

Whereas, It is believed that the young people of the Washington District have read and taken due cognizance of the resolutions condemning the modern dance and the moving pictures, passed by the Baltimore Conference recently in session in this city; and,

Whereas, It is believed that practically all of the evils charged to these practices are rightly attributed thereto, and,

Whereas, The wishes and rules of the church, being embodied in the church obligations, must be respected and obeyed by all honest and self-respecting communicants thereof; and,

Whereas, The young people of the church, requiring a certain amount of recreation and play, seem to be the ones who for the last decade have been seemingly disregarding the various rules of the Discipline; and,

Whereas, It is believed and generally accepted that a vast number of young people are refraining from joining our church, feeling that to live up to the obligations, our church would deprive them of practically all available amusements, without furnishing any satisfying clean, wholesome recreation in return; and,

Whereas, We believe that the various departments of the church that are working toward a recreational program should be correlated under one department of the church that would supervise and plan a definite, balanced, positive program of recreation for the departments of the church to develop; and,

Whereas, We believe that the soul of one person is worth more in the eyes of God than all the magnificent churches of our fair city, therefore,

Be it Resolved, first, That this, the Epworth League Union, of Washington, D. C., and vicinity, go on record as deploring the depraved conditions of commercialized amusements that exists in our country.

Be it Resolved, second, That we go on record as feeling that the members of the League are the future leaders of the church, and that we place ourselves as Leaguers, at the disposal of the pastor and others in authority to assist them in any work that they might do among the young people of the church.

Be it Resolved, third, That we individually and as a body bring every possible power to bear on our bishops, connectional men, presiding elders, ministers, and laymen, urging them to provide through the church a program of proper, appealing substitutes for those amusements condemned by our church.

Be it Resolved, fourth, That we urge that an entertainment, or similar board of competent, interested, young-hearted persons be appointed by the College of Bishops, with power to represent the church, and to work with the Epworth League, Sunday School, Missionary, Church Extension, and Education Boards to provide a program that will rectify this condition in our church.

Be it Resolved, fifth, That if this entertainment, or similar board is created, that they be granted an adequate amount of money to enable them to plan a program that will adequately satisfy the desire for recreation among our young people.

Be it Resolved, sixth, That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of our organization, that a copy be published in every Conference organ of Southern Methodism, that a copy be sent to every minister in the Baltimore Conference, and that a copy be entrusted to Dr. J. Howard Wells, presiding elder of the Washington District, to be carried by him to the General Conference of our church, soon to be held, and to be placed by him before the proper authorities there, for consideration, and as prompt action as possible.

The world is a sphere of suffering and, until it is remade from base to summit, no one can deny that it will continue to be what it is. But the aim of fine manhood should be to make it so strong that it can stand the utmost strain. Again I say the end is not suffering but victory, though of a sort that can be achieved only through suffering. Nothing less is worthy of men who are sons of God. It behooves us to suffer that we may enter into our glory.—Charles H. Brent.

FROM GIRLHOOD TO WOMANHOOD

Woman Relied Upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Emporia, Kansas.—"I began using Lydia E. Pinkham's medicines years ago when I was a girl. For several years I had severe pains at menstrual periods, making me very weak and interfering with my regular duties. I tried several remedies without obtaining relief. I was induced to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound by friends and it restored me to normal health. I often have occasion and do recommend your Vegetable Compound to my friends who have troubles similar to my own. You may use these facts as a testimonial."—EVA ALDRICH, 218 Union St., Emporia, Kansas.

There are many women who first used our Vegetable Compound during their girlhood days. They found it a valuable help during trying periods. In later years they use it whenever they feel those annoying symptoms which women often have.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a woman's medicine. It is prepared carefully from the best quality of medicinal plants, whose properties are especially adapted to correct the troubles women have.

OPPORTUNITIES IN LITTLE CITIES FOR YOUNG MEN.

Somehow people get the idea that the young folks who stay on the farms and in the small cities are deficient in brain power or else they lack the ambition necessary to succeed in life. Again and again we hear the cry, "There is no chance for youth in the country towns," and that cry oft repeated is responsible for some of the failures in the large cities.

A young man was rather nettled when a city friend spoke disparagingly of the small city in which he lived, and without egotism he proceeded to tell some of the advantages he enjoyed by sticking to the small place. He had a pretty modern house on a large lot, with space for a little garden, a flower plot, some thoroughbred chickens, a stable where the family pony and the children's pets were kept, plenty of sunshine, fresh air, and ventilation, and, by no means the last consideration, plenty of clean rainwater. His neighbors were young people—his friends who had remained in the small city, and they were all happy together.

Moreover, he could walk in five minutes to his work wihtout waiting for a street car; he was within easy distance of good stores, markets, and supply houses; school and church could be reached in less than five minutes, and the doctor was one of the neighbors. He could and did walk leisurely home at noon to a substantial meal at his own table, and spend an hour with his wife and children instead of lunching downtown alone, and when his work was over he could be at home to work or play or drive or rest with his family, with no tedious wait between.

He had been able to marry young, and at the age of thirty could look forward to growing up with his children. Many of his friends who had rushed away to the city had never seen their way clear to marry, though they were spoken of as rising young men; so he spoke of his family as his best asset in life. He was an honored citizen of the place, and one misstep would have brought a host of friends to his side to warn him and help him back into right paths—another asset that is sometimes overlooked in small cities. He had been elected to public office and was able to have a voice in the government of his native town. He filled important places in the school, church, civic, mercantile, and social life of the place, and it looked very much as if larger opportunities were before him.

And when he turned to his friend and said quietly, "Has the city done that much for you?" the friend was unable to answer in the affirmative. There are chances in the cities, many of them, but there are opportunities in the country and large towns as well.—Selected.

BRAINS IN SERMONS.

When a noted painter was asked how he mixed his colors to produce such wonderful effects he answered, "With brains, sir." We have an idea that brains are not a bad thing for painters, poets, preachers, and others. It is to be feared that many of our ministers of the present day are not brainy enough in their pulpit work. This may not be because they are stupid, but perhaps because they are not systematic, or, mayhap, they are too pressed by parish cares, beset by persecuting visitors, or worried over financial matters. Most of them know enough—not that they could not know more—but do not understand sufficiently well how to utilize and apply that knowledge for homiletic purposes. Old Socrates used to go around teaching that virtue is knowledge—a saying almost convertible into knowledge is virtue. Ignorance, or what amounts to the same thing, inutility, is at a discount in every age. In one of the ancient Sutras of India the monk's duty is clearly outlined as consisting in large part in the obligation to preach to others the way of salvation, but he must do so intelligently, for "to preach an ignorant sermon is a sin." Monks are also bidden to spread the knowledge of the truth by copying out the commandments, and, if they lack materials for this, are bidden to use their own blood for ink and pieces of their own bones for pencils. Because of this and other statements De Groot describes this "Sutra of Brahma's Net" as "the principal instrument of the great Buddhist art of salvation." The art advocated is not an artifice but a teaching—the idea being that of the application of all the powers of logic and language, symbol and metaphor, to the ablest partial disclosure of the supernal realities which lurk and loom behind the dark abysses of the fathomless sky. It takes brains to interpret a revelation. As it is, too many young ministers are indulging in the conceit that their pulpit success is already assured. Such a youth wrote to the bishop of Armagh: "I am extremely popular in my parish, and a good preacher." The bishop wrote in reply: "I am glad to hear that you are a good preacher, but sorry that you think so." Modesty is becoming in all prophets, old as well as young. As a matter of fact, we hear a good deal of preaching which in all charity cannot be pronounced good. The lack may rarely be an original want of brains, but more often consists in a failure to use them. More sympathetic and systematic study of the conditions, ecclesiastical and social, surrounding the young theologues of the day would enable them steadily to grow in wisdom and stature, in pulpit power, in community leadership, and in favor with God and man.—Zion's Herald.

The Mercy of God: Who is a God like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity, and passeth by the transgression of the remnant of his heritage? * * * He delighteth in mercy. * * * He will have compassion upon us: he will subdue our iniquities: and thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea.—Micah 7:18, 19.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE ONLY HOPE.

The Christian religion is the only hope for the present safety and the ultimate salvation of the world. In the present state of industrial unrest, no agreement can be reached by the contending parties that will bring lasting peace that is not fundamentally in keeping with the requirements of the gospel. There may be temporary adjustments and makeshift arrangements that will relieve the situation for a season; but the trouble will arise again and again, until the right settlement is reached. And in order that this one hope of the world may be realized, the Christian religion must become operative in the lives of the people. It is all very well to talk about the indirect influence of the gospel upon community life in general—that influence is great and it must not be discounted—but it will take more than an indirect influence to save this world. Men of all classes must have the love of God so shed abroad in their hearts that they will strive to do the right thing at all times and under all circumstances, regardless of selfish interests or party and class advantage. The gospel must become the regulative power in the individual life before that life can be conformed to the will of God. And in bringing the gospel to bear upon the life of the world, the church is the one agency in which reliance may be placed to do the work that needs to be done. The church may have its faults; it may be open to criticism in various directions; it may have in its membership people who are not really Christians at heart; it may not have functioned in the past as it ought to have done, and it may not be doing all that it ought to do now. For one who has no better employment, the church may furnish good material to "pick on" and find fault with; but the church is the divinely appointed means by which the kingdom of God is to be established upon earth, and it is in the church and through the church that we should dedicate our lives to the service of God.

IT IS NOT SO.

We read just a few days ago some extracts from an address delivered by a distinguished clergyman of New York on the topic, "Worldliness in the Present-day Church," in which occur statements that seem to us to constitute a broad condemnation of the literature, the art, and the general intellectual activities of the present time. But it is this statement specifically to which we utter a vigorous denial: "The spirit of worldliness has all but paralyzed the Christian church of to-day." We know the evils of worldliness, and we do not underestimate the prevalence and power of worldliness; but it is not true that the church of to-day is all but paralyzed by worldliness or by any other force. The church is active, aggressive, and—we dare affirm it—as spiritual as it has ever been in any period of its history. If anybody calls in question this statement, all we ask him to do is to read the history of the Christian church from the first, beginning with the New Testament, and compare the church of to-day fairly with the church in any other period. We will not contend that the church to-day is all that it ought to be; but we are everlastingly tired of those unfounded criticisms, many of them coming from preachers of high position, to the effect that the church has all but lost its spiritual power. If we thought the church were as corrupt as these carping critics seem to think it is, we would sever our connection with it simply as a means of self-protection. We wonder that some of them do not.

THE LATE BISHOP JOHN CARLISLE KILGO.

METHODIST HOSPITALS.

We do not suppose a good Methodist hospital is any better than a good Baptist hospital, or a good Presbyterian hospital, or, for that matter, any better than a good Jewish or Roman Catholic hospital; in fact, a poor hospital under any auspices is better than no Methodist hospital at all—and that is just the point we have in mind: Methodism, with all its aggressiveness, does not seem to have realized what a great field of usefulness is open before it in ministering to the sick. That realization is coming, though, and with the organization of our General Hospital Board we may look for large development in this direction. Methodism ought to do her share in making provision for the sick and needy—and this she has not done hertofore. That reproach must soon be removed.

WOULD IT HAVE BEEN SO IN YOUR CHURCH?

The spirit of the big city church is, perhaps, about the same as that of other churches. Read this, from the Christian Guardian: "It has often been tried and, so far as we know, it has always turned out about the same way. The latest to make the experiment is the Rochester Times-Union. It dressed up three of its young reporters as typical hoboes, and sent them around to three of the large churches of the city to the morning service to see how they would be received. A Presbyterian, a Baptist, and an Episcopal church were chosen, and in each instance the disreputable-looking stranger was received with cordiality, was given a good seat, was carefully supplied with a hymn book, and no one took any too-critical interest in him, or showed, by any gesture even, any offense at his dirty clothes or unshaven face. In fact, one of the reporters said that it would be impossible for a finer or more discriminating courtesy to be shown to any one than was shown to him under these circumstances. We said that experiments of this kind have nearly always turned out after this fashion, and we believe that we are absolutely right. The pride and arrogance and heartlessness that we are often told about as revealed by the pewholders in big city churches exist for the most part in the imaginations of people who, apparently, would like to have it so. The churches generally have much more of the Christian feeling and spirit than some of the people have who talk about them."

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE COLLEGES.

At this season of the year much is being said about the responsibility of parents with reference to the education of their children, and about the importance of our young people's going to college in order adequately to prepare themselves for life. All this is well said—and much might be added; but the colleges must not forget that with every student that enters their halls, a responsibility is laid upon them that is as great as the value of a human soul. The presidents and teachers of these colleges have no right to assume that their relationship to these young men and women is simply one of detached intellectual interest; the fathers and mothers of these young people have sent them to these institutions at great sacrifice, many of them, and with prayers upon their lips for the moral and religious development of their children as well as their intellectual training, and they expect, as they have a right to expect, presidents and teachers to help make real men and women out of these boys and girls. It is as much the business of a Christian college to make saints as it is to make scholars.

"WHERE ART THOU, LORD?"

The parish priest
Of Austerity
Climbed up in a high church steeple,
To be nearer God,
So that he might hand
His word down to his people.

And in sermon script
He daily wrote
What he thought was sent from heaven;
And he dropped this down
On his people's heads
Two times one day in seven.

In his age, God said:
"Come down and die!"
And he cried out from the steeple:
"Where art Thou, Lord?"
And the Lord replied:
"Down here among my people." —Selected.

WHAT THE GENERAL CONFERENCE DID ABOUT EDUCATION.

By Dr. Stonewall Anderson.

At its recent session the General Conference took action which indicates that the great cause of Christian Education is coming to its rightful place in the thinking of the church.

In the first place, it definitely and decisively silenced certain voices which have been heard here and there. Some had said that our institutions of learning were not really Christian; others, that the Christian Education Movement had been extravagant.

The General Conference said that both were wrong.

"We are glad to believe," declared all the bishops "that the sense of religious obligation is stronger and more active in our institutions of higher learning than it was even a few years ago. They seem to hold, and we think correctly so, that after the formation of Christian character, the chief objective in the conduct of church colleges and universities is the preparation of leaders, both preachers and laymen, for the direction of the larger work which the church has to do in this and succeeding generations."

Nor was that all. The General Conference itself, acting on the report of its Committee on Education, said: "It is gratifying that our educational institutions, despite adverse criticism, are loyal to the idea of teaching the Bible as the authorized Word of God, and that they are in sympathy with Methodism's interpretation of that Word."

As for the other count in the indictment, namely, extravagance, it met the same fate. The General Conference on the very first day instructed committees "to inquire into the cost of administration, traveling expenses, publication and distribution of literature, and all other matters of overhead expense and make special report in each case to this General Conference."

A special committee made the investigation and rendered the special report, which was adopted. And this is what was found: "That the expenditures of the Board at headquarters and in the various Conferences are, in our judgment, entirely reasonable and consistent with administrative costs under prevailing conditions."

In the second place, the General Conference was most enthusiastic in its endorsement and appraisal of the achievements of the Christian Education Movement, and it declared that this Movement should be pushed to completion.

A new constitution was granted to the Board of Education with scarcely a dissenting vote. The assessment for Education was increased.

The bishops expressed the hope that large sums would yet be given to the total of the Christian Education Movement. And the Conference lauded the Movement as "a magnificent victory."

"The educational institutions," declared the Conference, "have been drawn closer together; the church has been brought to appreciate the profound importance of education that is genuinely Christian.

"The moral and spiritual life of the church has been deepened and enriched by the Movement. Our people have been led to a higher plane of living relative to the great truth of the trusteeship of life and property."

As for furthering and conserving the results of the Christian Education Movement, the General Conference left no doubt as to its attitude, designating the Board of Education as the proper agency for the prosecution of this work.

It was further stressed "that the subscriptions already taken should be collected as nearly as possible when they are due."

The General Conference sent the great cause of Christian Education into this new quadrennium with all official emphasis behind it. The achievements of the past two years were recognized as being but the beginning of a new and larger day in this fundamental activity of the church. It must be so.

With the loyalty of all our people remaining steadfast, the spirit of Christian Education—the spirit which cradled Methodism and made us what we are—must grow from more to more until it becomes controlling. It is a consummation devoutly to be wished. That it will come we need not doubt.

NEW TESTAMENT PURIFYING.

By Arthur Madison Shaw.

Paper III.

What Is Baptism For? Again let us examine three answers.

1. "It is 'for the remission of sins'—and is always essential to salvation, or pardon."

We answer, It is so mentioned but once; and that to persons situated as none ever were before or since. Preaching in Jerusalem, where Jesus had been murdered, to the Jews who were guilty of His blood, just fifty-three days after the event, Peter said, "Repent and be baptized * * * for the remission of sins." Acts, 2:38. Some may answer that "Once is enough to prove the contention." If so, then Christ's command to the "Rich Young Ruler"—"Go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor * * * and come and follow me," Matt. 19:21, is universal and perpetual, which would be absurd!

On the other hand, the first time Peter proclaimed "remission of sins" to Gentiles, in the house of Cornelius, Acts 10:43, he did so in these words: "To Him give all the prophets witness, that through His name, whosoever believeth in Him shall have remission of sins." Accordingly, "While Peter yet spake these words," they not only received the remission of sins, but "the Holy Spirit fell on all them that heard the word." Their baptism with water came later. And this is in harmony with the whole tenor of the Gospel.

2. "It is to represent the burial and resurrection of Christ."

We have shown in a former paper that it does no such thing. The contention is based on Romans 6:4, which refers to the burial of our carnal nature, by a "baptism into death."

Observe, that Christ once called His own death a baptism. To James and John, who wanted the chief places in His kingdom, He said: "Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?" Matt. 20:22. Neither affusion nor immersion is remotely suggested by the manner of Christ's death; though, figuratively, it might suggest a purifying, since, in Heb. 2:10, we are told that the Captain of our salvation was made "perfect through sufferings." Observe, also, that the carnal nature which is buried in the Death-Baptism, mentioned in Rom. 6:4, is never raised up! See verse 16, "Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with Him, that the body of sin might be destroyed." What is buried is left buried!

3. The third and correct answer, is twofold.

(1) "Baptism is the token of the Covenant of Redemption—just as Circumcision was before Christ came."

Paul distinctly calls it "the circumcision of Christ," Col. 2:11-12, "Putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ: buried with Him in baptism."

(2) "It is a Symbol of Holy Ghost baptism, and typifies His work of regeneration."

Note how it is associated with the work of the Holy Spirit. Matt. 3:11, "I indeed baptize you with water * * * but He that cometh after me * * * shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost." Acts 1:5, "For John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost, not many days hence." See also Acts 11:16, "Then remembered I the Word of the Lord, how that He said, John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost."

The two stand related as the Type and the Antitype. John gives the shadow; Christ the substance! John shows the figure; Christ bestows the reality! John administers the ceremonial cleansing; Christ administers the real cleansing!

Peter calls it "the answer of a good conscience toward God." I Pet. 3:21, "The like figure whereunto, even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God.)". Observe, he calls it a "figure." This passage is obscure, both in the Authorized Version and the Revised: but it clearly means at least this: that Baptism is a "figure," likeness, or symbol—not of the burial of Christ, but of a divine work which takes place in the heart, or "conscience," of the believer.

Oakdale, La.

THE PRIMACY OF THE PASTORATE.

By Rev. O. E. Goddard, D. D.

It is the easiest matter in the world for the conventions of men to go counter to the Divine plan, even when they are actuated by the holiest motives. Rudyard Kipling was right when he said that one of the greatest difficulties with the human mind was its inability to classify, to keep primary things as primary and secondary things as secondary. The world has had endless trouble because there has always been and is now a tendency to push secondary matters up into the realm of primary, and vice versa. The church being in the world, and a part of it, has likewise suffered much from this same trouble.

No fixed form of church government having been prescribed in the New Testament, each church has enjoyed considerable latitude in matters of government. It is a waste of time to argue whether the episcopal, presbyterial or independent form of government is found in the New Testament. No one of them is found in its modern developed form. Embryonic elements of each may be discovered in the primitive church. So long as a church does not contravene manifest fundamental principles in its government, no one has a Scriptural right to interpose an objection.

With many of us, perhaps all who read this article, the episcopal form of government as followed by the Episcopal Methodists in the United States seems the most feasible, practical, and efficient. That changes will have to be made with the passing of the years to readjust our polity to meet the new and changing needs no one will deny. That can be done without radical legislation of revolutionary measures. Methodism has always had flexibility enough to do that. She is alert for hurtful tendencies and tries to abolish them or so modify our polity that the hurtful influences may be counteracted.

It is one of these hurtful tendencies that has provoked the writer to pen these lines. Our church has grown immensely in these later years and bids fair to grow more rapidly with the passing of the years. This inevitably entails the multiplying of machinery. We naturally create boards and commissions galore. Our schools multiply and we have to have more college presidents. There is an increased demand for literature and editors are more and more in demand. Thus it goes. We now have hundreds of men who are holding these jobs whose duty is largely administrative. As the church grows larger these jobs become more and more numerous.

How has it come to pass that being a secretary, a commissioner, an editor, or college president, is regarded as more honorable than being a pastor? Why should a man consider that he has been promoted when he is called from the pastorate to be a secretary of a Board. Why is there a yearning to get into these jobs? How can a man called of God to preach reconcile his conscience to taking a job whose primary function is administration? He does it because he regards the voice of his church as the voice of God, we are told. Then the church should be exceedingly careful that its voice is the voice of God. Its polity should be such that its plans will not contravene the Divine plan. So many men are in these jobs to-day that I have begun to question whether we have a right to assume that the voice of the church is always the voice of God. Why should secretaries, commissioners, editors, college presidents be preachers? It has been demonstrated that laymen can fill these jobs quite as efficiently as preachers. That great unused asset, the layman, could be used in hundreds of places now being occupied by men called to preach. We have a Scriptural precedent for putting laymen in these places. Acts VI. 1-4: "Now in these days, when the number of disciples was multiplying, there arose a murmuring of the Grecian Jews against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the daily administration. 2. And the twelve called the multitude of the disciples unto them, and said, It is not fit that we shoul forsake the word of God, and serve tables. 3. Look ye out, therefore, brethren, from among you seven men of good report, full of the spirit and of wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business. 4. But we will continue steadfastly in prayer, and in the ministry of the word." Here was a commission to be formed and the preachers were not clamorous to be appointed commissioners. They said, "We will give ourselves continually to prayer and to the ministry of the word." Such was their conception of the ministry and such should be ours to-day. It would take no radical change in our economy to fill all these places with laymen. There are only two places outside the pastorate that could not be filled by a layman: the presiding eldership and the episcopacy. The presiding elder is the chief pastor in his district. He has some very definite pastoral functions. The bishop is the chief pastor in his episcopal district. He has some very definite pastoral functions among the preachers and officials in his district. Hence putting a man in the eldership or into the episcopacy is not really taking him out of the pastorate. The general evangelist is a pastor at large. He has very definite pastoral functions. The writer raises the serious question whether we ought as a church to keep on creating jobs and depleting our ministry by filling these places with pastors. Laymen could fill most of the places more efficiently than preachers. Let us gradually change our polity so that all these places can be filled by laymen and let men called of God to preach give themselves continually to prayer and the ministry of the word. This plan has Biblical precedent in its favor and is backed by good common sense. This will enable the church to say with ever increasing emphasis that the pastorate is the highest, holiest and divinest place in the church. If there is an obsession among us for secretaryships, editorships, commissionerships, or any other "ship" than the pastorate, this policy would have a cooling effect upon "ambitious men." Men called of God to preach should have but one ambition, that is to preach Jesus Christ in the most effective way possible. This should be his day visions and his night dreams. It should be the consuming passion of his life. It would enable the church to abolish the misconception that getting into one of the "ships" is a promotion. The care of souls is more important than the administration of Boards. To deal directly and personally with immortal souls is the most delicate and most important work committed to man. To feed the flock over which the Holy Ghost has made us overseers is the acme of human responsibility and human opportunity. In so far as it is needed, our views need recasting until there shall be no question about the primacy of the pastorate.

Nashville, Tenn.

WHO KEEPS THEIR HISTORY?

Rev. Felix Grundy Hocutt.

By Payton A. Sowell.

Mr. Editor: Your beautiful "Personal" of Rev. Felix Grundy Hocutt, in the New Orleans Advocate, stirred an appreciation in me.

When once a man becomes a bishop, or a "great" man in some sphere, there are many pens to write of him. But by whom and how are the names and merits of the "obscure" and "quiet" toilers to be known?

For instance, in the past winter, from a parsonage in a suburb of New Orleans, there went away a noble soul out of a heroic and magnificent body when Rev. J. D. Harper laid down the great tasks of life. Who is to draw his likeness for the generations that are to follow, and in what gallery will it hang?

Eighty-nine years ago there was born in the midst of a plain, reliable, religious family, in one of the rural, obscure sections of Alabama, a boy, whom his father named Felix Grundy for a popular politician, and he inherited the name of Hocutt. This boy walked in the fields and woods, and as he gazed on the sun, the moon and the stars, there grew into tenderness and strength a faith that believed "God created the heavens and earth."

The chiefest asset that came to his young life was a religious, devout, believing, praying mother. Her benign influence remains with the man of eighty-nine, as it was with the country boy of Alabama.

There were a group of brothers and sisters that grew up together, and sat on the "stoop" of that humble home, in hearing of the roar of the wheel of the old mill on the creek—the mill was owned and "tended" by his father.

These children were won by their mother and the circuit riders to "profess" religion early in life.

In the dawning of the '60's, perhaps four of these brothers followed "The flag that was furled." One of them sleeps near Richmond, Va., one at "Stones River," Rutherford County, Tennessee. They fell with their faces to their "foes." Perhaps another also sleeps far away from the "old Alabama house," in a soldier's solitary grave. The "Stars and Bars" had no steadier, truer followers than those sons, who were kissed and prayed for when they left for the camps and marches by the mother of the Hocutt sons. In the prayer meetings of the camps, while the pine knots flared, or the moon bent over them, Felix Grundy Hocutt sang and prayed, and led his young comrades to Christ. Many times, scores were converted at night, slept for a few hours on their blankets, and they fell in battle the next day.

When peace came, Felix Grundy Hocutt was licensed to preach in Alabama—57 years ago. In the years immediately following the "War between the States," awful conditions prevailed in many sections. In Winston County, Alabama, a certain family lived who had suffered by the killing of several brothers, and, being persuaded that Felix Grundy Hocutt was in some way responsible for the deed, they decided to kill him. A Baptist preacher informed him of their purpose to kill young Hocutt. He could not, although absolutely innocent, having never been in that County, convince them of his innocence; he could not "fight," to defend himself, that would be to involve his parents in the awful danger. So this young soldier and local preacher kissed his mother good bye, and, moneyless, he rode into North Mississippi. There he cut cord wood, taught school, studied law and was licensed as a lawyer, dealt in real estate, and began a life of success. In 1871 his presiding elder carried his name before the North Mississippi Conference, and he was admitted on trial—and traveled for two years Deer Creek circuit, at once turning away from a business career.

Then he transferred to the Louisiana Conference, stood his examinations, and was received into full connection.

He served, perhaps eight circuits, two or three stations—twice having charges in the city of New Orleans—and was four years presiding elder on the Alexandria District.

Twenty years ago, with but a scanty estate, he supernannuated and with his good wife, who was a Miss Bryan, he moved to "Seashore," Biloxi—to fight for bread with broken health, having served 31 years in the active ministry. A few years ago, his wife bade him good-bye, and "went on" before. Without complaining, he patiently took up the tasks alone, and has journeyed on.

He helped thousands of soldiers to seek Jesus; he has perhaps been the instrument to lead 2000 to Christ in the 51 years of his itinerancy, and has baptized a thousand children.

What he has, he worked and made since retiring, after giving 31 years to poor, hard circuits and missions—to reach one of these he had to go 300 miles, when assigned to it, and did not have a cent with which to begin the journey. He has given all of it to the cause of Church Extension. He receives only a small income. He loves the services of the house of God. His gray hair is before the preacher's eyes every Sunday, when he is able to go. He has only "good things to say of God." He is looking across the River, where he expects to meet his mother, his brave brothers, his good wife, and the saved! Shall such a hero have handed to him only a pittance at 89 years of age—by a church he has served 51 years?

TWO KINDS OF ORTHODOXY.

There is an orthodoxy of ignorance and an orthodoxy of intelligence. The orthodoxy of ignorance is grounded on prejudice, an innate conservatism, and strong aversion to change This kind makes no investigation, gathers no facts, weighs no evidence, thinks nothing through. But the orthodoxy of intelligence is not after this kind. It has nothing to do with the grotesque and childish conceptions of the uninformed. It is based on careful investigation and due appraisement of evidence. It is the result of thought. It has been attained after consideration and rejection of vagaries and unsupported theories of bold but badly balanced men. It is the deliberate conviction of honest minds after painstaking search after the truth.

Failure to discriminate between these two kinds of orthodoxy has lead to much error. Some delight to characterize all orthodoxy as the product of childishness and ignorance. It is a favorite trick of a controversialist to misrepresent the position of his opponent. Men of straw are much more easily demolished than men of blood and brain. The intelligently orthodox do not hold the foolish misconceptions of the ignorant any more than the most learned of the critics. To attack the orthodoxy of the ignorant does not touch the strongholds of the intelligent We insist upon the distinction.—Central Methodist.

REPORT OF THE GENERAL HOSPITAL BOARD TO THE ANNUAL CONFERENCES.

The General Conference, at its recent session in Hot Springs, Ark., took the following action with reference to the establishment of a General Hospital Board:

First: That there shall he created a General Hospital Board of nine memhers, to he nominated by the College of Bishops and elected hy the General Conference.

Second: That the General Hospital Board hc empowered to study the hospital situation in the Church, to provide a literature, and to devise plans for the promotion of the hospital enterprises and to assist in building and financing hospitals in various communities throughout our connection.

Third: That the Board meet as early as practicable and elect the usual officers, including a General Secretary.

Fourth: That this General Conference appropriate the sum of $12,500 annually for four yeears to carry on the work of the Board.

Fifth: That the Board be empowered to select headquarters, procure a charter and make any additional plans necessary to the permanent and continuous work of the Board.

The Conference also adopted the following with reference to the organization of Golden Cross Societies:

We have before us a memorial from a meeting in Dallas of delegates to the General Conference and others from five Annual Conferences in Texas and the Los Angeles Conference, asking for the organization of the Golden Cross Society as an auxiliary to the Board of Hospitals created as per our report No. 1.

This Golden Cross Society is to be based on the plan of annual memherships as operated by the Red Cross, the Salvation Army and others, for the purpose of interesting the entire membership of our Church in the work of building and sustaining hospitals and in raising funds annually under the direction of the Hospital Board.

The Hospital Board has been duly chartered under the laws of the State of Georgia, and its office has heen established in room 416, Wesley Memorial Building.

During the first year of its operation the General Hospital Board desires to secure at least two general results:

1. That each Annual Conference will organize a Conference Hospital Board, and

2. That the Conference Hospital Boards assist the General Board in the organization of Golden Cross Societies throughout the entire connection of our beloved Church.

The Protestant Churches have left the work of hospitals too long in the hands of Roman Catholicism and secular authorities. Now there is a general movement among many of the Protestant Churches to correct this failure.

Our Church must not be behind the foremost in this matter. Already we have great hospitals in St. Louis and in Atlanta, and there are movements on foot to establish hospitals in two of the cities of Texas, at Memphis and at other points in the Church.

It is hoped that the General Hospital Board will be able to promote all the hospital enterprises of our Church and to this end the co-operation of the Annual Conferences is earnestly requested.

In the Episcopal Address to the General Conferences, the Bishops said:

"It is to our sore discredit that with more than two millions of members distrihuted over one of the most prosperous sections of the world, we have but few hospitals worthy of the name in this day of advancement in the healing and surgical arts."

Enlarging upon this suggestion to the Bishops, Bishop Atkins in an address to the General Conference, spoke wisely when he said:

"Brethren, we have been very late in properly interpreting the doctrine and doing of our Lord on this subject. I shall presently have to announce a Committee on Hospitals, which you ordered yesterday, requiring the Bishops to appoint it; and that they have done. In that connection I would only say that we have lingered long along the way. We have allowed Roman Catholicism with its abundant hospitals and nurses to do for that ecclesiasticism what it was ours to have done for a hetter, purer, higher, more spiritual ecclesiasticism. We have lingered too long in the way. Living in the midst of a population of more than two millions of members and twenty-five million people in sympathy with us, in a country prosperous heyond all other countries, we have neglected our sick and have not as a communion availed ourselves of what modern advance in medicine and surgery has made available for the relief and the life of our people."

This wise suggestion should command the attention of the entire Church and elicit ardent zeal on behalf of this great philanthropic enterprise.

On hehalf of the General Hospital Board, I respectfully request that this communication he referred to a special committee hy your Conference, who will give the matters therein most careful consideration and recommend to your adoption wise action appropriate thereto.

Wishing for you a plcasant and profitahlc session, I am,

Yours very truly,
WARREN A. CANDLER,
Chairman.

THE CHURCH HOUSE.

By Bishop W. F. McMurry.

"The building of church houses is the perennial task of the denomination. It is vitally related to the progress of both the church and the kingdom of Christ. Christianity cannot advance without material equipment. The church can advance only as its huildings and other equipment make advancement possible. The pastor or congregation that builds an adequate temple of worship, where God's name is exalted, souls are saved, and Christian character developed, has made a permanent and growing contribution to Christ's kingdom."

The ahove is from an editorial in the Religious Telescope, the official organ of the church of the United Brethren in Christ. Dr. Phillippi has stated a great truth very strongly.

But our responsihility does not end with the huilding of the house. The proper care of church property—church and parsonage—is also vital to the progress of the kingdom. How any preacher or congregation can he content to use a church house that is out of repair, or a neglected and delapidated parsonage, I cannot understand. Such neglected properties speak of sloth, indifference and lack of zeal. The physical condition of church property proclaims louder than we have been accustomed to think, the efficiency of the preacher and the spiritual condition of the congregation.

As we approach the close of the Conference year, would it not he well to "Set the house in order," that it may he ready for our return—or for our successor?

THE WESLEYAN METHODIST CONFERENCE.

The New President and Other Items of Interest.

By Rev. F. B. Hill.

Never, surely, was there a Conference so crowded with important husiness and suhjects as the one that assembled at Sheffield on July 19. In the choice of president for the coming year, there was a tinge of sadness, for the president-elect, Rev. Wm. Goudie, died on Palm Sunday of this year. He was a man very highly esteemed in Methodism, whose great passion was to place upon the brow of his Lord the crown of a conquered world. The Rev. John Wakerley was duly elected to this high honor. Born in 1858, converted at the age of thirteen at a week-night service, he preached his first sermon at the age of sixteen and a half years and became a candidate for the ministry when twenty-one years old. He was sent to the Theological College for four years, then appointed as an extra man to Nottingham. After traveling eight years he was selected to help in the London Mission with Rev. W. D. Walters. But his crowning work was the East Ham London Mission, sent there in 1904. The church became too small, so he secured the town hall. He formed a Men's Brotherhood which, when he left, had a membership of 1700, and a Sunday school of 1700; six hundred was the average number of communicants at the Lord's Table. He is very much beloved by the working man, and is a good judge of men. He is the big brother and friend of all his people. During his year of office he may be expected to give a lead in evangelism and to promote revival in all the churches. Last year the president gave much of his time to educating the churches on Temperance; this year the slogan will he, "Evangelism," for a revival of religion has begun and wonderful reports are coming in from all quarters.

The Conference which has now closed will be memorable for the decisive vote given on Methodist Union. With 464 for and 60 against the question of union with other branches of the Methodist Church, the question is to be sent down to every quarterly meeting and trustee meeting hy January, for full consideration and decision, and the final vote on Methodist union shall not he taken until after the Conference of 1923, believing "that there are no ohstacles to Methodist union which with good-will cannot be overcome."

Ponchatoula, La.

GRIND THAT BLADE.

By Rev. R. H. Bennett, D.D.

You are possihly one of the five thousand, four hundred volunteers for Christian Life Service who have aswered "Here" in recent months to our churches' roll call for recruits. And no doubt you are tugging at the leash, straining upon the start and impatient to be off. Out there before you lies life with its winsome lure to youth. You feel that you must get into the game. The pitiful needs of a sick world stir your soul and the holy impulse to which you have yielded urges you at once to the chosen task.

This impulse does high credit to your heart. But one's life must have the guidance of head as well as of heart. And more and more the conditions of life demand trained workers. You do not wish to find later on that as officer and leader in the army your information is outclassed by those you are set to lead. Think of a physician called to prescribe for a patient hopering between life and death, and himself innocent of proper knowledge of his materia medica, or a lawyer who had not read his Blackstone trying to plead great issues in court, or a druggist reaching on the shelf for a remedy without being ahle to tell bluestone from cyanide of potassium, or a man setting up for an electrical engineer who could not tell an ampere from a Bartlett pear until he touched the wrong wire and never had any use for either on this planet.

It may even he possible that some one here or there, if he is a student for the ministry, is thinking like one of my college mates, who said he was tired of studying, so he believed he would quit college and join the Conference. This state of mind is by no means confined to students for the ministry. But any successful man will testify that such expected relief is imaginary and that the prohlems of school days are far outclassed by those of mature life.

It is said that during Dr. William A. Smith's presidency of Randolph-Macon College a "Bib. Lit." (i. e. ministerial student) came to him in great concern and said: "Doctor, the world is perishing. I cannot spend any more time here on books. I must go out and save it." The old Doctor said with a twinkle in his eye, "I'll tell what I'll do. I'll make this bargain with you: I will agree to go out every Sunday and preach in your place until you finish your education."

Any harvester knows that when he stops to whet his hlade, or even to put it on the grindstone, he is not losing time, but saving it, and that he can thus double or treble the amount of his daily work.

Now, do not go rushing into life's harvest field and try to whack away with that old dull blade of yours. There is probably good steel in it, but it lacks an edge. In its present condition it will knock down as much wheat as it cuts. Put it on the grindstone of a college course, and then add the whetstone of a seminary or university or professional course, and you can multiply many fold the sheaves to your credit in the harvest home. Get ready to live a full and victorious life, and not one handicapped at the start by incompetency.

Maybe there is a vision in blue or pink that you have beheld and to which you have surrendered, or a youth good to behold, who has been drawing rose-colored pictures to you of a vine-clad cottage with four feet on the fender in it. You are afraid perchance that the party of the second part will not wait for you to finish your college studies. Yes, they will, if they are worth while. And, if they will not, you will be fortunately delivered, as hard as it is to believe it now. Wait until you are a full-fledged apostle, and then you can "Lead about a wife." But do not force that dear little woman to try to subsist with you on a "calf pasture," so-called perhaps because the grazing is too short there to support a full grown couple, and where the people will half-starve you physically, while you half-starve them mentally.

All of which means, set your mind irrevocably to go to college this fall. Those of us who are now in the field will try to hold things down as best we can until you get your preparation. Yes, you can go to college. The will is half the way. A young boy walked forty miles over the mountains to a college leading a calf by a rope—his sole asset—and, figuratively speaking, rode that calf through a successful college course. One of our college presidents showed me a little two-room cottage on his campus which he gave free of rent to three boys who entered college with five dollars between them. They worked their way through school, and are now leading full and useful lives.

Write to the president of your Conference college for information and get ready to put your blade on the college grindstone this fall. That way lies a life of power.

And parent, pastor, presiding elder, friend, help him or her so to do.

HENRY FORD'S RELIGIOUS VIEWS.

By Albert Sidney Gregg.

Henry Ford is now a member of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, where he attends services with his family. His father, William Ford, was warden of the Protestant Episcopal Church at Dearborn, Mich., in which Henry was confirmed. As a boy, Mr. Ford went to Sunday school and learned the catechism. As a man, he is a reader of the Bible. There is a Bible in nearly every room in his splendid home at Dearborn, and it is noteworthy that they are not covered with dust or cobwebs.

During repeated talks with Mr. Ford on various subjects, I have had unusual opportunities to ask him intimate questions about his religious views and personal habits. And he has always replied without the least hesitation.

On one occasion I paved the way for some very pertinent inquiries by saying:

"Mr. Ford, some of my friends have been asking questions about you which I am unable to answer. I hope you will not take offense if I pass them on to you."

"Go ahead," he responded, with a genial flash of his blue eyes.

"In the first place, have you ever used intoxicants?"

"Not a drop. I believe in letting the stuff alone."

"Did you ever use tobacco?"

"Yes; I once took a chew about that big," he responded, indicating the end of his thumb, "and that was enough for a life-time."

"In the matter of religion, you know that prayer is the acid test," I continued. "What do you think about prayer?"

"We all pray in one way or another, but there is only one prayer that any man needs to make. Obtain an answer to that prayer, and you get everything."

"Yes, and I think I can name the prayer you have in mind. You mean Solomon's prayer for wisdom when he became king?"

A smile lighted up his face, as he nodded in the affirmative. "You are right," he responded. "The principal thing in life is to get understanding."

"What about creeds?"

"All of them are included in the Sermon on the Mount."

"What is the best way to express religion?"

"Service," was the quick reply. "Help to make the conditions better, so others may become prosperous and happy. It is good religion and good business to put service first. After all, what else is there in life that is worth while? There is no real satisfaction in merely piling up a lot of money or in gaining honor or power. My test of every proposition that is presented to me is, 'What good will it do?' If I can't see where it will benefit somebody, I don't waste any time on it."

This interview took place on the day that Mr. Ford had decided to bid $8,000,000 for the Lincoln Motor Car Company.

"There is the Lincoln Motor!" he exclaimed. "I do not need that concern, but I am going to buy it to save it from being wrecked. That's an instance of the Sermon on the Mount. Muscle Shoals is another one. Of course it looks like a business matter and nothing more, but I don't need the Shoals. All I want with that undertaking is to show how water-power can be used to make the people more prosperous. Electricity generated by water that is now going to waste can be made to revolutionize life on the farm and in the cities. My method is to express my religious convictions through constructive industries—to create more opportunities for profitable employment. Some people do not associate such activities with religion, but to my mind the very essence of religion is to create better living conditions. My reason for advocating currency based on property in place of on gold is that the use of such a currency will stimulate industry and promote the prosperity of all the people.'

"What is your idea about giving money for charity?"

"My plan is to do away with the need of charity as it is commonly understood. For instance, I once came across some Indians in Canada who were struggling along with poor equipment for their farming activities. Their minister asked me for a tractor, and I decided to help them. But first I had some of their young men come here and learn how to operate a tractor. Then I gave them a complete outfit of farming implements. That was much better than giving them cash. By furnishing them with the tools, I helped them to work out their own problems."

"What do you think the ministers ought to preach in these days?"

"They should preach from the Sermon on the Mount. We should have a wonderful world, if the people would all practice the teachings in that sermon."

"If a young man should ask for your views about entering the ministry, what would you say to him?"

"Of course, a good deal would depend on the young man. A short time ago I advised a young man to consider the church as a field for service, and told him that the immediate future would be a period of great usefulness for the Christian ministry."

When Mr. Ford bought the D. T. & I. Railroad, running from Detroit to Ironton, Ohio, he stopped the Sunday trains, established an eight-hour day, and increased the pay of the men. Speaking of the effect of his order to end Sunday work, Mr. Ford said to the writer:

"One of the most ingenious attempts to induce me to allow Sunday traffic came from an orphanage in Columbus. They begged me to take the children out into the country on Sunday, but I refused. I told them I was unable to see any good reason why they could not have their excursion on Saturday."

Mr. Ford himself does not travel on Sunday if he can possibly avoid it. On Sunday afternoons he generally rides about his five-thousand-acre estate in a Ford coupe, and chats with the "neighbors" who look after his farm.

The $5,000,000 Ford Hospital in Detroit is the only outstanding public service institution that bears his name, but it is not a "charity." The Ford trade school is self-supporting, and so is his moving picture laboratory for making educational films. Mr. Ford spent over $10,000 in fighting cigarettes a few years ago, mostly by printing and circulating a little booklet called "The Little White Slaver," in which Thomas A. Edison set forth the evil effects of cigarette-smoking upon the human body. He is also propagating certain ideas for human welfare work through his paper, The Dearborn Independent.

His objective, as inspired by his religious ideals, seems to be to create an "industrial millennium" in which each individual will have the largest possible opportunity for self-development, achievement, and happiness.—Exchange.

THE METHODISTS IN ROME.

By Rev. John W. Maynard.

Rome is everywhere known as having been built on seven hills. There is, lying just to the north of the city, another hill that, because of its association with the Methodist Episcopal Church in Italy, has of late attracted no little attention. It is Monte Mario, the highest of all the hills in the vicinity of Rome.

A plot of nearly fifty acres on the slopes and summit of this hill has been recently purchased by the Methodist Episcopal Church. The purpose in securing this site is to furnish accommodations and equipment for the increasingly large number of boys who wish to avail themselves of the privileges offered in the church's educational institutions.

In October, 1921, the Methodist College for boys, long established, and located at the church's Central Building in Rome, was transferred to Monte Mario. Buildings already standing on the property when purchased are being utilized for this purpose. Already ground has been broken for some of the buildings projected, and it is hoped that in the near future it will be able to accommodate fifteen hundred pupils. Among the boys now being educated in the College are some from Montenegro and Albania, in itself a prophecy of the time when the "College Internazionale Monte Mario" will be educating boys from all parts of the Latin world.

Not only in Italy, but elsewhere throughout Southern Europe, there are multitudes of young men alienated from the Church of Rome, and so without any religious influence whatsoever. These are, many of them, drifting into materialism. The prevailing attitude toward religion is that of indifference. It is to help counteract this tendency and in the hopes of reaching some thus alienated, that the Methodist Episcopal Church is laboring in Italy. A crying need of Protestantism in Europe is for leaders. It is the purpose of the College Monte Mario to help educate the youth of Italy and of neighboring states for such leadership—the leadership of the Protestant forces of Southern Europe.—Christian Herald.

TO THE PRESIDING ELDERS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren: I can take care of one young preacher, who really wants to prepare for the ministry at Millsaps College, with my Educational Pledge. If you have a young preacher, preferably on trial, who is in earnest and will apply himself and make good and cannot go to college without assistance. I shall be glad to be put in touch with him.

I will have $270 per year available for this purpose. Of course this will send only one, but the time is short and I am writing to all of you that I might pick the most promising prospect.

Please write all particulars. Your brother,

Columbia, Miss. L. L. ROBERTS.

OPEN THE DOOR.

Open the door, let in the air;
The winds are sweet and the flowers are fair.
Joy is abroad in the world to-day;
If our door is wide it may come this way.
Open the door!

Open the door, let in the sun;
He hath a smile for every one.
He hath made of the raindrops gold and gems.
He may change our tears to diadems.
Open the door!

Open the door of the soul; let in Strong, pure thoughts which shall banish sin.
They will grow and bloom with grace divine,
And their fruit shall be sweeter than that of the vine.
Open the door!

Open the door of the heart; let in Sympathy sweet for stranger and kin.
It will make the halls of the heart so fair
That angels may enter unaware.
Open the door!

THE GREEN CAT.

On the very first warm, sunny day of the year the postman brought little Anne Mason a letter. Dicky Brent, her next-door neighbor, was there when the letter arrived.

"It's from Aunt Lucy!" cried Anne joyfully. "She always writes on a typewriter."

Dicky remembered Anne's pretty young aunt who had several times driven out in her car to see the little girl.

The two children took the letter in to Anne's mother. It turned out to be a very puzzling letter.

Aunt Lucy was going away on a long journey, she said. That was easy enough to understand. "And I am going to send you my little green cat to stay at your house while I am gone." Aunt Lucy had written that too. And what could it mean?

"Her little green cat-" exclaimed mother.

"Why, Lucy never owned a cat in her life."

"She would hardly own a green cat anyway," observed father, who had been listening.

"Who ever heard of a green cat?" scoffed Dicky. "I never did—not even in a circus."

"She says we must make it work for us," mother went on. "What a strange way to speak of a cat!"

But Anne was determined to make the best of things. "Well," she said, "Malta and Fluff are pretty lazy, you know, and there are lots of mice. I think it will be fine to have a new cat."

"Not a freak cat"—begn Dicky, but mother interrupted.

"Oh, here's a postscript on the last sheet. Luey says, 'Your daddy will know how to attend to it. Tell him to call at 105 Broad Street and get it the next time he is in town.'"

Father seemed rather red in the face. "Well, upon my word!" he said. "What's come over Lucy, I should like to know?"

"There's something queer about this," mother said. "Well, when you go to town on Thursday with Dick's father you can clear up the mystery. I suppose Luey meant to say white cat or black cat, of course."

"Broad Street is a business street," father went on grumbling. "I shouldn't think she'd leave a cat of any color there."

All that morning Dicky chuckled about the green cat that was coming.

But Anne took the matter very seriously. "It must be a strange bluish-gray, and Aunt Lucy just calls it green," she said. "Oh, I'm crazy to see it! I wish Thursday would come."

At the breakfast table on Thursday father said, "Look here, Anne, don't you want to go up town with me and help bring home that everlasting cat?"

Anne was delighted, of course. What could be pleasanter than to go to town in Mr. Brent's car and bring a green cat home?

That afternoon Dicky, full of curiosity, watched impatiently for her return. When he saw his father's car coming he hurried over to the Mason's yard. When the car drew up at the gate there was little Anne, sitting very straight on the front seat beside Dicky's father. Her own father was nowhere to be seen.

Anne's eyes were sparkling as she clambered down.

"Where's your father?" Dicky asked. "And where's your Aunt Lucy's green"—

"Coming," said Anne. "Look." She turned and pointed toward a cloud of dust.

Before Dicky could say anything more a second car drew up at the gate. Anne's father, looking very much pleased about something, got out.

Dicky was dazed. "But where's the green cat?" he insisted.

Anne could not keep back her chuckles any longer. "It isn't a green cat; it's a green car," she said. "O Dicky, Aunt Lucy wrote a 't' instead of an 'r.' It was her car that she was talking about; she has had it painted—it's green under all that dust. And she wants us to use it while she's away. Now, isn't that fun?"

Anne's father looked a little uncomfortable. "It wasn't much fun going round inquiring for a green cat. However, all's well that ends well."

Malta and Fluff came down the walk and rubbed, purring, against Anne's legs.

"See how pleased they are," Anne said. "I do believe they had been dreading that extra cat."

Dicky rubbed his forehead. "Well I'm pleased too," he said. "But I should like to see a green cat, all the same."—Dalsy D. Stephenson, in The Youth's Companion.

"MARY HAD A LITTLE LAMB—"FIRST WORDS OF PHONOGRAPH.

On August 12, 1877, Thomas A. Edison gave John Kruesi, his faithful and able instrument maker, a diagram from which he was to produce the first model of the phonograph.

"In a few days, Kruesi finished his model and laid it on the table of the 'old man,' as Edison was even then called, although he was scarcely thirty years of age. Edison looked the model over to see if his instructions had been carried out. Kruesi stood beside him, curious and amused. He watched the 'old man' turn the handle—a test of the machine's free turning ability. He saw him take a sheet of tin-foil, wrap it around the cylinder, and fasten it with a strip of lead laid in a groove cut for that purpose. By this time the entire laboratory staff had gathered around the table, watching the proceedings with ever increasing interest and offering facetious advice.

"Edison calmly proceeded to adust the turning mouthpiece. Then he turned the cylinder by means of the crank, and shouted into the mouthpiece:

'Mary had a little lamb,
It's fleece was white as snow,
And everywhere that Mary went
The lamb was sure to go.'

"The fateful moment had arrived! Edison saw that there were indentations on the tinfoil. He expected to reproduce only an encouraging fragment of a word here and there, or to obtain a few recognizable squeaks, at best—something to show that at least he was on the right track. Amid the joking and laughing of his men, he turned back the cylinder, adjusted the reproducing diaphragm, and once more rotated the cylinder. Back from the tin foil came a thin small voice:

'Mary had a little lamb—'

"Not a word was missing! The phonograph was born!

"Amusement, laughter, incredulity gave place to an awe-stricken, intense silence. Then the wonder of it dawned on Kruesi and the rest. Edison himself was amazed. A new strip of tinfoil was put on the cylinder. Again, perfect reproduction.

"Now the reaction set in, and the men joined hands and sang and danced around Edison. It was a memorable day— and night also—at Menlo Park laboratory, for the entire staff stayed until dawn, taking turns at speaking, singing, laughing, and whistling into this first crude little phonograph and listening to their own voices with childish delight and enthusiasm."—St. Nicholas.

DIRECTIONS.

All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Printed Lab.l on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after three or four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.

Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

AFTER VACATION.

It is altogether probabie that many of our churches have reiaxed their activities somewhat during the summer, whiie pastors and memhers, so far as has been practicable, have enjoyed their vacations. Vacations are good things, and it is not to be wondered at if the church, aiong with othcr organizations, lightens its labors just a little during the hot months of summer.

But in most cases, vacation is over now. The summer trips have heen made, the vacation sports have been enjoyed—and in some cases at least, the exchequer is empty. It is time to go to work again. Business is "picking up," and the hum of the wheels of industry will soon be heard throughout the land.

It is time now to get the work of the church moving smoothly again. The vacation period should not have resulted in a general demoralization; rather, it should have prepared all the people—preachers and laymen—for more active service with the coming of fall. There is much to be done.

For one thing, the hahit of church-going should be re-established as promptly as possihle. It is very easy for those who have been away from home, where no church was conveniently near, perhaps, to fall into the habit of staying away from religious services on Sunday; and it may be just a littie harder than usual, upon return home, to get back into the regular habit of church attendance. It is dangerously easy to fall away from the church.

Then, too, the Sunday school should be brought as quickly as possihle hack to its normal size and its reguiar activities. We wish all pastors, superintendents, and teachers could realize what an important organization they are directing in the Sunday school. So far as we know, there is no other agency that means more for the advancement of the kingdom of God. The Sunday school is the greatest evangelistic movement of the church, and it deserves a great deal more attention than it is receiving in many places. Rally Day for the Sunday schcol shouid be held as early as practicable after the vacation season, in order that this great department of the church may function as effectively as possihle.

In many cases, a special evangelistic campaign would be very effective in the early fall months. At any rate, there should be diligent effort made to enlist as many people as possible in the service of the church. A community survey would be a very fine thing for some churches to undertake at this time.

It is not too early to put into operation the plans for bringing all financial obligations of the church up in full. It is almost a tragedy that so many churches year after year report a deficit in their finances. We believe that these deficits are unnecessary in practically all cases—once in awhile unusual circumstances may make it impossihle to pay in full. If the matter is taken hold of in time, if business-like methods are used, if the moral obligation of supporting the church and its institutions is properly laid upon the people, the assessments can be paid in fuil.

Vacation is ahout over—for those who have had one; let us all get back to work.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Mrs. F. B. Hill, wife of our pastor at Ponchatoula, La., is spending a few weeks during August at Asheville, N. C.

According to an exchange, the Methodist Episcopal Church has 53,710 students in its 114 educationai institutions.

Rev. E. D. Simpson, writing from Oak Ridge, Miss., says: "We are happy among these fine people in Warren County."

We greatly enjoyed a visit on Tuesday of iast week from Rev. Payton A. Soweli, who is spending the summer at the Seashore Camp Grounds.

Dr. John Paul, for the past five years vice president of Ashury Coliege, Wiimore, Ky., has heen elected president of Taylor University, Upland, Indiana.

We learn from "Methodist Matters" that Rev. Del Longgrear, our pastor at Coahoma, Miss., was recentiy confined to his hed for several days with an attack of hiood poisoning.

The annual picnic of the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage was held, so we are informed, on Wednesday of this week. This is a great event to the children of the Orphanage.

The Okiahoma Methodist of August 3 was a special number that reflected great credit upon its enterprising editor, Dr. D. H. Aston. By the way, Dr. Aston was once a student of Miiisaps Coliege.

Rev. J. S. Maxey, of the Tie Piant charge, North Mississippi Conference, writes that his work is moving along niceiy. He reports a gratifying number of additions to the membership of the church.

Mr. C. M. Chalmers, the fine son of the Business Manager of the Advocate, who is an important memher of the Advocate staff, underwent a serious operation for appendicitis on August 8. His recovery has heen rapid, and he is now recuperating at Biioxi, Miss.

Rev. and Mrs. John W. Ramsey, of Laurel, Miss., announce the marriage of their daughter, Lillian, to Mr. Ernest C. Adams, on Sunday, August 13. The young coupie wiil be at home at Oakiand Heights, Meridian, Miss., after August 25. Biessings upon them!

Materials are heing piaced on the ground for the new church at Bogalusa, La., and the spiendid structure wili soon he under process of construction. We congratulate the pastor, Rev. Elmer C. Gunn, and his people upon their success in this great undertaking.

The funeral of the iate Bishop Kilgo was conducted by Bishop W. A. Candler, assisted hy Bishop Collins Denny. Bishop W. F. McMurry, one of the closest friends of Bishop Kilgo, was unable to attend the funeral on account of a Conference engagement.

The Mississippi Conference has made a fine record in the payment of its educational pledges. Under the leadership of Rev. J. M. Morse, the Conference Secretary of Education, it has paid 139 per cent of the first instaiiment. The Conference pledged $575,000, and on June 1 it had paid $160,158.65.

Miss Clara Chalmers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. O. Chalmers, returned to her work in the Irene Toland School, at Matanzas, Cuba, on August 12, after having spent her vacation with her parents. While in New Orleans Miss Chalmers made severai interesting addresses concerning her work in Cuba.

Rev. Leon I. McCain, of Lafayette, La., writes: "We have recently closed one of the best revivals in years at our Abbeville Methodist church. Additionai seats had to be provided again and again to accommodate the crowds. There were ahout 20 conversions, 15 to 20 tithers, several subscriptions to the Advocate."

According to newspaper reports, extensive improvements are heing made at the Seashore Camp Ground School, of which Rev. H. W. Van Hook is president. A new hrick dormitory, to cost $20,000, is to be huiit, and the campus generally is to be heautified. The citizens of Biioxi are co-operating heartily in this forward movement.

Mrs. John W. Chisholm, wife of our pastor at Seguin, Texas, underwent an operation for appendicitis on August 15. She is reported as doing weli after the operation. Brother and Sister Chisholm have many friends in Mississippi, where Brother Chisholm was formerly pastor. Mrs. Chisholm is the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. C. H. Ellis, of Camden, Miss.

Rev. Jno. F. Foster, our pastor at Covington, La., deiivered the first of his series of lectures on the Hoiy Land at McDonoghville on Wednesday evening of last week. He wiil give the second lecture in the near future. Brother Foster also preached at the First Methodist Church of this city on iast Sunday, in the absence of the pastor, Rev. R. H. Harper.

We have received the foiiowing note from Mrs. C. H. Lamb, of Shannon, Miss.: "Rev. R. I. Collins, assisted hy his brother, Rev. R. G. Moore, of Soochow, China, has just closed a great meeting. Brother Coilins is rounding out his four years with us with good revivais at every church. We hope this reaches Brother Dorsey's eye and ear and that he wili let us have Brother Coiiins again."

Under the leadership of the presiding elder, Rev. J. G. Sneiling, a district parsonage has just been bought for the New Orleans District. It is most conveniently located, heing on the corner of Octavia and Garfield Streets, and is splendidly adapted to the purpose for which it was bought. The price paid was $10,000, which is considered to be remarkabiy cheap for such a desirahle piece of property.

The editor wishes to acknowledge the receipt of many kind personal letters, and regrets that, for lack of heip, he cannot always promptly reply. It aids an editor, just as it does any other worker, to get letters of approval and appreciation. There is no end to an editor's work, and he sometimes grows weary and becomes discouraged; hence he needs sympathy and encouragement.—Arkansas Methodist.

It is with great sorrow that we report the death of Mrs. Amelia E. Richards, formerly of Satartia, Miss., hut of recent years making her home with Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Setzler, near Jackson, Miss. Mrs. Richards was an ardent Methodist, a friend of every Methodist preacher, and greatly interested in ali Methodist matters. The editor of the Advocate vaiued her friendship very highly. She died on August 15; interment took place at Vicksburg, Miss.

Judge W. W. Brandon, by what is said to be the largest vote ever given a candidate in that State, has hcen declared the Democratic nominee for the govcrnorship of Alabama, which, of course, is equivalent to elcction. Judge Brandon is a son of the late Dr. Brandon, of the North Alahama Conference, and a brother of Dr. Frank W. Brandon, a prominent member of the North Alabama Conference. He was a member of the recent General Conference.

We have received the followini reports of prayer meeting attendance iast week: Lafayette, L. I. McCain, pastor, 79; Franklin, L. R. Sparks, pastor, 45.

Rev. John T. Sawyer, D.D., preached last Sunday morning at the Louisiana Avenue Methodist Church, the pastor, Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt, being out of the city.

Dr. Chas. W. Crisler, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Baton Rouge, La., will be with Rev. F. B. Hill in a ten days' meeting at Ponchatoula, La., beginning on September 4.

At the prayer meeting held at the Seashore Camp Grounds last Thursday evening there were sixty people in attendance. The service was conducted by the Rev. Mr. Emerson, of Alabama. Rev. J. L. Sutton, superintendent of the Mississippi Child Finding and Home Society, preached at the Camp Grounds iast Sunday morning.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Jackson District, Mississippi Conference, heid a most interesting meeting at Jackson on August 16, presided over by Mrs. T. B. Gaddis. The secretary, Mrs. E. H. Galloway, has furnished us for publication and interesting account of the meeting. It was received too iate for this issue of the Advocate, but it will appear next week.

Bishop W. A. Candler will be in New Orleans on Sunday, October 29, and will preach at one of the churches at the morning service. In the afternoon, he will go to Covington, La., to dedicate the new church at that place, and will preach at the evening service. The movement for the new church was begun during the pastorate of Rev. A. F. Vaughan and carried forward to success during the pastorate of Rev. Lee R. Sparks. Rev. Jno. F. Foster is the present pastor.

A note from Rev. S. J. Davies almost makes us envious. He and his wife, their two daughters, Misses Jane and Mary, and a nephew, Earl Stokes, are camping in the Platt National Park, at Sulphur, Oklahoma, and they intend to stay there until about September 1. Brother Davies says all the good adjectives may be used to describe the scenery, etc., and the time they are having. If he had said the fishing is good out there, we might have become envious—just a iittie bit!

Mrs. H. N. Harrison, wife of the pastor of the Felicity Methodist Church, this city, was shot and painfuiiy wounded by a burglar one night last week. She was awakened by a noise at a nearby neighbor's and going to the porch, she saw several men trying to climb the fence. She called to them and they ran, but one turned and fired several shots at her, one buiiet taking effect in her arm. The poiice became very active in the case and within a day or two had captured the gang of ruffians, one of whom confessed to the shooting. Their cases have not come to trial yet, but it is supposed they will receive a severe penalty—which they certainly deserve. Mrs. Harrison is recovering from the wound.

THANKS TO OUR FRIENDS.

We desire to express our thanks to the following friends who have sent us two or more subscriptions recently: Rev. P. O. Lowrey, Indian Bayou, La., 8; Rev. W. F. Henderson, Jr., Zwolle, La., 2; Rev. J. S. Maxey, Grenada, Miss., 4.

"PESSIMIST" IS AN OVERWORKED EPITHET.

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

People addicted to the indulgences of an era of luxury are impatient with anything which is uncomfortable to the body or disagreeable to the mind. They covet all "modern conveniences" and demand that all things said and done aronnd them shall be pleasing to them. That which is painful they cannot abide.

They are unwilling to hear the truth that is necessary to their well-being unless it is pleasant in form and pleasantly put. If a public teacher points out evil conditions that should be corrected or perilous tendencies that should be arrested, they turn away with pronounced manifestations of disapprobation and characterize him as "a pessimist" and rejoice with exceeding joy that they, more wise, are "optimists." Hereby they indulge a most subtle and seductive self-deiusion.

Genuine optimism proceeds to the good ends at which it aims by facing squarely and fighting manfully the bad things which obstruct the way to the best things. That is a spurious optimism which puts out its own eyes in order that it may not have to look at facts as they are and try to make bad conditions good. It is a blind optimism which would not be optimism at all, if it were not blind.

All the good things we have were won by men who saw the evil things of their day clearly, and combated them courageously.

All the Hebrew prophets, who spoke faithfuily and fearlessly to the people of their times and preserved the truth of God for the blessing of future generations, uttered many painful things. Every one of them would be called a "pessimist" by the easy-going optimists of our day. Indeed, they were censured, persecuted, and killed by the optimists of their own day who accounted them as intolerable troublers of Israel.

Isaiah, who was sawn asunder for his fidelity, found it necessary to denounce a blind and blinding optimism which was prevalent during the wretched reign of the wicked Mannasseh. He said, "Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet and sweet for bitter." (Isaiah V:20). It is the way of such optimism to confuse in this manner all ethical values and thus "debase the morai currency." They consider a faithful prophet as one fit only for execution and esteem faithless sinners, whom he condemns, as worthy of the warmest eulogy. So did they in Isaiah's time, and so do they in our day. He tells us that the blind optimists said then to the seers, "See not; and to the prophets, prophesy not unto us right things, speak unto us smooth things." (Isaiah xxx:10)

But notwithstanding the determination of those ancient optimists to see only pleasant things and to hear only smooth things, all the disasters to the nation foretold by the prophets came to pass. Evil can never be averted by stupidly and obstinately declaring that it is not at hand.

As was Isaiah, so were Jeremiah, Ezekiel. Daniel, Amos, Jonah, and all the rest—all were what men nowadays would call "pessimists." So also was John the Baptist, who lost his head at the bidding of the vile and luxury-loving Herodias.

Luther, Calvin, Knox, Wesley and Jonathan Edwards were all derided and denounced for their pessimism. But if they had dealt with evil less faithfully, the stock of good which we now enjoy would be far less than it is.

And if we are to transmit good to the future, we, too, must proceed to correct the prevalent evil around us.

Every intelligent and candid man must admit that the conditions which have followed the world war are alarming. Licentiousness abounds. Greed grasps for all in sight. Both capital and labor ignore and despise the public good in the pursuit of their selfish ends. God is forgotten, and the word of God brought into contempt. By some who profess to be called to preach the gospel it is corrupted with an evil icaven of unbelief or utterly explained away as being without divine authority. The end of all these things is direst calamity. In the awful world war some calamitious consequences have already come to pass, but without a turning to God the worst is yet to come.

And the disasters of our day will not be confined to the narrow limits of one nation. They will be world-wide. Wherever the carcass of morai corruption is found there will be gathered the devouring eagles of destruction.

But some will say, "God is in Heaven, all's well with the world." This is senseless sentimentality. Just because God is on his throne in heaven, he will not be defied by incnrable wrongs on the earth.

God was in his heaven when Sodom and Gomorrah were destroyed, and that fact explains the judgment which fell on the foul cities of the plain.

God was in his heaven in the days of Noah, and with his divine hand he opened the windows of heaven and sent a flood which overwhelmed the antediluvian world.

God was in his heaven when the dynasties of the Pharaohs of Egypt perished and when the glories of the Assyrian Empires passed away forever from unrepentant Ninevah and God-forgetting Babyion.

God was in his heaven when the Hebrew Commonwealth was pulled down and Jerusalem was compassed by the destroying soldiers of Rome.

God was in his heaven when the conquests of Alexander were themselves conquered, and when the Roman Empire, with all its boasted strength, was dissolved.

O yes, God is in his heaven to-day, and "justice and judgment are yet the habitation of his throne" (Psalms xcvii:2). More is the pity for sinful men and wicked nations!

It behooves us to have done with all our cheap and shallow talk about "optimism," and turn to God from all our sins and transgressions.

To face the facts may be quite disagreeable to us; but not to face them and correct them will be absolutely disastrous. Penitence is painful, but impenitence is ruin. Reformation may disturb our easy-going self-compiacency, but the want of reformation will bring remediless distress.

Certainly nothing can be gained by the excessive use of the epithet, "pessimist," and a deficient exercise of penitential habits. The foolish ostrich does not escape his pursuers by hiding his head in the sand, but he does rather promote his speedy capture.

There is a noble and intelligent optimism which fills the breasts of all pure and godly men.

This optimism possessed the souls of the saddest of the Hebrew prophets. They had faith in God and looked for a time when, under the Messiah's reign, every enemy of the heavenly King would be overcome and the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ. Isaiah looked far ahead and saw his Savior's day and was glad, and declared of the suffering son of God, "He shall see of the travail of His Soul, and be satisfied." (Isaiah liii:11). The same joyous vision confronted each and all of the prophets amid the desolating evils which distressed them. They were the real and sensible optimists of their times.

And to-day the true optimists among us are the consecrated souls which see evil as it is, and yet believe in God and goodness. They sit not down in indolence and indifference, but do rather abhor that which is evil, cleave to that which is good, and fight the good fight of faith. They have no doubts or misgivings about the ultimate triumph of the Kingdom of God; but they are pained by the contemplation of the dreadful doom which awaits the individuals and nations who forget or fight God.

THE POWER OF DREAMS.

Say that we dream! Our dreams have woven
Truths that outface the burning sun;
The lightnings, that we dreamed, have cloven
Time; space; and linked all lands in one!

Dreams! But their swift celestial fingers
Have knit the world with threads of steel,
Till no remotest island lingers
Outside the world's great Commonweal!

Dreams are they? But ye cannot stay them,
Or thrust the dawn back for one hour.
Truth, Love and Justice, if ye slay them,
Return with more than earthly power!

Brother JOSEPH CLARENCE BEECHER was born April 23, 1879, at Baxley, Appling County, Georgia, of devout Methodist parentage. On March 7, 1906, he was married to Miss Rosa Lee Whitcomb, at Selma, Ala., by Dr. A. L. Andrews, pastor of the First Methodist Church. Shortly afterwards they came to Merryville, La., where Mr. Beecher received employment as chief mechanic in the lumber mill. He held this position until the spring of this year. Brother and Sister Beecher united with the Methodist Church at Merryville during the pastorate of Rev. J. W. Booth. He served on the Board of stewards for the past several years. Brother Beecher was ill from July 21, 1921 until the day of his death, July 1, 1922, and although not confined to his bed a great deal, he suffered greatly. According to his own wishes, he was not buried here, but at DeRidder. His pastor, Rev. Robt. M. Brown, assisted by Rev. H. W. Rickey, officiated. Owing to the lateness of the train, services were held only at the grave. Besides his devoted wife and son, Joseph Lee, he is survived by his mother, four sisters, and one brother. We miss him much, but confidently expect to meet him in that glory-land where pain and sorrow are unknown and parting is no more. His pastor,

ROBT. M. BROWN.

GIRLS! LEMONS

BLEACH SKIN WHITE

Squeeze the juice of two lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of Orchard White, which any drug store will supply for a few cents, shake well, and you have a quarter pint of harmless and delightful lemon bleach. Massage this sweetly fragrant lotion into the face, neck, arms and hands each day, then shortly note the beauty and whiteness of your skin.

Famous stage beauties use this lemon lotion to bleach and bring that soft, clear, rosy-white complexion, also as a freckle, sunburn, and tan bleach because it doesn't irritate.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, MRS. LAURA JACKSON, our much loved friend and co-worker, fell asleep on January 5, 1922, to awaken to a new life; be it resolved by the Missionary Society of the Biloxi Methodist Church:

1. That in her going away our Society has lost one of its most honored and beloved members. She was a woman of rare culture and possessed a genius for friendship with all that the word involves of kindliness and unselfish service. Her long life of Christian usefulness was devoted to the church that she loved so well, and when the summons came "to join the innumerable caravan which moves to that mysterious realm," she went sustained by an unfaltering trust.

2. That we, her co-workers in the Lord's vineyard, will strive to emulate her beautiful life and pray earnestly that we may follow our Master as she did.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this Society, one be sent to her family, and one to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed by: Olivia S. Bolton, Eleanor O. Van Hook, Committee.

THE HISTORY OF VACHER-BALM.

The story of Vacher-Balm is very similar to that of several other household remedies that now have national sale.

Twenty years ago, the originator E. W. Vacher, was a New Orleans druggist to whose place of business in the residence district near Napoleon Avenue, came the ailing, and he happened upon a happy formula which gave such quick relief from Catarrh, and various pains caused as most pains are by inflammation.

He found the demand for this salve increased to such an extent because of the enthusiastic boosting of those that had tried it, that he soon found it advisable to have labels printed for it, and to distinguish it, naturally called it Vacher-Balm.

Noting the rapidly increasing local demand, he thought to make its value more widely known, so put up a lot of samples for free distribution, and found that most of those that tried the samples became regular customers. He therefore extended the distribution of Samples until now Vacher-Balm is known more or less pretty much all over the United States, and even as far north as Alaska.

New Orleans being the gateway to Latin America, parties moving thither naturally carried a supply of Vacher-Balm with them, as most users of Vacher-Balm would as soon think of being without bread in the house, as Vacher-Balm, so enquiries soon came from many places in Central and South America, and dealers there began to enquire for agencies, until now there are few countries in Central America where Vacher-Balm is not well known and appreciated.

The broad Atlantic has not stopped the fame of this local remedy, for E. W. Vacher, Inc., the firm that makes Vacher-Balm, of which E. W. Vacher is still the President and General Manager, often receives enquiries from Europe, that is, so far at least from England, Ireland, and Sweden, and one enthusiastic old lady in England wants to have E. W. Vacher knighted, because of the relief he has given to suffering humanity, and to come down from the sublime to the ridiculous, a colored woman in Georgia actually named her baby Vacher-Balm Antiphi-gistine Shepard, we cannot tell you from the name whether it is a boy or girl, but this is a touching tribute anyhow.—Adv.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Alexandria District.

There are three one-hundred-per-cent Leagues in the district.

During May and June there were eight conversions from League services.

Eight chapters have pledged $275 for the Africa Special.

Alexandria recently met the local B. Y. P. U. voliey ball. They also met defeat, but are going after the Baptist brethren harder than ever again. That's the spirit, Alexandria.

Bunkie has enrolled all of its members in the three covenants. This is splendid.

Florence McKnight, with the cooperation of the pastor, Rev. S. S. Bogan, is making a standard League of Colfax.

Glenmora has enrolled sixteen members for part-time service. They have a good social service program. Read it and see if it gives you any ideas:

1. Committee to place invitations in hotel and depot.
2. Visiting the sick.
3. Placing bulletin boards with announcements of services out in town.
4. Having a Sunday Leisure Hour.

Jena, practicaily a dead League last year, now maintains a standard of 90 per cent. Their social service department is undertaking jail work.

Lecompte League recently enjoyed a picnic on the river.

Shreveport District.

The Senior League of First Church is the first in the State to pay cash to the State treasurer equal to $1 per member. Their members lined up 100 per cent strong the first night and every one handed over his dollar. That's where Shreveport put one over the rest of the State. Who's next?

Miss Mary Jones, of Zwoiie, is in charge of the story-teiling hour for the League at the community playground. Mary was a voiunteer at Mansfield, but was considered too young to sign a card. She has proved she is not too young to serve the Master.

New Orleans District.

The Carroilton Avenue Epworth Leaguers were kept busy during the past month earning a dollar, or whatever sum they could, for their Mission Special. The campaign closed Sunday, July 30, when the offering was taken at the League service. Total amount earned was $29.30.

Rev. Frank Collins, of McDonoghville, leaves this month for Texas, where he will take up missionary work among the Mexicans. We extend to Mr. Collins our best wishes.

Lake Charles District.

On July 31, the Leaguers of Broad Street Church gave a surprise party in honor of the birthday of their president, Bryant Horne. Mr. Horne was presented with a League pin by the members. That's a fine way to encourage your presidents, Leaguers.

General News.

Plans are now under way for hoiding a District Institute in each district before September 16. The first will be at Monroe, August 31 and September 1 and 2. Each institute will last three days. Programs will appear in later issue.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

On Juiy 30, Miss Smith, of the Newton District, carried a delegation of Leaguers from Laurel, First Church, to Eiiisviiie to hold services in the absence of the pastor. The League at Ellisville was organized July 23, with a membership of about 25. They have bright prospects for a iive, growing League. Brother Caln is an "Epworth League Pastor" and we expect this League to be a success. We are sorry we haven't the names of any of the officers.

On Tuesday, August 8, during a downpour of rain a large company of Epworth Leaguers of the various churches of Jackson gathered at Galloway Memorial for the purpose of organizing a City Epworth League Union.

The program opened by singing the Epworth League song; devotions were conducted by Mr. Alfred Crothers. Miss Estelie Cheatham rendered a beautiful soio, and Miss Emma Taylor Haskin, leader of the occasion and secretary of the district, made a very impressive talk. Mr. Ralph Hayes, secretary of the Meridian District, was present and was the principal speaker of the evening; he made a fine inspirational address followed by the organization of the Jackson City Union. Miss Bethany Swearingen was elected temporary president. Following the business session, a social hour was spent and music, games and refreshments were enjoyed.

The foiiowing letters from two of our pastors will be of interest both to the pastors and Leaguers:

Future Assembiy Possibiilities.

Being requested by our Conference president to state what impressed me most at our first Annual Epworth League Assembly for the Mississippi Conference, I found it rather difficult to classify.

As I enjoyed the fellowship, and watched the enthusiasm of our young people at play, and their eager and conscientious seeking after better League methods and spiritual knowledge, there was forced a vision. It was the vision of "Future Assembiy Possibiilities."

Whitworth should become the West Point of our Conference. With five hundred picked young men and women there in training for ten days each June, it would not be long until the irksome "young peoples' problem" would be largely soived.

To'day reflects yesterday and mirrors to-morrow. This first Assembly was so well planned and the work so splendidly executed; the personnel of the student body so promising, and their fidelity to the Epworthian cause so evident, that the big days of to-morrow in our Methodism stand out the most prominently in my mind as I think of beautiful Brookhaven, lovely Whitworth, and the fine Assembly of 1922. Let's go 300 strong in 1923.

J. LOYD DECELL.

Merodian, Miss.

It was my very great privilege to attend the Epworth League Assembly at Whitworth College. I wish every pastor and presiding elder could have been present. The pastor has a great opportunity to study the peculiar needs of his young people and receive suggestions as to how he may meet them. Both pastor and presiding elder have an opportunity to get in touch with and heip develop the forces that will soon be the leading workers in our Conference. I was gratified with the splendid attendance and enthusiastic interest shown by the Leaguers.

In the report to our local League, the three delegates from the First Church, Laurel, who attended the Assembly emphasized the advantages of the Assembly over the Conference. I was greatly impressed with the early morning consecration services and the opportunity offered for personal workers to foliow up the good work in personal interviews.

The Assembly affords a great opportunity for a practical demonstration of Christian work and linking up of the lives of our young people with the program of our great church.

Signed: OSMOND LEWIS.

Laurel, Miss.

We find so many Epworth Leaguers who do not read the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Our President is making an appeal to all Leaguers to subscribe for their church paper. What are you reading? Our Advocate is one of the best. Canvass your League and see how many, or how few young folks are taking advantage of this great church paper.

It takes more strength to stop a bad habit than it takes to start it.—Selected.

REVIVALS IN THE CORINTH DISTRICT.

We have had two wonderful revival meetings in the bounds of the Corinth District, North Mississippi Conference, recently. They were both conducted by Rev. W. M. McIntosh, Iuka, Miss., assisted by his co-worker, Rev. E. N. Phillips, Siloam Springs, Ark. These meetings were held at Oak Grove and Blythe's Chapel in Prentiss County, one 3½ miles west and one 8 miles east of Booneville. These are both rural churches. A big tent had been provided by the good people of Booneville, and was used in these meetings. It was filled to overflowing at every service.

Brother McIntosh is one of our best general evangelists, and is a strong preacher of the old-time gospel. He is full of faith and the Holy Ghost. The Lord honors his ministry. He is safe and sane. His co-worker, Brother Phillips, is also a fine preacher. I heard him in two services for men only, and in one for the children. All these services were about the best of the kind that I have attended. He is also a singer of no mean ability. His solos are well chosen and forcibly rendered. He is a master in organizing, training and leading a choir. Then he is a most successful personal worker in a meeting. These two consecrated men make a great TEAM.

Hundreds of people were converted and reclaimed in these two meetings. Great numbers have already united with our church, with others to follow. Some, of course, will go to other churches.

They are to hold another meeting in the district, at Iuka, beginning next week, but I wanted to tell you about these two in the rural districts. Rev. J. T. Gullett is the pastor on the Booneville circuit where these wonderful revivals were held. He has wrought well. Already he has received 116 members into the church since our Annual Conference. May the good work go on.

Yours sincerely,
J. B. RANDOLPH, P. E.

The Health Value of Blood Medicine

By "blood medicine" we mean, for instance, Hood's Sarsaparilla, for nearly 50 years the standard remedy for blood disorders.

Working through the blood, the great distributing agency of the body, it carries purity, health, strength, vitality to every organ.

The general health quickly responds to the powerful influences of this good blood medicine. One old friend wrote us: "I seem to feel a thrill of new life just as soon as I begin my annual course of Hood's."

Sunday School

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES

The week after the first Sunday I spent with Rev. D. P. Yeager, on the Matherville charge at Salem. I went through the book, "Organization and Administration," with them. They did not seem to desire an examination, but I feel that it will revive the Sunday school and bring new life and hope and power to it. I preached for them twice a day also. We had one young boy to join the church and one who came by letter. We had a very precious consecration service. I enjoyed being with these good people. Brother H. L. Norton's brothers and nephews and nieces and other relations make up a good big part of this church. God bless strong Christian characters that leave the aroma of the Most High behind them. Brother Simms is the superintendent of the Sunday school and entertained me most lovingly and kindly.

I held a meeting with the Board of Managers of the Meridian Standard Training School. We will have a great session September 10-16. Those of you who live near to Meridian and can get to this school will make no mistake in coming to it. It will be a great privilege and well as opportunity.

FRECKLES

Now Is The Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as Othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of Othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength Othine as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

It Doesn't Pay

to let your little hurts get bad. Keep Vacher-Balm handy, it will save you money and suffering, if used at once. Vacher-Balm purifies sores and relieves pain. Vacher, Inc., New Orleans, La.—Adv.

I had the pleasure of preaching for Brother Decell Sunday. We had, I thought, very fine services indeed. I preached twice in the afternoon in the jail and had several to ask for prayer. We got mighty close to the Lord and Brother White's son, who was with us, said he never felt his heart go out as it did that afternoon. Brother Grady Norton made the other member of the party. I met with the Epworth League that night. Altogether it was a busy, happy day. All were so kind and thoughtful of me. I had the joy of renewing friendships of days gone by and was happy in it.

Home to rest for a few days. I have had the pleasure of making two trips with the Flying Squadron this week. This is a great body of Christian men. God is using them in a wonderful way for His glory.

If you have not held Sunday School Day, don't forget us. We need the money and you need the inspiration of the day. Pray earnestly for Brother Hull and myself. Yours in Him,

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

The following charges have sent an offering from each of the schools on the charge: Adams, Scotland, Purvis, Terry, Vancleave. Vancleave leads all circuits as largest contribution, and stands first in the Seashore District as to amount.

Percentage of schools observing the Day in the districts is as follows: Brookhaven, 39 per cent; Hattiesburg, 39 per cent; Hattiesburg, 13 per cent; Jackson, 27½ per cent; Meridian, 25 per cent; Newton, 23 per cent; Seashore, 30 per cent; Vicksburg, 16 per cent. The schools are way behind last year. May we not look to the lovers of the work to give us support in this most worthy cause?

FROM OAK RIDGE, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: The quarterly conference of the Oak Ridge circuit, which was held at Porter's Chapel last Sunday, was a success. Rev. J. R. Jones, P. E., preached an excellent sermon. It was deep, yet couched in simple and artistic English. The sermon was climaxed with the baptism and reception of Mr. Albert Brown by Brother Jones. After the Lord's supper, the ladies spread an unsurpassed dinner. One of the features of the dinner was to see Brother Cottrell, pastor of Gibson Memorial, and Brother Black, Commissioner of Millsaps College, arriving in haste, and eating, eating, eating. Why did Brother Cottrell leave Gibson Memorial so early after the eleven o'clock hour without bringing Mrs. Cottrell?

The reports of the quarterly conference were all good. The accomplished people of Porter's Chapel acquitted themselves well in every respect. Miss Levi rendered a sweet gospel solo at the eleven o'clock hour. Dr. M. M. Black preached an interesting sermon after the quarterly conference.

You can't get ahead of those Porter Chapel folks. They evidently had planned a surprise for the pastor's wife, and they did it successfully, for when the preacher and family went to their car they found it loaded with groceries. They extend many thanks to all who took part in making them happy. E. D. SIMPSON.

FROM CAMDEN, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: By invitation of the pastor, Rev. L. M. Sharp, of the Monterey charge, the writer had the privilege of laboring with him in meetings at Lodabar and Mt. Carmel, beginning July 30 and closing Aug. 10. Interest deepened from the first service in both meetings. The members were revived and many gave evidence of a desire of salvation from sin. Seven were received by baptism. Could these meetings have continued longer much greater results would have been realized. Brother Sharp is doing a good work and is in great favor with his people. Our fellowship with him and his people was delightful. Blessings on them all.

NEWS FROM BRAZIL.

The revival fires burn in Brazil. Rev. C. L. Smith, pastor at Port Alegre, writes: "Our revival campaign has closed so far as the special meetings are concerned, and it was a great success throughout the South Brazil Conference. We organized two teams and for six weeks made special efforts, reaching in this way twelve cities. In these twelve cities 1600 candidates signed cards declaring their purpose to accept Christ as their only Redeemer, and to follow his steps. This number is being added to daily as the revival spreads out into the smaller towns and country. Here at Central Church, Porto Alegre, 194 signed, and during the two weeks that have passed since the meeting, the number has grown to 207. At the Institutional Church 148 signed during the special meetings, and several since. At Central Church we began the year with 189 members, and we expect to double our membership during this year."

THE COAL MINES.

Dark Anthracite, that reddenest on my hearth,
Thou in those islands didst slumber long;
But now thou art come forth to move the earth,
And put to shame the men that mean thee wrong;
Thou shalt be coals of fire to those that hate thee,
And warm the shins of all that underrate thee.

For thou shalt forge vast railways, and shalt heat
The hissing rivers into steam, and drive
Huge masses from thy mines, on iron feet
Walking their steady way, as if alive,
Northward until everlasting ice besets thee,
And south as far as the grim Spaniard lets thee.

—William Cullen Bryant.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Woman's Missionary Society of Epworth Church.

Dear Mrs. Snelling: Did you ever awake on a summer morning and feel a reluctance to do certain duties that you were expected to perform during the day, and after the conditions were met, how glad you were that you responded to duty?

Well, the W. M. S. of Epworth decided at the July meeting that the next assembly should take place in the "open," and beautiful City Park was the chosen spot.

At the appointed time we assembled (pro tem.) just inside the entrance and there awaited for the members to gather. Well, it was humorous to hear a "How do you do, this morning?" One member could hardly report owing to a weakness in the pedal extremities; another had disturbance in the cranium; a third had a rush of business; another had her program to work out, and still another her infant prodigy to look after. However, when the number of members—a little over a quorum—arrived, we proceeded to the coveted spot, the picnic grounds.

It was an ideal morning. Old Sol in his modesty hid behind the clouds, and the delightful breezes stirred the branches of the trees overhead.

After a little parley, we realized that it was about noon, so we decided to have our lunch, and hold our meeting afterward. One thoughtful member provided ice, lemons, and sugar for the day; and how anxiously and with growing thirst we watched that big pot of lemonade!

The lap of Mother Earth was seen filled to its capacity with all the blessings provided for the inner man, and it is needless to say we all ate heartily in good old Methodist style. Each one made a silent promise to see that nothing was wasted.

I will not venture to say how long we remained at the festive board; but after lunch we assembled under a tree where quiet reigned, only a twittering bird and old Boreas stirring the branches overhead.

Our president, Mrs. Selfe, called the meeting to order. The secretary was requested to read the Scripture lesson, St. Mark 6:1-6. After a few remarks on the lesson, we all repeated the prayer which our Lord taught His disciples, and we realized right here what a gracious Father we have, who provides the majestic trees, the verdant fields, the songsters of the air, and the babbling brooks for our pleasure and edification.

Mrs. Selfe read a poem entitled "The Coal Fields," written by William Gullen Bryant. The program for the month was fully carried out. Miss Carrie Rathert told about the coal fields of West Virginia. "The McAlester coal fields of Oklahoma," was presented by Mrs. A. C. Coulter. Mrs. White told "Why there should be better living in the camps." Mrs. H. A. Lamberth reached our hearts with the story of "Why the children should be given on a chance." Mrs. Lamberth also gave a good talk on "Stewardship."

This topic is so fully expanded in the June issue of the Missionary Voice; all questions are answered and testimonials given that will remove all doubts as to whether it pays to tithe or not.

We find instances where those who could not give in dollars and cents, gave of their crops, their poultry or fruit, and the profit to their church and the blessings to themselves were increased 100 per cent.

This concluded our literary program. The business meeting opened with the reading of the minutes of the last meeting by the secretary. By this time the winds were roaring in the trees—black, inky clouds were forming a canopy overhead, and we were warned to "pick up" and move, which we did. We concluded our business, however, nearer the shed, and were glad to learn that the last "lawn party" netted $38.40, which, with additional funds available, we were able to furnish fifty hymnals to the church.

At this hour we admitted a new member "Under the spreading live oak tree."

It seemed as though Jupiter Pluvius waited for us to conclude our meeting, for just at this time big drops began to descend, and once more we moved, this time to the big shed, which was a protection to scores of children and parents as well as to our party.

Well, you wonder how we reached home safely? A kindly brother came with a covered "bus," and when the rain slackened we wended our way out, emerged out of sight and out of the rain, and our chauffeur was as welcome as if he drove a Buick.

MISS G. CARTY, Rec. Sec'y.

McTYEIRE DORMITORY COMPLETED.

The beautiful new dormitory so long needed at McTyeire School, Shanghai, China, has been completed, having been turned over by the architects on July 1. It will be fully ready for the students in the fall. The China Press is lavish in its praise of this undertaking of the Woman's Missionary Council at the cost of $165,000. The building is called the Lambuth-Clopton Hall and is the fulfilment of the dreams of Miss Laura Haygood and Dr. Young J. Allen and Helen Richardson. It has been over a year in building and enough cannot be said in praise of Miss Martha E. Pyle, who has so faithfully watched over every step of the building enterprise.

MARGARET WILLIAMSON HOSPITAL.

At the Margaret Williamson Hospital, in Shanghai, China, the hammer of the builder can be heard. The contract for the new Nurse Training School, to be built by the American Baptist Board, was placed a month ago, and every effort is being made to speed the building so sorely needed for the student body. Great are the re-enforcements that will be added to this plant this summer: Dr. Thomas E. Kraker, for seventeen years a member of the faculty of the Woman's Medical School in Philadelphia, will sail for China to spend a year helping the workers at Margaret Williamson Hospital; Dr. Lucile M. Van, a graduate of the Mary Black Medical School, in Soochow, and who has completed three years of postgraduate work in America; Dr. Susan Willard Brown, our Southern Methodist representative from the Rush Medical School; Miss Anne Donnelly, a young business manager at the hospital; and possibly Dr. Francis King, a graduate of the Medical School of the University of Minnesota, who will go out under the Union Medical Committee. There is a possibly that Miss Bess Lipscomb, daughter of our Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb, who is a graduate of Vanderbilt University and a technician of rare ability, may also go to assist at Margaret Williamson for a year.

AN EXCELLENT BOOK WORTHY OF CAREFUL STUDY.

Our Publishing House at Nashville, Tenn., Lamar & Barton, Agents, will soon publish an American Edition of Bishop Ellicott's "Christus Comprobator" and I wish to commend it to the careful study of all our preachers and laymen who are interested in the subject of the authenticity and authority of the Old Testament Scriptures. I wish that every undergraduate preacher especially in our church, would get a copy and read it.

The learning of Bishop Ellicott was beyond all question, and his loyalty to Christ and the gospel was not less than his learning. He prepared the book I have mentioned to meet the issues concerning the Old Testament Scriptures which are now under so much discussion in our own country and the book is as pertinent to these issues now as it was when it was first published.

The volume has the very special excellence of being written in such lucid and untechnical style that the unlearned can comprehend it and yet it is so scholarly that no informed man will despise it.

I am glad that our Book Agents bring out an American Edition of this book at this time. I understand that the price is no more than $1.25, which puts it in the reach of men of small means. It is worth the price, and when a man buys it he will be disposed to keep it and read it and reread it very often. W. A. CANDLER.

THE CHURCH IN POLITICS.

Dear Brother Carley: I noticed in a recent issue in the Advocate, a brother wrote, "If a church is as spiritual as it ought to be, it will not meddle in politics." I think that this brother is wrong—the more spiritual a church is the more it will insist on law enforcement; and that means politics. The very foundation of our country is the church in politics—throughout the Bible the prophets were mixed in politics. Verily, the church is responsible to-day for the condition and the lack of law enforcement and existing evils prevailing in our country, by withdrawing from politics. The evils which make our country (a supposed Christian country) a savage country, where savage tribes roam and pounce upon single persons by stealth, and unawares torture and kill, and the bootlegger and illicit distiller hold sway. These are the swine that the the Bible speaks of, "Cast not your pearl before swine lest they turn and rend you." What is a pearl? The lot and the privilege of being a citizen; and we cast this precious pearl before these by not voting or by votings for some lions, because a party said we should; then they turn and rend us. The father of a child is responsible for the protection and support of the child. The church with God's help wrote the 18th amendment in our Constitution; shall we rest now, and drop back out of politics? No, the church must take its place in politics, and back our sheriffs and other officials in law enforcement.

The swine and lions should be penned, so they cannot hurt innocents and incompetents. It is to be regretted that there are so few officials who dare to stand alone for the right. Daniel, the only good man, good all the way through "in whom innocency was found before the Lord," was in politics; John the Baptist was in politics and lost his head; Elijah and Elisha, and all the prophets were concerned in politics, and stood before kings; so was St. Paul in politics. Verily, the Lord will hold the church responsible for his kingdom on earth. It must be done by a fearless stand for the right, with prayers and preaching the whole gospel of Christ, and by backing, putting, and keeping in office such officials as will enforce the law, and by ousting all slackers. The good need no law, but as long as all people are not good, we must have law and law enforcement. God gave us the Ten Commandments as our law, and he enforces them with the death penalty—"The wages of sin is death." But we have a good lawyer, one who intercedes for us if we repent of our sins and trust him implicitly, and the great Judge will pardon and give us life everlasting, with the freedom and pleasures of heaven; but if we do not repent, we will receive death, everlasting death, and hell. Rev. W. H. Saunders is right in talking plain in the Advocate, only the suggestion putting off on some other body is not quite in harmony with the rest of his letter. I would suggest that the Advocate print, or rather have the church print resolutions to the President, to ask that member of his cabinet to resign, and that resolutions be sent to the preachers of our church, and other churches, and have them signed by their members and others that will, and send same to the President. We would show him under with resolutions so that member would get out; that is the politics for the church and all Christians; and it would scare others to do their duty, if they were not lawabiding themselves. Yes, the swine and lions must be penned, so it is up to the church and all true Christians to back the laws of our country not only with moral support, which don't go far in this world, but with material support, resolutions, and above all our votes.

May God help us to do our part.

FRED EIFLER.

Wesson, Miss.

FROM ARTESIA, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: I am not given to writing the Advocate often, but desire to give mention to some facts from Artesia.

On the first Sunday in last April, we began our annual protracted services here, with Brother W. A. Wilson, our Conference evangelist, doing the preaching. We were not disappointed in the fact that we had no accessions on profession of faith, for we gathered all the fine lot of children into the church last year. Of course, a few friends who have long resisted, and who have long been on the hearts of their loved ones and friends in the church did not line up with us, and gain their greatest victory of life; but somehow it was not done and we were sad because they have so long defeated God in their decision and are losers of life's greatest victory. We can say of them that thousands can, and do, witness the wisdom of to "first seek the kingdom of God," and then follows, "All these things will be added unto you." But prayer can yet be made in their behalf and we can seek yet other avenues to reach them. But to the messages of Wilson: there came searching thoughts and pondering of life in its working, and a stirring of the soul before the visions portrayed; they aroused the people to seriously weigh themselves as to their worth in the Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. In some way this meeting led a few others to talk to God around their family altars, and in other ways caused those who had not been so faithful in the attendance at church services to adopt this good habit; and this has been true all the year.

In the organization of our Epworth League, a fortunate selection was made in electing Brother E. C. Hendley as president. He is a leader of the young people and has proved a successful one in moving this line of work to the maintenance of a good interest and in putting the young people into the harness of earnest workers.

Our Sunday school work has done well, with Brother O. G. McIlwain leading as superintendent. He is timid, but loves his work, and its interest.

Our women have shown, as one will see from their report in the minutes of our Conference, that they are workers in their Missionary Society. They have done a good work on our parsonage this year, and will not fail in such interests as arise in their work.

Our board of stewards gave their pastor one month's rest last year and also this. We are grateful to them for this kindness.

Our weekly prayer meeting has been good all the year, averaging from about 18 to 47 in attendance. This we think is good, as we have less than 100 members.

The ambition of our board of stewards is to meet all their obligations, and they are surely a plucky band for they do it. The ladies have their weekly prayer meeting every Monday afternoon, and have proved a service of great worth to the church.

This is the home of our presiding elder's boyhood, where he grew up into manhood, and no man has a greater welcome among us than has he. When it is announced that Brother McIlwain is to preach here, he is greeted with a good audience and glad hearing.

Brother Carley, we enjoy the Advocate. H. M. YOUNG, Pastor.

The highest moment known on earth by the merely natural, is that in which the mysterious union of heart with heart is felt, call it friendship, love, what you will * * * when, as it were, moving about in the darkness and loneliness of existence, we suddenly come in contact with something, and we find that spirit has touched spirit. —F. W. Robertson.

SUCCEEDS WHERE DOCTORS FAIL

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Often Does That.—Read Mrs. Miner's Testimony

Churubusco, N. Y.—"I was under the doctor's care for over five years for backache and had no relief from his medicine. One day a neighbor told me about your Vegetable Compound and I took it. It helped me so much that I wish to advise all women to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for female troubles and backache. It is a great help in carrying a child, as I have noticed a difference when I didn't take it. I thank you for this medicine and if I ever come to this point again I do not want to be without the Vegetable Compound. I give you permission to publish this letter so that all women can take my advice."—Mrs. FRED MINER, Box 102, Churubusco, N. Y.

It's the same story over again. Women suffer from ailments for years. They try doctors and different medicines, but feel no better. Finally they take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and you can see its value in the case of Mrs. Miner.

That's the truth of the matter. If you are suffering from any of the troubles women have, you ought to try this medicine. It can be taken in safety by young or old, as it contains no harmful drugs.

FINE REVIVAL AT COLUMBIA, MISS.

I am glad to report a very great meeting just closed last night in our church at Columbia, Miss. All the churches joined hands and hearts with us and the good Lord gave us a wonderful revival, such as I have never seen before. There were many conversions and accessions to the churches.

A great many family altars were erected, and a great many pledged themselves to tithe their income. A great host of our young people offered themselves for the work of the Lord anywhere He might want them. I feel that a number of missionaries and preachers will come out of this meeting. Our own C. N. Guice was with us and did the preaching, and I have never heard it done better through any revival campaign. He is very forceful, plain and logical, but gentle and tender. His appeals are almost irresistible. I have never heard a greater evangelist anywhere.

The Lord has done great things for us for which we are glad. Columbia can never be the same town again. Our noonday prayer meeting every Wednesday at the theater promises great things. Pray for us.

L. L. ROBERTS, Pastor.

August 14.

FROM LAUDERDALE, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: We closed a most gratifying and successful revival meeting here in Lauderdale last night, the 13th inst. The preaching was done by Rev. T. J. Norsworthy and the music was rendered by the home choir. The preaching was strong and powerful. I know of no man better qualified in every way as an evangelist. Brother Norsworthy confines his messages to the Gospel truth and by his earnest appeals through love for the church and salvation for human souls, he wins his way to the hearts of the people. Every sermon demonstrated the presence and power of God.

Brother Norsworthy does not compromise with sin in the least. He hews to the line and if the church member or non-church member does not want to be struck by the Gospel ax, he or she must get off the line. But notwithstanding his earnest appeals, he is very humorous at times, very zealous and powerful in his logic. His messages give strength to the people, thus enabling them to be made loyal to the church. He brings pastor and members closer together. We feel that much and lasting good has come to the church and community by his preaching and godly presence. If you want sin in believers unfolded, invite Brother T. J. Norsworthy to hold you a meeting.

HOW HAPPINESS IS ATTAINED.

God has decreed that happiness in this life is attainable only by the consecration of all our energies, of all our talents, to the elevation of humanity. If the greatest happiness could be found in absolute selfishness, then how desolate this world would be! Then there could and would be no society worth while, no home with the sweet influences that cluster there, and life, indeed, would be as cold and cheerless as a desert. So we then find that each one must seek to do his part in making the world a fit place in which to live, a place where the principles of man's brotherhood will find lodgment. The needs of the present should be an incentive to stimulate us to greater diligence in the discharge of our duty to God, and labor to complete our work while time and opportunity are afforded us.

WHISKEY OR MILK.

Dr. C. W. Saleeby, probably the best-known eugenist in the world, states in a letter to the Westminster Gazette that prohibition has increased the consumption of milk in the United States by fifty per cent. He says: "Before prohibition Americans drank about one-half pint of milk per head per day. The latest American figures are over three quarters of a pint, and students of modern dietetics, and of that food of foods in particular, will realize what these figures mean for public health, and especially for childhood * * * The records show that prohibition, admittedly violated in New York (72 per cent foreigners) more than anywhere else in the United States, has wrought a tremendous decrease in mortality when 1921 is compared with, say, the quinquennium 1913-'17. Still births are down 19.7 per cent, infant mortality 23.5, pulmonary tuberculosis 40.2, pneumonia 42.4, cirrhosis of the liver 53.1, and so on. This is a mere note * * * but I warn my fellow countrymen of what it means for our imperial, national, and racial destiny."—Zion's Herald.

The Kingdom Within: The kingdom of God cometh not with observation: Neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you.—Luke 17:20, 21.

Conditions of Forgiveness: Put on therefore, * * * bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long suffering; forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye.—Colossians 3: 12, 13.

God's Thoughts: I know the thoughts that I think toward you, saith the Lord, thoughts of peace, and not of evil. * * * And ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart.—Jeremiah 29:11, 13.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE RANK AND FILE.

We are making a great deal of "leadership" in these days, and well we may; but we need to lay great store by what we are pleased to call "the rank and file." There are multiplied thousands of men and women who never think of themselves as leaders, who have no desire to be leaders, who, to tell the truth, have not the qualities of leadership, yet who make possible all the great achievements for which those who are called leaders receive the credit. In the church, for example, the "rank and file" pay the bills; they do most of the work; tbey hold the lines after the advance has been made; they furnish the inspiration that makes great movements possible. It was of the "rank and file" that those incomparably beautiful words were written:

"Full many a gem of purest ray serene
The dark, unfathomed caves of ocean bear;
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air."

Yet the gem in the depths of the ocean is a gem, for all that; and the flower in the desert is as beautiful and fragrant as any that blooms in the garden of the gods. We stand for "the rank and file."

THE CASE FOR PROHIBITION.

Several weeks ago the Manufacturers Record, generally recognized as the greatest periodical of its kind in the United States, sent a questionnaire to several hundred of tbe leading men in industry throughout the country inquiring as to their views of prohibition since the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment and the operation of the Volstead Law. Hundreds of answers were received to these questionnaires, and the results have been tabulated by the Manufacturers Record as follows: for prohibition in some form, 98.50%; against prohibition, 1.50%; for strict prohibition, 85.50%; for beer and wine, 7%; against Volstead Law or present regulations, 1.25%; wants Volstead Law modified, .75%; advocates high license or Government control, 1%; advocates dispensary system, .25%; undecided or non-committal, 2.75%. This overwhelming sentiment in favor of strict prohibition on the part of those who are in position to judge of its effects in a large way is especially interesting in view of the poll now being conducted by the Literary Digest on the same question. Henry M. Leland, president of the Lincoln Motor Company, says: "In Detroit the favorable effects of Prohibition are apparent to even a blind man and this despite the fact that we are but across the river from wet Canada and have a large population accustomed to drinking liquor. Our chief of police reports prohibition to be a very decided advantage in preserving order. Our merchants and bankers rejoice in securing the business which was formerly worse than wasted in the saloon. In manufacturing circles there is no question as to the decided advantage of prohibition and particularly to the employees themselves. At one time tbere were eighteen saloons near our plant and at noon and nights these were crowded with men who returned to their work with trembling hands, unsteady legs, distorted visions, and soured dispositions. The turn-over of labor and the frequency of accidents due directly to these conditions—to say nothing of indifferent workmanship and spoiled material—were formerly one of tbe heaviest burdens of industry. Prohibtion has certainly made for contentment and prosperity among employees in industry." We think the whole matter may be summed up in this way: Individuals, in their desire for personal gratification of the appetite for liquor may inveigh against prohibition; but tbose who are concerned about the industrial, economic, social, and moral welfare of the country as a whole are practically unanimous in their support of prohibition. The agitation in favor of a return to licensed liquor selling is essentially selfish.

UTTERLY USELESS.

Tbe educational process inevitably means that men and women will come to tbink for themselves, and it is utterly useless to try to evolve any kind of educational system that will keep them from doing so. There was a time, perhaps, when the great mass of people were content to take their opinions, views, and doctrines second-hand; but that time has passed forever. Only those who believe in an intellectual despotism can be willing to contend for an absolutely fixed form according to which the mind shall function, or for a uniform mold into which tbeir intellectual products shall be poured. The heresy of the ages was tbe contention of Luther that the individual has a right to interpret the Bible for bimself—yet it was the establishment and maintenance of that contention that have given us modern Protestant Christianity. An organization has a right to fix the conditions upon which membership in tbat organization is permissible, but it has no right to say that only those who comply with those conditions are entitled to respect as conscientious, law-abiding citizens. When a man makes use of his God-given faculties to think through a problem, assuming that he makes use of every available means of reaching right conclusions, tbe result of his tbinking represents the best he is able to do in that particular matter—and he has a right, nay, he is under obligation, to stand by those conclusions. We have never known a man who really wanted to do rigbt, who really tried to do right, and who took Jesus Christ absolutely and unreservedly as the guide of his life, to get very far from the Kingdom; yet some mighty good men look at things differently.

WHAT THE OTHER WANTS.

We were interested in reading the other day in an exchange the views of some young people concerning the kind of men and women tbat make desirable husbands and wives. Eight young men in a crowd were talking about matrimony, and their opinion was that "flappers" are all right to flirt with, but when they come to marry they want girls who know something about practical things—who know the difference between beef and mutton rather than the difference between face creams and carmines, who know more about brooms than about jazz and cheek-to-cheek dancing. They told their own sisters of their views and those sisters—sensible girls they are—said, in effect: "Well, that's your side. Now hear ours. The girls of today are willing to run a broom and cook the beans to make a real home for a real man; but they don't intend to do it merely as an accommodation for street-corner loafers and cigarette puffers. God send us men, and we'll do our part." We commend these opinions to the serious consideration of all "flappers" and "flippers"—as Dr. R. H. Bennett calls the male of the species. It takes real men and women to make a real home.

BELIEVING AND DOING.

We take no stock in the specious fallacy, "No matter what a man believes, just so he lives right." It does matter what a man believes, because "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." We are willing to say, however, that it makes no difference what a man believes if he does not live right—"the devils also believe, and tremble," but they remain devils just the same. There may be a rather loose use of the word "believe" in this paragraph, but the point is that a sound faith eventuates in right conduct. Profession without practice is a lie on the face of it.

DON'T PUT IT OFF.

There are routine tasks that we have to do every day, and there are special tasks that fall to our lot occasionally. The routine things we do as they come to hand, for they have to be done; but the occasional tasks we often postpone—not because they are too hard to perform, but just because we can. This may do very well for awhile; but a postponed job becomes increasingly hard to perform, and we ought to remember this fact when we put off till to-morrow what we ought to do to-day. If there is anything you must do sooner or later, do it NOW.

IMPRESSIONS OF THE NEW ORIENT.

By Dr. Robert E. Speer.

We have been gone nearly a year, and most of that time we spent in India and Persia. We had also glimpses of other parts of Asia as well. Perhaps I can make the best use of space in this article by touching briefly upon each of the lands through which we have gone and describing in a few words the conditions each of the peoples faces to-day in its relationship to the great human movement that is central to our thought and our life.

The New Japan.

Each time I have visited Japan before I have felt, first, the rigidity and bondage of the thought of the Japanese people, and, second, the sense of an almost boundless physical vitality. This time both of these impressions were reversed.

Six years ago, it seemed like passing into a stifling atmosphere in coming from the Philippines into Japan. Out of the Islands' perfect liberty and freedom of thought and action, one plunged into the rigid institutions and stereotyped spirit of the Japanese nation. But now in this new day one has a feeling of moving among great and free thoughts. Indeed, in Japan to-day this is the common word—"thoughts" of all kinds; and thoughts are very dangerous to a governing class that does not like anything which tends to the full freedom of the people. One does not see in Japan now the same strength of the old institutions, binding like strait-jackets the minds of men. But to-day in Japan, as everywhere else around the world, one does find the deep feelings that are stirring the spirit of all mankind.

The other impression—that of boundless physical vitality—also is now overturned. One has the feeling of looking into a sick face in Japan to-day. And the Japanese themselves are beginning to sense the situation. They realize what influences are sapping the vitality of their people. Their educational systems are solid, competing intellectually with the best educational systems of the world. They are raising the standards that they may meet any other nation. But the effort and strain have weakened the vitality of the nation. Twenty per cent of the young women, sucked up in the great maelstrom that streams everywhere out of the village life of Japan into the large industrial centers, entering the great industries, go back marked with tuberculosis. School teachers complain about the health of their pupils and urge the impossibility of the children's meeting the mental strain of the physical conditions under which they have to live and work.

There is much to see in Japan of the old days—the ancient shrines and temples, testifying still to the power of the great ideas that have shaped Japan side by side with the incoming of the fresh forces that are to control Japanese life. A symbol of this one finds in Tokyo in the new Imperial Shrine. One would have thought it had been built for thousands of years. Engineered into a place of patriotic pre-eminence in defiance of modern tendencies, it seemed to be the rallying cry of the old Shinto conceptions, intended to buttress the ideals upon which Japan has tried to build the security of her national life. And not far from this Imperial Shrine are the buildings of the new Women's Christian College—the beginning of the new day next to the receding echo of the days gone by. Side by side with the great effort of dying ideals comes in this symbol of the mightiest force in the world—the force of what woman's life can mean, has meant, in the whole life of the world. The greatest undeveloped resource is the capacity of the still unemancipated womanhood of Asia, and the great force releasing woman and preparing her for the leadership of the coming years is Christianity.

China "en Route for Home."

We had a little more opportunity to see the drift of the great changes that are under way in China. Many who look at China to-day are despondent, seeing no hope for China as a continuing political unit. But such despondency forgets the deep and indestructible unity of the Chinese people, and it forgets the good purposes of God. I found on my desk on returning home a letter from one of the editors of the International Review of Missions. There was a sentence in it whose meaning did not seem clear. It read: "Mr. Oldham is now on his way to China, which, in spite of all the physical evidence to the contrary, is en route for home." Obviously, the stenographer had left out some words, but ordinarily omissions do not work out so happily. "China,....in spite of all physical evidence to the contrary, is en route for home." I believe that indeed it is, and that the home of humanity is incomplete until the Chinese people at last push their massive way into it.

But it will be a hard and painful road. Each time we have visited China, I have gone to see the great industrial mills. I went back this time to see some of the same mills I had seen before, to note whether conditions were changed. One still sees hundreds and hundreds of little children stoop-shouldered and hollow-chested, bending over steaming pots of water in the silk filatures or before the bobbins in the cotton mills; hundreds of women toiling heavy-eyed at too heavy tasks; and one realizes that there is a long, hard road of industrial struggle still ahead of China before she at last pulls through to the goal beyond. The old days are drawing to an end, and new days and new experiences lie before—days and experiences like our own in the West, full of confusion and pain.

Difficult Days in India.

For three happy, fascinating months we traveled the length and breadth of India, from Colombo to Landour, and from Calcutta to Goa and Bombay, visiting all the main provinces, the great cities, and, best of all, the country villages and the great masses of the outcaste people and all kinds of folk, from Government officials to peasants, from the high-caste to the sweeper. India is a fascinating country to-day in a fascinating period—a period of political life that Great Britain has been making inevitable ever since she took hold of this great mass of races, never bound together by a common religion, with no unity even of language with which to discuss their wrongs, save the language imposed upon them by the supposed oppressors; and putting forth ideas such as never crossed their dreams until those ideas were brought to them by those against whose influence they now make complaint. The difficulty in India to-day is that its problems of national personality are as complex as those of individual personalities. How much more simple if Great Britain were one personality and India one personality! They could then work out their problems with patience and sympathy and understanding. With so many personalities, each counteracts the influence of the other. One group of Englishmen treats and deals with the people on the highest and worthiest plane; another group speaks of the people as "niggers." If the problem could be left with the high-minded Englishmen it would be worked out as well as any such mixed human problem can be. But in dealing with India, England is divided. And India is divided in the demands and in the spirit with which she meets Great Britain. Some Englishmen are in favor of saying to India, "By December 31, 1926, every Englishman will have left your shores." Other believe that no such policy would be either possible or just, that a situation which has grown up organically can only slowly be resolved into something better. Meanwhile it will be painful business for Englishmen who remain; but many must remain to aid India in the difficult times through which Great Britain recognizes that India must be helped forward on her way.

The problem is complicated on the other side by the type of leadership offered to India. There are radicals and moderates of many different types. People are divided in their allegiance to Gandhi. To some he is a saint or more, and they constantly compare him to Christ. Others regard him as a wild man. And still others think that he is a saint in personal character, but a wild man in his economic and political ideas. There were many in India who thought Mr. Gandhi should have been dealt with long before, but they were afraid that his influence had grown so great, and that the movement had penetrated so deep, that the Government would not dare put its hands on him. Others thought it would be sacrilege and tryanny to interfere with him. But people who knew, if any one could know, dismissed the idea of a probability of a violent revolution as a result. The Ali brothers, with whom Mr. Gandhi had been associated—men of very different character from his—had been arrested in the fall, and all through India anxiety as to the outcome was felt; but these men were arrested, tried, and convicted, and India went quietly on its way.

There has been great growth in the Christian church in India, both in numbers and in nationalistic temper. It was there, in the church, that we spent most of our time watching the effects of the gospel on the highest and lowest levels of human life, seeing just what the gospel can do. If I had never believed in the resurrection before, I should believe in it now. It is the greatest living power in the world. We saw this power that raised Christ from the dead operating to-day. There must be reality back of that—realities in history, in the moral facts of the world.

The Appeal of Persia and Mesopotamia.

We went on from India at Christmas-time to Mesopotamia and then into Persia. I have been in many mission stations that made a strong appeal, but never in one that made a stronger appeal than Mosul in Upper Mesopotamia. No one can deny that it will be a difficult field. Here Arab and Turk and Kurd and Christian meet. It is one of the great border cities of humanity. I cannot imagine any place in the world which presents a more arresting challenge to the hearts of young men who have something to give, who like the spice of dangerous and difficult work, and who want to serve their fellow men and God.

In two respects Persia is a very different land from the one that Mrs. Speer and I visited twenty-six years ago. It was poor then. It seems to be poorer still to-day. There is a great deal of poverty all over Asia in the lands where we have been; but poverty in the tropics is one thing, and poverty in the cold and snow of winter is another thing. The collapse of Russia wiped out most of Persia's trade, and no replacing industry has been developed inside the country. But the nation's currency is sound silver money. It has great natural resources still undeveloped. It is eager for help from America. If it is poor, it is full of friendliness and of desire for assistance in conquering its poverty. This new spirit of kindliness and hospitality and tolerance is the second think we noted everywhere. I never believed a Mohammedan land could be so free as Persia has become. There is ample tolerance and liberality. Half the boys studying in mission schools are from Mohammedan homes, and nearly a third of the girls. Converted mollahs, and men and women, from homes high and low, openly preach Christ. Persia wants our help both in education and in trade and industry. And the door is open also for our religious sympathy and help.

What Sovietism Has Meant in Transcaucasia.

On the eleventh of April we left Persia, going from Tabriz through the three Soviet governments of Transcaueasia. If anybody wants to tear down what has been established before he is sure that he can put something better in its place, let him go into the Caucasus. If anybody thinks that the dissipation of a nation's accumulated wealth is a desirable thing, let him go over to the Caucasus and see for himself some of the consequences—and the pitiful efforts of the people to rebuild their shattered economic and industrial life.

The Turkish Situation.

Of the Turkish situation we saw just a little. I venture to say that we found not one of the Americans whom we met sympathetic with a settlement of the Turkish problem on the basis that had been proposed for the armistice between Turkey and Greece. To re-establish Turkey without cheeks or control seemed to them the certain end of the Christian races, of the movement of education and enlightenment, and of the hope of good government and progress even for the Turkish people themselves. The men who knew the Near East best did not believe it was conceivable that such a settlement could be admitted by the world. They believed that at least four limitations were inevitable: (1) the international control of the Bosporus; (2) such control of the foreign financing of Turkey, including the debt and all future loans; (3) the limitation of Turkey's military establishment, and (4) the continuance of the capitulations. With these limitations they believe foreign help to Turkey would still be possible and life in Turkey be still a conceivable thing.

America the Hope of the World.

As we look back over the year, one outstanding impression is the hope of the peoples of the world in the good-will and help of America. It makes an American almost ashamed to see how so many of the Asiatic people have idealized his country—how they have pinned their hopes and expectations to it. He wonders whether even part of these hopes of their will be fulfilled. One cannot go where we have been, if he is an American, without having people high and low gather around him for sympathy and hope. If I could but tell you of the groups with whom we talked all over Asia, back in the remote corners and in distant cities—all hoping that somehow America was not going to fail the rest of the world at this time. They cannot understand how we can sit here in comfort and plenty so far away and not lift our hands to help them in their poverty and need. They are thankful for what we have done for starving babies. But, as said some young men in Mosul, "our minds and hearts are starving, too."

The Need of Greater Co-operation Among the Churches.

Another vivid impression is the need of more and fuller co-operative action by our churches. I wish we could unite ourselves in more efficient ways to accomplish the great task. We ought to try to help one another more in our territorial allotments of missionary responsibility. For instance, in Southwestern Asia I believe that the Methodists can care for the problem of Singapore and the lower Straits Settlements. If others of us have the power or inclination to share the burden, let us discharge our sense of responsibility by working with and through the agencies of our Methodist brethren. Likewise, in Southwestern Asia, in Arabia and Mesopotamia, the Reformed and Presbyterian churches can handle the problem if we will all support and work with them. It is a huge task we have before us, and there is a rich brotherly spirit among us in its doing. Let us give that spirit ample room for practical and trustful action.

One other great impression with which we have come home is the impression of renewed confidence and hope. There are difficulties enough and the chariot wheels drag heavily, but any one who takes the long view can see more than the difficulties and the hindrances. He can see the sure and steady gains, the strengthening of the energies of Christianity throughout the world, the weakening of the resistant forces, the seepage of the ideas of freedom and justice through the thoughts of men, the ever clearer recognition of our Lord Jesus Christ as the supreme moral judgment and the only adequate Savior of mankind.—Zion's Herald.

A SUPERANNUATE IN GREAT TROUBLE.

By Rev. T. W. Adams.

It is impossible to describe my feelings of distress. I have tried to tell my most intimate friends somewhat of it; but I just can not do it. Words fail me utterly; the loss is too great, the pain is too severe. I have buried scores of wives and tried to comfort the bereaved husbands. My words have always sounded so hollow and impotent. I have honestly endeavored to say something that would comfort and cheer and have at the time felt my insufficiency. In the midst of it all I have been overwhelmed with the thought that I knew almost nothing of the struggle within the burdened soul. Comfort and cheer under such circumstances are secrets too sacred for one of us to share with another. They are secrets that every one must have with God alone. "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him." One must have this blessed secret to have what he needs in the fiery ordeals of life. He must be in tender fellowship with Him who is touched with the feelings of our infirmities. No help can be gotten elsewhere. Vain is the help of man.

I am thoroughly orthodox in this matter. I have gone to this source realizing that it was the only available one, but still my troubled heart refuses to be quieted. Since my precious wife left me I am overwhelmed with a feeling of loneliness from which I can not get any relief whatever. I feel like death alone can bring me any surcease to this great trouble. I have begged God to lift the burden from my aching heart, but it is still there. I have prayed that I might have grace given from above to quiet and give me the mastery of myself. In spite of this I am restless and distressed. Shall I ever be in a normal condition again? I sit and think and cry like a hurt child. I wonder about my home as if dazed. It is getting no better but rather worse. Some of my best friends, one especially who has gone through the same painful ordeal, have tried to give me some cheer by telling me that time is a great healer—that it will not be so severe later on. But how can I hope for the ultimate healing of the wound when it hurts worse after two months of waiting than it did the first day? It seems unreasonable to hope for any mitigation of my distress to come from the passing of time. I stand looking into the future with fear. I shall have to wait with patience and try my best to practice quiet submission. It is going to be hard and fiery, but I am going to do my best trusting God to help me. May I count on the prayers of all of my friends and brethren?

I offer to all, who have written me, my heartfelt thanks for having kindly given messages of sympathy. I have been helped by your words, bearing the assurances of your love and desire to alleviate my suffering. May God bless every one of you! I have preserved all of these good letters, and when I shall get the victory over myself they will be read again. These and all of those written us when our dear son, Favre, left us I shall keep as sacred things to be treasured always. Such kindly ministries can never fail to do good. But for the tender touches and thrills that have their interplay in human life the world would be full of tragic sadness. The divine providence is full of blessedness in its currents that trace their way through all the channels of human life. How wonderful it would be if all of us were ready at all times to respond to the heart throbs of God as He moves among us!

I owe a large debt of gratitude to my brethren of the ministry. They did all they could do to lift the painful burden from my aching heart. Their presence and prayers and sympathy were all that could have been desired. Several years ago my wife requested that on her funeral occasion no other services should be held but such as were suitable to the cemetery. Her wishes were strictly observed. A very large gathering of people on the occasion bore witness to her hold on the heart of the town. Everybody loved her who knew her. Her grave was a bower of beauty and fragrance. The flowers in exquisite wreaths were the tributes paid by her loving friends to the purity and beauty of her life and character. Revs. H. M. Ellis, W. H. Lewis, I. W. Cooper, D.D., J. E. J. Ferguson, H. B. Pruitt and I. H. Anding took part in the impressive services. The tributes paid to the memory of the loved one were beautiful and tenderly sweet. All of these services were real balm to our wounds. The tributes were made by Brothers Ellis, Lewis, and Cooper, and were of rare beauty and sweetness. These services went a long way towards quieting my turbulent grief.

I have preached seven times since my wife left me. I am more comfortable in the pulpit than anywhere else. I get nearer to God and my loved one, and feel more at myself. My brethren are opening their pulpits to me, trying to cheer and strengthen me. What a wonderful place is the pulpit! The joy and blessedness of preaching were never fully realized by me in the years of my strength and vigor. Now that I am not able to do much, and am in great sorrow, I have a passionate yearning to be in the pulpit. Knowing what I do now, and feeling as I do, if I could repeat my ministerial life, what a wonderfully different one it would be! How much more of real enthusiasm and power! If our young men would hear us, who have worn ourselves out in the work, and at the end, with real sorrow confess our consciousness of not having done our best for God and men when we were in our strength as young men, it would add greatly to their usefulness, and the joy of their service.

Invitations to visit them come to me from far and near. My old district co-workers almost without exception are as true as can be to me. It would take me months to get around to see them all. If I were able to do so, I would spend a few days in each one of those happy family circles, renew the associations of the joyous years when we were together in district work. The memories of our joint efforts to build up the Kingdom of God in the Natchez, Brookhaven and Port Gibson Districts are full of joy. To spend a day or two with each one of those loyal loving co-laborers would refresh me greatly. God helping me, I shall do so after a while. I am sure that no presiding elder ever served a finer and nobler body of preachers and preachers' wives. They were the elect of God. When God comes to make up His jewels they will find their day of glory. What would I do in my old age were it not for the happy memories of the years of my active service for the church?

I was greatly burdened last year, when I felt sure that I could not live long, at the thought of leaving my dear wife in her painful bodily afflictions without my presence to care for and comfort her. I am thankful that God heard my prayers. It seems to me far better that I should be left alone to bear the loneliness than that it should fall to her lot. I know that she is in Heaven where she has no suffering. After a while I shall meet her. Until that glad time I must bear what comes to me. It will not be long, I am sure.

Brookhaven, Miss.

TO THE PRESIDING ELDERS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren: I can take care of one young preacher, who really wants to prepare for the ministry at Millsaps College, with my Educational Pledge. If you have a young preacher, preferably on trial, who is in earnest and will apply himself and make good and cannot go to college without assistance, I shall be glad to be put in touch with him.

I will have $270 per year available for this purpose. Of course this will send only one, but the time is short and I am writing to all of you that I might pick the most promising prospect.

Please write all particulars. Your brother,

Columbia, Miss. I. L. ROBERTS.

NEW TESTAMENT PURIFYING.

By Arthur Madison Shaw.

Paper IV.

How should the ordinance of baptism be performed? There are some whose prompt dogmatic answer is, "By immersion, of course." But why by immersion? We have seen that both the birth and burial theories are utterly untenable. Baptism is not a being "born of water," nor is it a "following of Christ through the liquid grave." This leaves us but two arguments to meet.

The first argument is from Locality. "John baptized in the River Jordan: and Jesus 'came straightway up out of the water.'" Of all arguments for immersion, this makes the strongest popular appeal: yet it is, of all arguments, the weakest. At least three Greek prepositions are used to connect John's baptism with the Jordan. The first, (Matt. 3:13), is "epi," which means "at," "by," "to," etc., but never means "in;" Mark (1:9) uses "eis," which means indifferently, "at," "in," or "into;" while the "en" used in verse 5 and elsewhere, means either at, in, by, or about. We cannot therefore, correctly translate "eis" and "en" so as to limit them to the one meaning, in; when the use of "epi," which never means in, to express the same thing, clearly limits their meaning to at, or to. On the other hand, the word "apo" (used of Jesus leaving the water), never means "out of," but should be "from," and it is so rendered in all Revised Versions. "Straightway" means "immediately"—nothing else. So, the Revised Version reads, "And Jesus, when He was baptized, went up straightway from the water."

If, however, these Greek prepositions—which are notoriously flexible in meaning—actually made it certain that Jesus stood within the waters while being baptized, it would only prove that John adhered to the Jewish Law concerning purifyings; which were always, when practicable, performed at running water. If a preposition could settle the point, the fact that the baptisms were "with water" would end the discussion!

Again, we are reminded that "John was baptizing in Aenon, near Salim, because there was much water there" (John 3:23). Why seek a place where there was "much water," if not to immerse? We answer (1) the very name, Aenon, means "springs" or "fountains;" and the Greek here is in the plural—literally "many waters." (2) All large, protracted gatherings in rural communities have to be held where there is "much water." The many fountains of "Aenon," supplying abundant water for drinking, cooking, bathing, and watering live stock—as well as the "living water" which the law required for purifying—would have made it an excellent place for a Methodist camp meeting!

Once more, we are reminded of Philip and the Ethiopian. In Acts, 8:38-39, it is said, "They went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip." This is pointed to as a clear case of immersion! Let us see:

> "They went down both," etc.,
> "and he baptized him:
> "And when they came up," etc.

Neither the going down, nor the coming up, was any part of the baptism: and the record shows nothing as to how the baptism was performed after they were in, or at the water. We have seen that the prepositions prove nothing.

Besides, the Ethiopian could have known about baptism in only one of two ways: (1) through his reading about the Jewish purifications (which were always by affusion), or (2) from Philip's sermon. It was doubtless from the sermon. Philip was preaching from the Old Testament (Isa. 53: 7), and if he followed the Old Testament text as closely as Peter did at Pentecost, or Stephen, in Acts 7, he was compelled to preach sprinkling or pouring; for there is no immersion in the Old Testament. It is true that the 'So shall he sprinkle many nations," just seven verses back from where the enunuch was reading, probably is a mistranslation. Also, possibly it is not! At any rate, Philip could have found nothing suggesting immersiou within the Bible of his day: but there was abundance of sprinkling!

Let me close this paper with a side-light on these pretended immuersions—by way of digression. If to baptize means to immerse or submerge the entire body in water, who performs the baptism? The immersionist will usually answer, "A duly ordained minister," etc. He does no such thing! The candidate himself immerses the lower half or two-thirds of his body! He takes that part in, and brings it out!

If minister and candidate "go down both into the water," and both "come up out of" it, then the preacher baptizes only the upper part! Why not baptize the upper part by pouring, without requiring the candidate, who is unordained, to baptize the lower half of himself?

FROM THE PELICAN PINES.

By Rev. S. A. Steel, D.D.

Pearson, the Mansfield Methodist pastor, is a regular "stem-winder," to revive an old phrase. He is a fiery little son of thunder, and no grass grows where his Essex runs. His preaching strikes a popular level, and the fish like his bait. He has been very successful in uniting a somewhat disturbed church, and rekindling the flagging fire of old-time religion in many hearts that were growing cold. Now and then he puts in a bit of experience that gives an "India relish" flavor to his thought. For instance he told us Sunday that he started as a poor boy, with only one book, and that a life of Lincoln! I thought to myself, if the Lord can take a fellow with such a start, and make a preacher out of him, and a good one like Pearson, nobody need despair. I have no use for Lincoln, and the more I study him, the less I find to admire about him. And I have a whole lot of literature about him. The persistent propaganda of the North for the past sixty years has created a mythical Lincoln, as uulike the real man as a pelican is like an archangel. By suppressing the truth, and giving free rein to sectional prejudice, the Northern writers have succeeded in converting a cunning and unscrupulous politician into an ideal great man. No Lincoln in mine, if you please; but in spite of such a start, the Lord did a good work when his grace saved the orphan Virginia boy, and made a Methodist preacher out of him. And Bishop McMurry atoned for some errors when he induced him to come to Mansfield. He is doing well.

I don't see much of President Bobbitt, but the college crowns the hill on which it has sat like a queen for nearly seventy years, and the prospect now is that its rooms will again be full to overflowing. Girls are safe in Bobbitt's care. He is wide-awake and up-to-date, but holds firmly to the ideals that have made Mansfield College a nursery of cultured womanhood. Quite a number of improvements have been made in the way of new buildings and additional comforts, and only the lack of money holds back others that would greatly enlarge the sphere of college activities. The American idea of bigness has been one of the chief defects of our educational work for the past fifty years. The aim has been big endowments, big enrollments, big buildings, and everything big; but the best education is to be had in the "small college." A few years ago I heard a commencement address by a distinguished professor from the Chicago University. He began by congratulating the students on the superior advantage they had enjoyed in being in a "small college." He said he lectured every week to a "class" that numbered above a thousand students. He had no personal touch with them, and missed the opportunity to impress them as individuals. He dealt with them in the mass. He put the limit at which the average teacher could wield a personal influence on his pupils at 200. That was the opinion of "an expert," and we are great now on "experts." I am no expert, but I can see the wisdom of the statement. I think a hundred rosy girls would fill Bobbitt's pretty college full; and Bobbitt believes in God, and tries to lead his girls in the highway of holiness. So send them on.

The Baptists have just held their annual tabernacle meeting. The pastor, Rev. Harmon Holcombe, did the preaching. I have not learned the numerical result, but Holcombe is a successful evangelist as well as a steam-engine in his pastoral work. He has done a great work here: built a big tabernacle; built a large annex to his church, containing all the up-to-date facilities, swimming tank, game rooms, social rooms, and so on; and is now enlarging his church. Mansfield is a strongly Baptist town. We all have to get a permit from the Baptists to run our business; but they are a clever lot of deep-water saints.

Brother Holcombe is, like most of the Baptist preachers that I know, a strong advocate of the premillennial second coming of Christ. He preached on it every afternoon of his meeting, and has the community stirred up on the subject. I don't believe the world is getting worse, and that is one of the main things the premillennialists believe. You may take it any way you please, and it is a better world than it was when I first knew it. History is a great stabilizer of faith and preserves us from becoming victims of many fads and fancies. It completely refutes the Second Coming doctrines, for the believers in that theory have set time after time for it to happen, only to be obliged to admit their mistake.

I sent the manuscript of my story of HOME LIFE IN DIXIE DURING THE WAR to a leading New York publisher. He writes me that he and his literary advisers think it a fine work, and he wants to publish it; but he wants my check for $1200 as a starter. When I read that I just leaned back in my chair, and whistled "The Wearing of the Green!" I don't know why I whistled, or why I whistled "The Wearing of the Green," unless it was an unconscious reversion to a habit of childhood to whistle when going by a graveyard in the moonlight, and the bubbling up of my Celtic nature, for like Lloyd George, I am Celtic-Saxon by blood. But the idea of my sending a check for $1200! But I am glad to get the opinion of the New York "experts" on my story. I am going to try the subscription plan, and see if I can get it printed that way. I must get 1000 subscribers. The book will cost $2. If you want it, and want to help a superannuated preacher to help himself, send me your name as a subscriber. Do not send the money. If I can get the requisite number, I will call for it. The book will be full of pep, for who can recall the time of 1860-1865 without feeling the blood leap faster in the veins! I tell how I became a rebel from head to heel (by the way, I am one yet), how I smuggled medicines through the Yankee lines at Memphis, how I beat Sherman to the mill, though he got there too, after me; and how I met General Grant, how I tackled a gunboat, and sundry and various adventures and escapes from bears and panthers and blue-coats, enough to make the hair rise on a bald head!

I think it will be a good joke on old father Time, going around with his sharp scythe on his shoulder seeing who is ripe to be mowed down, if I can double back on my track, and make the story of my boyhood carry me in my age; keep the pot "bilin'" with the salvage of Lincoln's "ruthless war," and lean back in my easy chair in the backyard of Sister Steel's cozy cottage, stick my feet high up, and "let the wide world wag as it will," while "I'll be gay and happy still." No, there is nothing offensive in it to any one. Many of the stories, in the form of a lecture, have been told 30 times in Chicago and vicinity, and all over the North. I'll warrant you will not go to sleep when you read these tales of the plantation in war times, and the darkies singing "Swing low, sweet chariot," while the thunder of the guns in the distance broke up the meeting! Send on your name.

Wynn came to see me the other day. He is a presiding elder who remembers the "forgotten man"—a polished, cultured Christian gentleman, whom it is always a pleasure to meet.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The summer months have been "seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." Many gracious revivals have been held and new life has been brought to the churches. It has been our privilege to be in a good meeting with Brother J. T. McVey, at Peason, La. This is a saw mill town in Sabine Parish. This place went "over the top" on their Educational subscription. Now we are anxious to see all the pledges paid up. This is sometimes hard to do if there has been much moving around.

The prospects for the fall season seem to be good. Prosperity is not far ahead of us. Collections ought to be splendid from now on. The second payment on our pledges will be due November 1. Those who can, ought to pay up with regular payments. It will be easier to pay as you have it, rather than wait for the favorable season.

Both colleges, Centenary and Mansfield, are preparing for the largest attendance in their history. The main domitory on Centenary campus is undergoing extensive repairs and readjustments for more rooms to take care of the boys. A large number of boys are now in training at the Summer Camp at Mena, Ark. When they come back for the opening, they will give a good account of themselves.

This is the season when boys and girls are turning towards college. Let our preachers and people call attention to the merits of both our schools. Youth is the period of vision, of glorious illusions, of chivalry, of optimism. It should be guided into paths of righteousness, altruism and broad outlook. Education is by its very nature forward-facing. It aims to prepare human beings for life. The measure of its success will always be the understanding which it has of the terms human being and life. Christian Education aims to reach the depths of the nature of our youth and turn them into right channels.

There is a striking passage in The Marble Faun in which Hawthorne suggests the idea that the task of the sculptor is not, by carving, to impress a figure upon the marble, but rather, by the touch of genius, to set free the glorious form that the cold grasp of the stone imprisons. Hence, our ideal of Christian education is a spiritual carving into the likeness of Him who is crowned within us the "Hope of Glory." ALBERT S. LUTZ,

Conference Secretary of Education.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION GETS BUSY.

The educational interests of the church are highly important just now because of the achievements and status of the Christian Education Movement, which has already raised $2,000,000 in cash for the colleges, and has about eight times as much yet to collect.

The General Conference acted wisely when it turned the Christian Education Movement over to the Board of Education. Immediately after General Conference, the Board got busy. It elected as its President a man who is one of our wisest educational statesmen, Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon. And at a recent meeting it adopted most far-reaching policies.

The Board decided that the collection of the Christian Education pledges is the immediate matter of supreme moment, and to this one thing much attention will be given. But it will be accomplished without the use of the "high pressure" methods which were necessary in the financial "drive."

The Board did not raise the cry, "back to normalcy;" for normalcy is not "back," but forward. It is a long way in advance of 1918. But the Board did retrench considerably.

For example, steps were taken looking to the consolidation of certain Conference offices with a view to materially reducing expenses. This action alone is expected to save the church many, many thousands of dollars, without sacrificing any efficiency.

Then the publicity program was considerably slackened—at a great saving of cash.

And the "spiritual cultivation," that is, the propaganda in the interest of the family altar, tithing, and the prayer meeting, went over to and was merged with existing agencies.

The Board did not, however, go wild on retrenchment. It realized that we are in a new day an must stay in it or get off the map. So it took a far look and set out upon the long trail with giant strides.

It declared that every advantage secured by the Christian Education Movement should be pushed, especially in the matter of collections, because this is of immediate importance—a sort of now-or-never matter. But in the case of other interests fundamental activity was likewise started.

For example, the old "Department of Ministerial Supply and Training" was enlarged into an all-inclusive "Department of Life Service," and instructed to take the field and recruit volunteers for all the forms of Christian activity. And not only to recruit, for almost every agency, board, and committee in the church has been "recruiting" for time out of mind. But the supply kept on diminishing, nevertheless. The new department is to educate as well as to recruit. Some funds are available now to assist students in securing an adequate preparation.

Then the Board took a really serious view of the problem of religious education in the church.

One of the most popular objectives of the Christian Education Movement provided for promoting the cause of religious education by bringing about a closer and more effective co-operation between our institutions of learning and the Sunday school, and by establishing strong departments of religious education in our colleges and universities.

This is no child's play. Indeed, nothing more difficult has ever been undertaken by the church.

The Movement involves at least three elements, each of which is big enough to occupy the energies of a strong organization: First, teaching morals and religion in the public schools; second, teaching morals, religion and efficiency in Christian service to the students at State and private colleges and universities; third, endowing, manning, and working out curricula for and supervising departments of religious education in our own colleges and universities—departments of instruction which will be on a par, in the minds of both authorities and students, with departments of history or science.

Just give a thought to either phase of the problem, and you'll soon see what a task it is.

The Board at its last meeting turned the work of this new department over to the General Secretary, Dr. Stonewall Anderson, temporarily. In the meantime a committee is looking for another man—the best in the nation, if he can be found and secured.

Now, doesn't such a policy as this command your admiration, your support? It cannot be carried out unless all Methodists are behind it—behind it in sympathy and with purse.

GENERAL CONFERENCE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

NOTES FROM EUROPE.

By Rev. Walt Holcomb, General Evangelist, Cartersville, Georgia.

I.

This is my second trip to Europe. We are sailing northward from Montreal, and will skirt the coasts of Newfoundland and Labrador. The former voyage was from New York, and we headed southward and entered the warm Gulf Stream. Then we basked in the sunshine on the decks, while now we are hugging the radiators in the cabins.

Leaving Quebec, the St. Lawrence River is ever widening and deepening. The verdant banks are seemingly receding, while the billowy waves are engulfing and enfolding us. Little hamlets are hedged in the ravines of the rounded mountains. The land and the sea have kissed and the mists have veiled the scene; and now no more land but the whirling waters

We have passed under the world's greatest cantilever bridge, which under process of erection, fell twice under its own weight, but now is one of the engineering wonders of the world.

The Falls of Montgomery sweep over the boulders and in the distance look like hanging and hovering clouds, and in the twilight appeared like an embanked iceberg. Near here the Catholics have their Canadian Mecca, where the lame, blind and maimed come for healing and health.

As we leave the mouth of the Gulf of St. Lawrence we are being encircled by a settling fog. As we enter the open ocean, it is even more dense. The fog is the foe of the seaman. Our boat is slowing down. Our engine is dead and we drift, as it is too dangerous to drive ahead. It reminds one of the silence when the human heart stops and we are in the presence of death.

Owing to fog and icebergs, our ship has changed her course from the Belle Isle Straits, which take us between the coasts of Newfoundland and Labrador, to the Cape Race route, the extreme southern point of New Foundland.

The seaman can sense, scent and smell an iceberg. Just as daylight is breaking, a seaman announces the appearance of icebergs. Passengers do not take time to dress, but rush to the port holes and decks, shivering under kimonos and bath robes, to see the snowy white, floating mountains of the sea in their endless search for the melting-pot of the gulf. We sailed majestically on between the white sentinels of the sea.

Aroused by shrill whistles, we see the Empress of France darting out of the fog like a phantom ship near enough to pitch a brick aboard or to hear the screams of excited passengers. As far as our lives are concerned, perhaps a miss was as good as a mile, but we wish the ships had not become so familiar on such short notice.

Beyond mid-ocean the clouds cleared and the sun shone. The sea gulls greet us from the other side. We are viewing the land of the Emerald Isle, while being carried by the rough, choppy waves of the Irish coast, so typical of the eternal unrest as manifested in Dublin to-day.

It is Sunday morning and the service in the saloon suffering from lack of attendance, for passengers have sighted the shores of Scotland and the decks are crowded with smiling, laughing, talking pilgrims, reminding one of the deserted churches on Sunday morning for the thrill of the automobile drive and the golf links.

We caught the tide on the River Clyde and enjoyed one of the scenic wonders of the world. Greetings: "My ain Countrie." From Glasgow a hurried trip through Bonnie Scotland into Old England to London, a world city. From thence to the English Channel across to Ostend, the famous resort port of Belgium, the Little Land of the Brave.

London, England.

THE "OLD GOSPEL."

We do not believe that we can save men's souls by act of Parliament; we do not believe that we can make man righteous by making him rich; we do not believe that the abolition of the slum means the abolition of sin; but we do believe that the Lord himself lays upon his Church to-day the tremendous task of social regeneration with all that it implies. We believe as firmly as ever we did in individual religion, in the conscious and full communion of man with his God. We also believe that whenever the Lord saves a man or a boy he means them to begin at once in His name to make a better world. This is the "old gospel," the gospel which our fathers preached and which is heard, we believe, in our Methodist pulpits to-day.—Christian Guardian, Toronto.

FULFILLMENT.

A maiden prayed: "God make me beautiful,
Endow me with sueh fairness that the world
Shall see and own me fair. O grant me power
Great as Egypt's queen, that men, all men,
Shall call me beautiful beyond compare."

The woman prayed: "God give me power of song;
A voice to thrill and hold the hearts of men,
And make them subjects—slaves of eaeh caprice;
For fires that rage within I'd find a vent
In song. Oh grant me, God, the power of song."

And God seemed not to hear, but gave her life
To live. To maid and woman sorrows fell
That filled each day and night with pain, until
Of all was left her but a woman's soul,
That yet had learned its lesson well; then came

A beauty in her face unknown, undreamed;
So great her power she feared its wrong appliance
And prayed each day for light and strength,
And music stole into her voice, deep notes
That thrilled men's lives and stirred weak souls to act;
And her power was great beyond compare.
Thus God inscrutable doth answer prayer.

OLD BILL TESTIFIES.

A court of justice was in session in the hills of the West Coast country one hot afternoon in July. Flies droned about the bench, and the justice, who in his private capacity was the village blacksmith, brushed the insects good-naturedly from his bald head in the intervals between naps. The other functionaries of the court—the village constable and a young man from the general store, who had been drafted to keep a record of the proceedings, frankly dozed. The court room was the blacksmith shop. The blacksmith sat in a chair set upon a book. The reporter occupied a stool, his book on his knees. The constable straddled a nail keg, his back to the dingy wall. Several private citizens, called to the scene by the unwonted prospect of a trial, stood about or sprawled in the shade of the trees in the street. Two chairs stood before the bench. Presently a man and a young girl appeared in the big doorway, and the court bustled into action.

"Howdy, Jim," called the justice, cordially. "Howdy, Maggie. Sit down. Hot, huh?"

The man mumbled an unintelligible response and sat down, mopping his face with his shirt sleeve. The girl, a half frightened smile upon her face, courtesied.

The court was called to order. The charge against the man was read.

"Jim," said the justice, "you've heard the charge against you. What have you got to say for yourself?"

"Only this"—the man rose to his feet and cast a scowling look about him—"the whole thing's a trumped-up lie. It's spite work on the part of somebody, that's what it is."

"Then, I reckon, you plead not guilty."

"I surely do."

"All right. The complaint says you abused your horse—licked him—worked him without water—let him stand hitched to a plow in the field for two hours while you snoozed in the shade. 'Taint so, huh?"

"'Taint so."

"Never licked him, huh?"

"Not enough to hurt him."

The court pondered. "Did you drive old Bill in to-day, Jim?"

"Yes."

"Tied outside, is he?"

"Yes."

"Henry"—to the constable—"bring in the witness. Drive him right in, buggy and all."

Old Bill, meager of flesh and sightless of one eye, was presently in court. He stood in an attitude of dejection, half-heartedly switching with his tail.

The justice suddenly addressed the girl. "Maggie, do you like horses?"

The girl glanced timidly at her father, then nodded.

"Does your mother like 'em?"

Again she nodded.

"Where is your mother to-day?"

"At home."

"What doing?"

"Washing."

"Tub?"

"No, a machine."

"Heard you had one. What did your pa say when he took the machine home to your ma?"

The child hesitated and looked at her father, who stared doggedly at the floor.

"He said—he said the merciful man is merciful to his b-beast."

"Hm-m—heard he said it." The justice drew an apple from his pocket and tossed it to the girl. "Give that to old Bill, Maggie."

The girl obeyed. After the apple was disposed of, the horse nibbled affectionately at her shoulder, and she patted him on the neck.

"Sit down, Maggie." Another apple was brought forth. "Jim, give this to old Bill."

The man did not move.

"Jim," thundered the court, "give this to your horse."

The man stood up sullenly, snatched the apple and held it toward the animal. The horse's ears flattened instantly, and he backed away. Finally, the apple being forced into his mouth, he mumbled it with his lips and let the pieces fall to the floor.

"Sit down, Jim. You're guilty. Old Bill's testimony's about as conclusive as any I ever saw. For good honest testimony, give me a horse! What you got to say before the court pronounces judgment on you?"

"Nothing."

"Good enough. In your place, I wouldn't either. I'm going to fine you, Jim—can't help it. But I ain't going to compel you to pay the fine—till next time, and I'm thinking there won't be any next time. That was a beautiful sentiment you uttered when you took the washing machine home, but it wasn't placed quite proper. I ain't saying you didn't intend it all right, and that it don't do you credit. It does. But ain't you a bit mixed, Jim? You didn't mean that your wife was a beast, did you?"

"No."

"'Course not; I knew you didn't. But, Jim, old Bill is a beast, and that sentiment of yours meets his case fine. He's a good old horse. I ought to know, for I've shod him the last ten years. This court's going to watch over the old fellow from this on. You know, I've got a sort of a—a sort of a what you might call a proprietary interest in him, and—"

"I'm going to pay you something."

"Don't worry about that, Jim. Give the old horse a fair shake, and you'll find money will come in more plentiful. Now you and Maggie drive home and help mother with the washing. Court's adjourned."

The man and the girl stood up. The justice stepped down from the bench, and, placing a brawny arm about the girl, patted the man on the shoulder.

"Let Maggie boss the old horse, Jim," he whispered.

The man raised his face. "All right," he said. It sounded like a growl, but his eyes, as they shifted to his little daughter, suddenly filled with tears.—D. H. Talmadge, in Our Dumb Animals.

"TIME OUT."

Indeed, It Is Not.

"Johnny," said the teacher, "if coal is selling at $20 a ton and you pay your dealer $80, how many tons will he bring you?"

"A little over three tons, ma'am," said Johnny promptly.

"Why, Johnny, that isn't right," said the teacher.

"No, ma'am, I know it ain't," said Johnny, "but they all do it."—Selected.

Quoting Scripture.

One pickaninny had been taught to recite the line from the Master, "It is I; be not afraid."

When the little fellow came upon the platform, where he was to do his part, he was ashy with stage fright, but with his small voice trembling and full of tears, he managed to say:

"'Tain't nobody but me. Don't git skeared."—Selected.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:

Louisiana Conference—Rev. J. F. Foster, Rev. S. J. Davies, Rev. C. C. Miller.

Mississippi Conference—Rev. J. T. Leggett, Rev. J. R. Jones, Rev. W. H. Saunders.

North Mississippi Conference—Rev. J. H. Felts, Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, Rev. J. W. Dorman.

DIRECTIONS.

All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Printed Lab.l on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after three or four weeks, notify us, and we will mske it right.

Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

During the summer months the Management of the Advocate have not pushed collections, but now, with September at hand and the Annual Meeting of the Publishing Committee to be held in October, it is quite desirable that all past-due subscriptions be paid up to date.

Kindly notice the little blue or pink address label pasted on your paper and pay for your paper in full. Pastors are requested to push the campaign for collections and new subscriptions.

Many have done well—a few very well—but many pledges for new subscriptions made at Conference have not been met.

We have been forced to borrow funds for summer expenses, but will be in good shape when all pay up.

Cordially,

JNO. F. FOSTER, Chairman,
Publishing Committee.

HOW THE CONFERENCES STAND.

To date the payments on individual pledges to the Centenary total $13,272,259.70. These figures represent only a small increase as compared with the total of June 1, but since that date we have been coming through the dull season, and it is not surprising that the monthly gains have not kept pace with those of the early months of the present year. With the coming of better times, there is the prospect of larger increases. This must be the record, or the various enterprises supported by the Centenary will suffer serious hurt. September receipts should go far beyond the figures of any previous month of the present year. We believe that this will be the record. Our people with few exceptions will not repudiate their Centenary pledges. It has not been easy to pay these obligations during the past eighteen months, but the way looks brighter ahead. Some extra effort on the part of the preachers, Centenary treasurers, and others interested in the great enterprises of the Kingdom, will make September the banner month of 1922 in Centenary giving. A record such as this will hearten the entire church and will give the guarantee that our missionary work in every field will go forward according to the Centenary plan.

In Our Own Territory.

Louisiana Conference—Pledged, $811,579; paid to date, $318,668; balance due this date, $330,595; per cent due to date, .80; per cent paid to date, .39.

Mississippi Conference—Pledged, $698,529; paid to date, $347,413; balance due this date, $211,410; per cent due to date, .80; per cent paid to date, .49.

North Mississippi Conference—Pledged, $845,772; paid to date, $311,631; balance due this date, $365,007; per cent due to date, .80; per cent paid to date, .37.

The figures showing balance due do not represent amount of total pledge yet unpaid, but balance of amount now due. We believe that our people will agree that this is not such a showing as ought to be made, and as can be made. Let's make the effort during the next few weeks to present a record worthy of our church and Conferences.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

According to a press report, Gipsy Smith, Jr., will make his bome at Jackson, Miss.

Rev. E. S. Lewis, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Greenville, Miss., has been enjoying a vacation with his family at Biloxi, Miss.

Professor C. A. Bowen, of Millsaps College, after a summer spent in study at Northwestern University, is back home, ready for the work of the fall.

We have the following reports of prayer meeting attendance last week: Algiers, Rev. C. C. Wier, pastor, 42; Pleasant Hill, La., Rev. E. L. Cargill, pastor, 36.

We thank Mr. J. H. Fleming, of Crandall, Miss., for sending us six subscriptions (four of them for six months), and Rev. Chas. E. McLean, of Baton Rouge, La., for sending us two.

Rev. Otto Porter, of the Mississippi Conference, is taking the theological course in Emory University. He expects to complete the work for the Bachelor of Divinity in June, 1923.

Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt, pastor of the Louisiana Avenue Methodist Church, this city, assisted Rev. W. J. Porter in a fine meeting at Columbia, La., last week. There were nine additions to the membership of the church.

According to an exchange, the whole world last year contributed $56,000,000 for foreign missions. Of this amount the United States contributed $41,000,000, and of the $41,000,000, Methodist churches contributed $19,000,000.

Seven hundred delegates attended the Christian Endeavor Institute of Massachusetts at East Northfield last week. A feature of the gathering was the appearance on the platform of Dr. Francis E. Clark, the founder of the Society.

Rev. S. J. McLean, who has been pastor of the Calhoun charge, Louisiana Conference, was recently released from that work in order that he might take his son to San Antonio, Texas, for his health. He is now serving as pastor of the church at Poteet, Texas.

"The Awakening of Stephen Standback," the prize winner in the Board of Church Extension story contest, written by Rev. H. H. Smith, of the Virginia Conference, has been issued by the Board of Church Extension in a beautifully printed pamphlet. It is an interesting story.

This good word comes from Rev. H. M. Ellis, presiding elder of the Brookhaven District, Mississippi Conference: "The work on the district is progressing in a satisfactory way. All the pastors are hard at work. There have been fine revivals in most charges and many conversions and additions to the church."

Rev. and Mrs. J. M. Wyatt, of Lula, Miss., are enjoying a month's vacation at Eureka Springs, Ark., given them by the fine people whom they serve. A post card greeting from Brother and Sister Wyatt brought a breath of fine mountain air to the Advocate office a few days ago.

Rotary Clubs all over North America, numbering 85,000 live-wire business men, are engaged in a nation-wide campaign to give every crippled boy and girl in this country a new chance. It is estimated that over 300,000 crippled children will be aided in this way without cost to the child.

Rev. J. B. Williams, presiding elder of the Lake Charles District, Louisiana Conference, in sending us the announcement for his fourth round of quarterly conferences, says that indications now are that the district will make a good report at the end of the year—every preacher is in his place and hard at work.

Mr. James Lee, president of the Palmer Creek Camp Meeting Association, requests us to announce that the annual camp meeting will begin on Friday, September 1, and continue ten days. A large attendance is expected. All visiting preachers will be entertained free of charge. The camp ground is near Saucier, Miss.

Rev. R. G. Moore, after four years of service as professor in Soochow University, Soochow, China, is enjoying a furlough at home, his present address being Holly Springs, Miss. Professor Moore has already delivered several addresses on our work in China, and he will doubtless continue to render fine service in this way while in the home land.

Dr. S. A. Steel, "Knight of the Pelican Pines," honored the Advocate office with a call on Friday of last week. He was passing through the city en route to Wiggins, Miss., where he was going to deliver a series of addresses on invitation of the pastor, Rev. J. F. Campbell. From Wiggins, Dr. Steel will go to Tyler, Texas, for a series of addresses.

Robert Ham, one of the 1922 graduates of the Durant (Miss.) High School, has been awarded the scholarship offered by Millsaps College to a limited number of high school graduates who meet certain requirements as to scholarship and other points. Professor G. R. Bennet, the superintendent of the schools of Durant, is himself a graduate of Millsaps College.

A personal letter from Bishop Hoyt M. Dobbs, written from Rio de Janciro on August 1, gives an interesting account of the work in our South American field. It is very easy to see that the Bishop is an exceedingly busy man. We have the promise of a communication for publication on his return to the States. We are sure it will be interesting and informative reading.

Rev. Frank Collins, who has been serving as pastor of the Methodist church at McDonoghville, La., since the death of Rev. J. D. Harper, left this week for El Paso, Texas, where he goes under appointment of the Board of Missions to engage in the Mexican mission work. The presiding elder of the New Orleans District, Rev. J. G. Snelling, will provide a pastor for McDonoghville until Conference.

Rev. R. T. Hollingsworth and wife, of Jackson, Miss., spent several days last week in New Orleans, visiting Mrs. Hollingsworth's brother, Rev. J. A. Alford, pastor of the Second Methodist Church. Brother Hollingsworth is a recent graduate of Millsaps College, and is serving now as junior pastor of Millsaps Memorial Church. Mrs. Hollingsworth is secretary to the manager of the Mississippi Methodist Orphans' Home. Brother Hollingsworth paid an appreciated call at the Advocate office while in the city.

The Western Methodist Assembly Board, which has charge of the development of a great gathering place for Methodists west of the Mississippi River, has been formally incorporated under the laws of Arkansas, and the assembly grounds near Fayetteville have been given the euphonious name, Mount Sequoyah. This is the name of a great Cherokee chief, who led his people west, gave them an alphabet, and is supposed to have camped on the very spot chosen for the assembly grounds. The improvement of the grounds is rapidly going forward.

The Methodist churches of Meridian, Miss., held a memorial service in honor of the late Miss Belle Bennett at Central Methodist Church on Thursday afternoon, August 17. The meeting was presided over by Mrs. R. O. Dobson, president of the City Mission Board, and the program consisted of music, prayer, Scripture reading, and addresses. The following took part: Mrs. Dobson, Mrs. J. H. Rush, Mrs. I. L. Peebles, Mrs. S. H. McGraw, Mrs. J. H. Muir, Mrs. Percy Johnston, Mrs. A. C. Bryan, Mrs. Joseph Lihhy, Miss Ormond, Miss Palmore, and Rev. Paul D. Hardin.

Mrs. George W. Griffin announce the marriage of her daughter, Margaret Eila, to Mr. Sam B. Dunbar, at Alexandria, La., on August 24. Mr. Dunbar is president of the great Wesleyan Bihle Class of the First Methodist Church, New Orleans, and Miss Griffin was formerly connected with the office of the Centenary Secretary-Treasurer for Louisiana. This is a fine young couple, and the Advocate wishes them every possible happiness throughout life. They will make their home in New Orleans.

The following note from Rev. H. T. Cunningham, of Dilley, Texas, will bring sorrow to many friends in Mississippi: "Our precious daughter, Elizabeth, born at Vaiden, Miss., twenty-one years ago, passed away at Kenney's Sanitarium, San Antonio, early Saturday morning, August 19, and was buried at Dilley on Sunday afternoon, August 20. A sweet, unselfish Christian spirit, beautiful in person and character, has gone from us and left our hearts torn and bleeding. We want the prayers of our friends." Our deepest sympathy goes out to Brother Cunningham and his family in their great bereavement.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. S. P. Grant, of Oak Ridge, Miss., was the scene recently of a very happy family reunion. For several years Mrs. F. M. Williams, widow of the late Rev. F. M. Williams, of the Mississippi Conference, has made her home with her daughter, Mrs. Grant. She has recently celebrated her ninety-first birthday. Those attending the reunion were all her children—Rev. W. M. Williams, of Purvis, Miss., Mrs. W. C. Wetherbee, of Waynesboro, Miss., Mrs. J. W. Alexander, of Clifton, La., and Mrs. A. B. Kling, of Satartia, Miss. Other relatives present were a granddaughter, Mrs. E. L. Calhoun, and two great-granddaughters, Misses Janice and Martha Calhoun, of Mt. Olive, Miss., and a son-in-law, Mr. A. B. Kling, of Satartia, Miss. Few women have lived a life of greater usefulness or of more varied experiences than Mrs. Williams. For sixty-four years she was the wife of an itinerant Methodist preacher, with whom she shared equally the hardships and joys of the itinerant life. She is one of the heroines of the gospel in Mississippi.

"The Methodist Superintendent and His Helpers" for September is off of the press and contains many articles which will he found interesting and helpful to pastors, superintendents, and other general officers of the Sunday school. The following are a few of the thirty brief articles contained in this twenty-four page periodical: The Superintendent's Calendar for September; Electing Officers and Teachers; A Course of Study for Superintendents; Observing Promotion Day; Changes in the Names of Quarterlies; Making Best Use of the Sunday School Hour in the One-Room Church; A Methodist Drill; Duties of Superintendents; The Graded Lessons in the Small School; Why Superintendents Need the Organized Class; Are You a Friend or a Fraud? Uncle Billy at the Workers' Council; Opening Services for the Sunday School for September. This little publication is issued by our Methodist Publishing House, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn. It sells for the nominal price of twenty-five cents a year in single subscriptions, or $1 will buy five copies to one address each month for a year. Mr. M. W. Brahham, Superintendent of the Department of Sunday School Administration for our General Sunday School Board, is the editor and welcomes brief accounts of happenings in Sunday schools over the entire church.

CORRECTIONS—BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT.

The presiding elder of the Brookhaven District, Rev. H. M. Ellis, requests us to call attention to the fact that the third quarterly conference for the Scotland circuit will he held at Galiatia, Sept. 2, 3 (Saturday and Sunday), and the conference for Summit and Topisaw will be held at Summit, Sept. 3, 4 (Sunday night and Monday night). These are corrections of the dates as they appeared in the published announcements of the third round.

TEACHER-TRAINING PLANS AT MILLSAPS.

The department of Religious Education at Millsaps College has perfected plans for the fall term which will bring the opportunity of getting courses in teacher-training to every student. It is the purpose of the college to minister to the need which faces the local church in the matter of trained workers. The pastors and Sunday school workers, through the supporting Conferences, can be of great help to us in achieving this purpose if they urge upon the young people who go from their communities the value of getting into one of these teacher-training classes when they come to college. Millsaps College hopes to find during the first few weeks of the coming session a large number of students desirous of taking full advantage of the opportunities offered them along this line.

HUMOR IN THE PULPIT.

There are a good many people who cherish the belief that somehow or other religion and humor cannot be made to agree. To them religion and solemnity are almost synonymous. There is a very close relationship between these people and the old lady who is reputed to have arisen at a camp meeting and said, "I think I must have religion, for I feel powerful solemn." But this lady, if she ever existed, which we are inclined to doubt, was not much further astray than are some of those who to-day insist that the church is desecrated, and the pulpit disgraced, hy the use of humor. It is useless to plead that there may be such a thing as sanctified humor, for with these people such a thing is about as reasonable as sanctified sin. They do not believe that a congregation can laugh and retain its sense of the presence of God.

This idea harks back to the far-distant past when life was a most strenuous thing and any relaxation, either in the shape of recreation or mirth was held to be sinful. But while life is still strenuous enough, we have learned that it has a proper place for both recreation and amusement. Medical science to-day is a unit upon the value of recretiontion to the bodies and minds of men, and the religious thinkers of to-day, and the majority of evangelistic workers, are coming to see that humor has a distinct value in the delivering of the message of the gospel.

One of the greatest defects in the presentation of the gospel is the making it unnaturally solemn, and there seems to be a distinct, and very healthful, recoil amongst our people from the conception of a religion that is too good for anything but church, and a church that is too good for anything but the utmost solemnity. The instincts of the race are truer than the ecclesiastical instinct, and they demand a very human Christianity, one that is not too good for daily life, nor too hallowed for the use of common humanity. And humor, wisely used, helps to make the multitude feel at home with the speaker and serves to introduce his message to them as one that is blessedly human. It surprises some men to discover that it is not a sin to laugh, and they are delighted to find that the religion of Jesus does not consist chiefly in singing solemn psalms and making long prayers. And the preacher who has a keen sense of humor should he thankful for it and should consecrate it to the service of his Master.

But there is the other side to this. If the preacher forgets his chief message and aims merely at amusing the people, his usefulness as a preacher of the gospel will not last long, and this is specially true if he has no native humor, hut simply the forced kind. Only last week we read of one such who, at the end of his second year, was asked to resign, and when he protested and wanted to know the reason, the spokesman of the committee, which had waited upon him, told him that they "were sick and tired of the almanac stories" he had been giving them, and they wanted a change. They appreciated humor, but not that kind of humor. And yet we suppose it would be exceedingly difficult to show that brother just wherein his humor differed from the acceptable and useful kind. In any case, it hindered his message and the use of such humor should be abandoned.

But while we recognize this we should not allow it to deter us from approving the genial, homely, yet effective humor which relieves tension, places the speaker in close touch with his audience, helps them to feel that the preacher is speaking to them on a familiar plane, and makes them much more ready to receive the truth at his hand.—Christian Guardian.

MOTHER.

Long before we came into the world we had a friend who labored long hours making the little clothes that we were to wear and who fondled each garment tenderly in anticipation of our arrival. That was mother.

Through the year of babyhood, through days of peevishness and nights of illness, we were guarded jealously and carefully by a friend. That was mother.

There was one who taught us to walk, who taught us to talk, and who taught us to pray at her knee. That was mother.

Through childhood's happy days we carried our tales of joy and woe to one who understood, to one who joined with us in our pleasures and soothed us with caresses when we were hurt. That was mother.

And on through school days there was one who helped us with our lessons, who made excuses for us if we failed to tee the mark, who privately admonished us for our pranks and publicly extolled us for our virtues. That was mother.

Into the classroom at college or into the countingroom of business there was one who followed us in spirit and eagerly awaited our return at night. That was mother.

Away from home there was one who always thought of us, whose nightly prayer was for our safety, whose daily hope was for our return. That was mother.

At home there was one who waited up for us, who fended us from unseen dangers, who suffered for us when we did wrong. That was mother.

Always at the end of the long journey, in good health or bad, in prosperity or adversity, there was one to meet us and take us to her bosom. That was mother.—Selected.

THE TIME TO ACT.

O God, when the heart is warmest,
And the head is clearest,
Give me to act,
To turn the purposes thou formest
Into fact.
O God, when what is dearest
Seems most dear,
And the path before lies straight,
With neither Chance nor Fate
In my career—
Then let me act. The wicket gate
In sight, let me not wait, not wait!

—John Jay Chapman.

More Than Conquerors: All things work together for good to them that love God. If God be for us, who can be against us? Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us.—Romans 8:28, 31, 35, 37.

MRS. SARAH ANN FORD, of Columbia, Miss., widow of Joseph M. Ford, was born in Washington Parish, Louisiana, November 18, 1837, and died August 5, 1922. Her parents were Daniel R. Warren and Martha C. Warren. Sarah Ann Ford was married on October 15, 1857, to Joseph M. Ford, son of Judge Ebenezer Ford, of Marion County, Mississippi. To them were born seven children, three sons and four daughters. Two sons and three daughters lived to be grown. The late James Ira Ford, of Pascagoula, was the eldest son. The subject of this sketch was a life-long member of the Methodist Church and will be gratefully and lovingly remembered for the part she played in shaping the lives of the orphan boys who were the near relatives of her husband. "Cast thy bread upon the waters and after many days it shall return unto thee." A common belief that the reciprocal love and affection between foster mother and foster child can never be as sincere and deep as the love between natural mother and child, is refuted by this good woman's example. Sincere and earnest in her religion, she was ever ready to do her part in the Master's work and help those who could not help themselves.

A FRIEND.

August 15, 1922.

MRS. MELEAS HOFFPAUIR, wife of M. Hoffpauir, passed from labor to reward on June 29, 1922, aged 88 years and a few months. She leaves several children to mourn their loss. She lived to see the fifth generation of her descendants. She was one of the last of the old settlers, her parents having come to Southeast Louisiana about 1804 or 1805. They were among the first to organize a Protestant church in this section of the State, long before the Civil War. This little band has grown to a mighty army. She was a member of the old Indian Bayou church, whose children have gone to bless the world in singing and preaching—I suppose the Indian Bayou church has sent out more preachers than any other country church on record. The funeral sermon was preached by Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir. She was a saint in Israel. She died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Robert Faulk, near Ebenezer, La. We have all confidence that she is at rest. A friend,

T. H. HOFFPAUIR.

FROM LEAKESVILLE, MISS.

Dear Mr. Editor: A very successful revival meeting was brought to a close last night at Winburn Chapel Methodist Church. Rev. S. W. Johnson, pastor in charge, did the preaching, and did it well. He is sound in faith and the doctrine of the church, and sane in his methods. He believes in a great salvation, and preaches it with power.

Mr. Eugene Ferrill, a Baptist brother of Gloster, Miss., conducted the singing. He is a Christian worker, a fine singer, and knows how to organize and get the whole congregation to sing.

There was a fine fraternal spirit throughout the meeting. The best spirit of co-operation among the members of the church existed in this meeting that has been seen here in many years. The church house was crowded every night and practically full every day. The church was revived and the visible results of the meeting were twenty-one received into the church—5 for baptism and 16 on profession of faith. Eleven infants were baptized. It was a beautiful sight to see mothers and fathers around the altar while their children were being baptized, and it was still a greater sight when all heaven joined in to look on the sight of 21 young people being received into the church.

The attention throughout the meeting was good. I think the whole community felt the moving of God's Holy Spirit. The meeting was brought to a close by singing the "Old-Time Religion," and then the parting song, "God be with you till we meet again." The Conference could not do a better thing than send Brother Johnson back to us another year. Yours for Christ,

MRS. S. L. BROWN,
Sunday School Superintendent.

YOUNG MISSIONARY DROWNS IN JAPAN.

A cablegram announcing the death by drowning on August 7, of the Rev. Harry L. Hughes, evangelistic missionary to Japan, has been received at the Board of Missions headquarters in Nashville. Harry Hughes was a Centenary missionary and went out two years ago, and was in charge of the work at Nakatsu.

Mr. Hughes was born 32 years ago at Iuka, Miss., but at an early age went with his parents to Texas, where practically the whole of his life was spent. He was educated at the Southern Methodist University, Dallas, Texas. After his graduation, he served for a short time as pastor at Ralls, Texas, going from there to his assignment in Japan. Mr. Hughes' support was undertaken as a Centenary Special by the business men's Sunday school class of Dallas. He was considered one of the finest young men ever sent by the Mission Board, and his loss is keenly felt by Southern Methodists. Surviving him, are his parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Hughes, of Hillsboro, Texas, his wife and two children, who are now en route to this country from Japan. No details as to the curcumstances of the drowning have as yet been received.

Few people talk as brilliantly to impress a friend as they do to depress an enemy.—Selected.

God Rules Within: I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them. And ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers; and ye shall be my people, and I will be your God.—Ezekiel 36:27, 28.

GIRLS! LEMONS BLEACH FRECKLES AND WHITEN SKIN

Squeeze the juice of two lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of Orchard White, which any drug store will supply for a few cents, shake well, and you have a quarter pint of the best freckle and tan bleach, and complexion whitener.

Massage this sweetly fragrant lemon lotion into the face, neck, arms and hands each day and see how freckles and blemishes bleach out and how clear, soft and rosy-white the skin becomes.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Organizing For The Big Drive.

You are, no doubt, well aware of the fact that September is Campaign Month for our State Epworth League finances, for the current year, July, 1922 to July, 1923, and that Sunday, September 3, is Big Drive Day.

In order to make this campaign a success, we must organize our local chapters and march forward with one accord. So will you be so kind as to read tbe following over very carefully and then see to it that your local chapter lines up?

The Plan—First—We have divided each district into sections and appointed sectional captains over each of these sections, whose duties shall be to see that there is a local team captain and team appointed in every local chapter and to act as general assistant of these local captains.

Second—Local chapter teams. We must have a team of three or four in every local chapter; the captain of this local team can be selected either by the sectional captain, president, or pastor. This local captain should be selected and appointed to the work at once and his or her name sent to the State headquarters, 316 Kittrell Building, Shreveport, La., without a moment's delay.

The Duties of the Team. First—To present one-minute speaches at all services in their respective churches on the 20th and 27th of the month. On Sunday, August 20, the subject to be presented is, "Our State Epworth League Organization—What they have Accomplished and what they Expect to Accomplish this Year." The subject for the 27th is, "What is the Loyalty Legion?"

These talks will be furnished the teams from State headquarters.

The Next Step. Let every team captain report to the Sectional Captain and to State headquarters, the exact number of members, senior and intermediates, on roll September 1.

The local team should meet on Thursday night, August 31, and go over the local chapter roll, dividing the entire membership between the team members. Then comes an every-member canvass, which is to be made on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, September 1, 2, and 3, asking every member to make a gift of $1 or more.

On Sunday morning, September 3, with your pastor's consent, have the team present the matter to the morning congregation. State to them how much you have received from your membership, and ask them to join you with their gifts.

Put on the Big Drive at every service Sunday, September 3. The local team captain is to receive and hold all cash.

On Monday morning, September 4, notify your sectional captain and the State Headquarters, 316 Kittrell Bldg., Shreveport, the exact amount you have in cash. Then send all cash at once to Miss Grace Cook, 614 North Fourth Street, Monroe, La.

Banner Credit.

To every chapter remitting cash to Miss Cook by Saturday, September 9, equal $1 per head for their chapter membership as reported September 1, or over this per cent, will be given a large felt banner designating it as a 100 per cent League in Loyalty Legion.

We will make your banner read whatever per cent you wish—it's up to you to determine this.

Now all together—line your local chapter up. Be ready to go over the top Sunday, September 3. Make report promptly. Yours for victory,

JAS. B. GRAMBLING,
Field Sec'y, La. Conf. E. L.

New Orleans District.

Algiers League: The cabinet members of the Algiers Epworth League enjoyed a "Sunset Swimming Party" at Spanish Fort. They motored out to the lake, after a very enjoyable swim, ate their supper on the beach and met in regular business session. Just try this method for an enjoyable, well-attended meeting. It will bring results.

The contest held during the month of July for attendance, on time, and new members proved very effective. Eighteen new members were taken in, which exactly doubled the old membership. It was a "One-win-one campaign."

Another item of interest to readers of the Advocate might be the prayer meeting attendance. On August 9, there were 22 League members present. Eight were out of town, leaving only six of the members not accounted for at mid-week prayer services. It was a rainy night and the total attendance was 55.

Alexandria District.

On August 7, the Lecompte Leaguers were entertained at a watermelon feast at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Brewer.

On August 6, several Leaguers attended a district meeting at Alexandria, where they had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Grambling and many Assembly friends.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

A new League chapter was recently organized at Hermanville, Vicksburg District. This League is known as the "Live Oak" Chapter. The president is Mr. Jas. S. Greenlee and they have an enrollment of 32 members to begin with.

Our President is receiving a number of letters of praise and commendation of the great work done by our first Assembly, and with the consent of Mr. Hawkins and the writers we are publishing some of these letters to give you some idea of what our Assembly is going to mean to our church and its young people.

This week we are giving you a letter from Brother Lewis, of Brookhaven.

"Brookhaven, Miss., Aug. 18, 1922.
"Dear Brother Hawkins:

"The Epworth League Assembly has my most hearty endorsement. It is an advanced step and marks the beginning of a new era in the work of the Mississippi Conference Epworth League. I was most favorably impressed with the spirit of earnestness that characterized the young people gathered together in this first Assembly, which was shown by their faithfulness in attending every session and class of the Assembly, the interest taken in the prayer groups, and the spirit of co-operation during the recreation periods.

"I was also impressed by the high order of the work done by the faculty. The members of the faculty seemed to feel a deep sense of their responsibility and opportunity. They endeavored to give not only suggestions of practical methods necessary for successful League work in the home church, but they also impressed the young people with the importance of the spiritual side of their work.

"That the Holy Spirit was present with the Assembly and honored the work done was indicated by the enlarged spiritual vision that came to so many of those present, the definite enlistment in the life service band, and the many testimonies given of renewed consecration and purpose of soul to be more earnest and active in their Christian work.

"The helpful influence of the Assembly was felt by the local church and League. Dr. Hounshell's sermon on Sunday morning will long be remembered by those who heard him. It was a spiritual feast to us all. The testimony service that marked the close of the Assembly touched the hearts my people.

"I do not hesitate to say that a church COULD NOT MAKE A BETTER INVESTMENT OF TIME AND MONEY than to make it possible for two or more of the young people of the League to attend the next session of the Assembly. No better investment of time and money on the part of the pastor could be made than to go along with the young people of his church and catch the inspiration and vision that will surely come.

"May God bless you in the great work with the young people with which you are engaged.

"Yours fraternally,
"W. H. LEWIS."

Sunday School

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The Methodist Church is planning an exhibit at our State Fair to show the work and growth of Methodism in Mississippi. Our part of the exhibit as Sunday school workers is to get pictures of churches, Bible classes, Teacher-Training classes, hand-work done by the children of the Sunday school, or anything we have to show what we are doing in the way of religious education for our children. Send the material to me at Sardis before the first of October, that the material may be properly arranged. Information as to class activities should accompany the photographs. We have an opportunity to show some church loyalty in this matter and we should send an exhibit worthy of our church. This call is to every church in the Conference that has anything worth exhibiting. All material sent will be returned upon your request.

We had an enrollment of 36 at the Greenwood District S. T. S.; 23 credits were issued, 2 for the "Church and Its Work," 3 for "Primary Organization and Administration," 3 for "Psychology of Young People," and 15 for those who took "Pupil Study." We had a dozen or more visitors who looked in upon to see what we were doing. Rev. B. P. Jaco delivered a stirring address on "Missions in the Sunday School." The writer of these notes delivered the other two addresses. Dr. J. O. Gurney, a practicing physician, of Itta Bena, traveled 100 miles in his car to take his course. There were others equally heroic in their sacrifices. In the midst of ignorance and its twin brother, we have acts of courage and determination worthy of the saints of old. Wister Bennett and Frank McGee gave themselves unreservedly to the school and made a large contribution to its success. The leaders at Moorhead and Sunflower had a lively contest for the school for the next year. It will be apt to be held at the place giving the largest local backing.

By the time this is in print we will be holding the school at Houston for the Aberdeen District. The Grenada District S. T. S. will be held at Holly Springs, September 4-9. Hon. L. G. Fant is Ed. Director, Rev. W. R. Lott, Registrar and host. Mrs. W. W. Adams will teach "Training Beginners to Worship." This course has not been given in the Conference heretofore. Any teacher who has the other three units of the Beginner Department will have an opportunity of getting the fourth unit and receive the Beginner Certificate. Miss Ramey will give "Primary Organization and Administration," Dr. A. W. Milden will give "Principles of Religious Teaching," Rev. Mellville Johnson will give a course in "Organization and Administration of the School." If a dozen superintendents should take this last-mentioned course, the work of the Sunday school supervised by these men would go forward steadily. Back of most all our problems in the Sunday school you will find a lack of vital religion on the one hand and an ignorance of what ought to be done on the other hand. We must have more men who are willing to learn how to lead forward. What sort of feeling do you have toward a mule that spends most of his time holding back and kicking?

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

I had the pleasure of being with Capitol Street Church last Sunday, on account of a broken engagement. I have never been in a sweeter or more religious or more worshipful service of a Sunday school in my life than was this. On the 20th of September I attended the Men's Bible Class. There were 182 present that hot, sultry August morning. Prof. Wingfield gave a fine lesson exposition. I had the pleasure of preaching for them at 11 a.m. It was mighty easy preaching and to me a very happy service.

Sunday night I was at Finkbine Camps. We had a fine service. Many were up for prayer and it seemed to me things were ripe for a harvest. I taught a class in "Life in the Making" at Shiloh Camp Grounds during the meeting. Quite a large number attended the sessions of the class and

FROM PURVIS CHARGE.

We have had two revival meetings on this charge this year. Our first meeting was at Talowah, where we have a small membership. We began there the fifth Sunday in July. Brother J. H. Jolly, of Heidleberg, did the preaching. Every service was a good service. Christians of other denominations worked with us, which brought a blessing to all. The gospel as Brother Jolly preached it was not only acceptable to the people, but profitable to the upbuilding of the believers, uniting the community in the bonds of Christian love and the conversion of sinners. There were five additions to the church on profession of faith.

On the first Sunday in August we began our revival meeting at Union Grove, our new church, our community church. Brother A. W. O'Bryant, of Richton, did the preaching. His preaching drew the people to Christ. The whole community seemed to be united in everything that we undertook; every one seems to feel as if it is his church and his meeting. The fellowship and harmony were delightful. The influence of the gospel has transformed that entire community. We had thirty accessions to the Methodist Church and about ten signified their conversion and desire to join other churches. There are a fine body of young people there, who will be a blessing to the church and community. We have built this church this year. It is well located, has Sunday school rooms, organ, bell, good lights, is nicely painted, and is all paid for.

Those people are justly proud of their church. While it is a Methodist church, we are trying to make it a real community church. We have about one hundred and thirty on roll in Sunday school. We run a school truck and bring about twenty children from another neighborhood to Sunday school every Sunday. God has been with us and blessed every effort put forth, in His name, in that community. We thank God and push the battle on.

We begin our meeting at Purvis the second Sunday in September, with Brother J. E. Williams, of Broad Street, Hattiesburg, assisting.

About Throwing Stones: Master, this woman was taken in adultery. Moses commanded us that such should be stoned: but what sayest thou? * * * He said unto them, He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her.—John 8:4, 5, 7.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

five took the examinations. Brother J. V. Bennett is doing the preaching at this meeting and God is blessing them wonderfully. Shiloh is on the up-grade. I surely enoyed my work with these dear folks.

Friday night I preached at D'Lo for Brother Ware. I did my best. D'Lo Sunday school is on the up-grade, for which we may be thankful and take courage.

The Sunday School Day offerings are coming in mighty, mighty slow. It doesn't look good at all. All the districts are behind last year. This year has been strenuous on us, but we can go over anything we have ever done if we can get the folks to stand by us. Please hold the Day and send in the offering.

Twenty-five have registered for the Meridian Standard Training School. Fine. Pray for the work and workers.

Yours in Him,
JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

FRECKLES

Now Is The Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as Othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of Othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength Othine as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

INFORMATION FOR LEADERS.

Our Social Creed.

Whereas the church of God is divinely appointed to interpret Jesus Christ and his gospel to each successive generation and to labor to the end that all things be brought into subjection to him; and whereas the problems of industrial readjustment and social redemption that are forced upon this generation constitute a challenge to the church to assert the Lordship of Jesus Christ in the social as well as in the individual life and to interpret the gospel of this age in social as well as in individual terms;

Therefore we, with our brethren represented in the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, stand for—

1. Equal rights and justice for all men in all stations of life.

2. Protection of the family by the single standard of purity, uniform divorce laws, proper regulation of marriage, proper housing.

3. The fullest possible development of every child, especially by the provision of education and recreation.

4. Abolition of child labor.

5. Such regulation of the conditions of toil for women as shall safeguard the physical and moral health of the community.

6. Abatement and prevention of poverty.

7. Protection of the individual and society from the social, economic, and moral waste of the liquor traffic.

8. Conservation of health.

9. Protection of the worker from dangerous machinery, occupational diseases, and mortality.

10. The right of all men to the opportunity for self-maintenance, for safeguarding this right against encroachments of every kind, for the protection of workers from the hardships of enforced unemployment.

11. Suitable provision for the old age of the workers and for those incapacitated by injury.

12. The right of employees and employers alike to organize; and for adequate means of conciliation and arbitration in industrial disputes.

13. Release from employment one day in seven.

14. Gradual and reasonable reduction of hours of labor to the lowest practicable point, and for that degree of leisure for all which is a condition of the highest human life.

15. A living wage as a minimum in every industry and for the highest wage that each industry can afford.

16. A new emphasis upon the application of Christian principles to the acquisition and use of property, and for the most equitable division of the product of industry that can ultimately be devised.

A LETTER FROM MRS. LIPSCOMB.

My Dear Sister:

Our dear Council family is experiencing a fellowship of sorrow in the going of our beloved Miss Bennett. Even though we had known for weeks that the end was near and for the last few days had hourly expected the word that she had gone, we were not in any wise prepared for it. Now, that we have seen the dear body laid away, we are still not convinced that she is gone. We know that she can never die: that her wonderful personality will never cease to influence our lives and that her work will live forever.

You will receive before many days a message that she chose for you—for, to the last she was thinking of and praying for you. The October Voice will be a memorial number. After that is issued with the necessary material, we hope there will be a memorial service, on Sunday if possible, and participated in by the entire membership of every church in Southern Methodism. Where this cannot be done, the women must arrange a service for the missionary society. Further directions will be given in time for this meeting.

The Secretaries and Mrs. Ross, with Mr. Hamilton, as representative of the Board of Missions, attended the funeral at Richmond, Ky. I wish that every woman in the church could have been with us that day for the simple, impressive service. Everything was done just as she had planned it. It was at home and attended only by relatives and closest friends; was conducted by Bishop Darlington, her pastor, and the Presbyterian pastor of Richmond; no word was spoken of her. The ritual was read, a prayer offered and the songs, "O, Love that will not Let Me Go" and "Jesus Lover of My Soul," were sung. At the grave, amid the flowers sent by those who loved her, Bishop Darlington read, as she had requested, "Now the Laborer's Task is O'er," from the Episcopal Hymnal and we came away and left her body to await the resurrection. She was so changed by suffering that those of us who saw her face had no feeling that it was Miss Bennett we looked upon; we shall remember her only as we saw her in full health. A floral offering, a beautiful cross of white and pink, was sent for the Council members, so each of you paid your tribute of love that day.

As we made the long journey to Richmond, a large part of which was in day coaches on slow trains, we were forcibly reminded of how many times she had taken that hard journey and how unsparingly she had given herself to travel for the missionary cause. She was almost seventy years of age and up to only a few months ago she had never hesitated to make any trip that seemed necessary. And how much else she gave—time, and money and her own splendid self without stint!

Few women have had more to give the cause of Christ than she did and none have ever given it more generously. As we remember her now, I am sure every heart overflows with a desire to follow in her steps and determine to renew the consecration of herself to the cause for which she gave her life. Because of her vision and initiative, we have a large task laid up before us and a generation will not be sufficient to catch up with her plans.

Some beautiful pictures have been made from a negative made by a Nashville artist. I thought some of you would like to know that they can be had. I can get them for you and shall be glad to do it. They are $2 each.

Since I could not talk to you personally, the next best thing is to write some of the things I know you would want to hear. We shall be closer together than ever, now that all together we must "carry on."

I am much encouraged over the work our women have done during the past quarter. The reports show advance along every line and the collections are more than $7500 over those of the second quarter of last year. This redeems almost half of the loss we had during the first quarter. I believe we shall more than catch up before the year is over.

With deepest appreciation of your work for the missionary cause, and pledging you the best service I can render,

Lovingly yours,
MRS. B. W. LIPSCOMB.

FROM THE CORINTH CIRCUIT.

Dear Brother Carley: On last evening we closed our meeting at Gaines Chapel, and a great meeting it was. The Rev. W. M. Young, of Leland, Miss., did the preaching, which was of the highest type. God honored His Word. Our church was greatly revived and deeply moved under the powerful messages accompanied by the Holy Spirit from beginning to the end. Many precious souls were born into the Kingdom. There were 30 additions to our church, and some will go to other churches. There is that spiritual atmosphere prevading the entire community for which we all have prayed.

Thank God for the great victory, and for the blessing that came to us in the person of Rev. W. M. Young. He is the man with the message, and is loved by all this people. A great people this. To God be all the glory.

Our meeting at Mt. Carmel is in progress now, with Rev. H. P. Lewis, of Booneville, doing the preaching, and the prospects are fine for a great meeting. God is with us. We are hoping and praying for a great revival. Pray for us.

D. R. McDOUGAL.

A FINE MEETING ON THE NETTLETON CHARGE.

Dear Advocate: A great revival has just closed at old Shiloh church on the Nettleton circuit. Rev. W. R. Williams, the pastor, was assisted by the writer. We had great crowds, estimated at from three to five hundred; and the best attention and interest that I have seen for sometime were manifested from the very beginning. We had the evidence of the old-time power that once visited our Methodist meetings. I wish that some people that believe the church has lost its power could have been present at this meeting—I think they would have changed their minds. I am glad that I serve a God that is the same yesterday, today and forever and that he will manifest the same power when his people meet the conditions.

We had every evidence of a genuine revival. Old and young alike gave testimony of the saving grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. I am sure that the church membership was placed on a higher plane of living and I am sure that much good is yet to follow. Children from 8 years of age, to men and women of families professed faith in Christ, and 33 united with our church. May the Lord continue his blessings on those that love and serve him. His servant,

E. C. DRISKELL.
Buena Vista, Miss.

JACKSON DISTRICT MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

The Jackson District Missionary Conference convened in the Galloway Memorial Church, at Jackson, Miss., Wednesday, August 16, with the District Secretary, Mrs. T. B. Gaddis, presiding.

The devotional exercises of the morning were led by Mrs. J. C. Ross, of the Flora Auxiliary, after which the gifted young president of the Galloway Memorial Auxiliary, Mrs. D. W. Bufkin, welcomed the delegates and visitors, to which Mrs. W. E. Noblin, vice-president of the Yazoo City Auxiliary, gracefully responded.

Mrs. Gaddis then called the Conference to order and asked that a secretary be elected. Mrs. Bufkin nominated Mrs. E. H. Galloway, who was elected to this position.

On roll call, forty-five delegates and thirty-six visitors responded, representing twenty-three adult auxiliaries. Two auxiliaries of the Young People's Division were represented by two delegates, and eight Junior auxiliaries were represented by twenty-three delegates and visitors.

Mrs. Gaddis then gave her report, stating that the scholarship for Miss Clarke had been paid, and that the Wesley House pledge of $175 from this district had practically been raised, the Galloway Memorial and Capitol Street Auxiliaries having paid half of this amount. She reported that the two auxillaries of Yazoo City had combined and the one at Sharon discontinued. She also stated that the work of the entire district is progressing splendidly and specially noted that the spirituaiity is greater than ever before.

Mrs. B. F. Lewis, Conference President, was then presented, and addressed the conference on "Our Conference Outlook," taking up in a masterly way every phase of this important subject. She particularly emphasized the Conference opportunities, the principal one being to make our church the missionary church of the next decade, and she stressed the value of impressing the missionary idea on the entire church, the importance of developing leaders among the young women, and of interesting the children of the Sunday schools in missions. She spoke of the problem of the immigrant, also that of illiteracy, the latter being a serious problem of both church and State.

Following this address, Mrs. Alfred Crothers' beautiful voice was heard in "Jesus Lover of my Soul."

Mrs. Gaddis, knowing the ladies were eager to hear the changes as prescribed by the Council, called on Mrs. H. L. McClesky, a member of that body, to explain the revisions, which she did very clearly.

Mrs. Gaddis then introduced Dr. E. K. Means, pastor of Galloway Memorial Church, who made a very encouraging talk to the conference, in which he expressed confidence in the earnestness and zeal of the women of the church in doing their part in the Master's work in the best possible way.

Misses Pyron, Morgan and Newsom, three young girls from the Methodist Home, delighted the audience by their rendition of "O Jesus, Thou Art Standing," after which Mrs. Riley reminded the delegates that Work Day was rapidly approaching and requested their co-operation in making it a success.

Dr. M. L. Burton, presiding elder of th Jackson District, was next presented and he urged the increase of auxillaries and the strengthening of the same. He particularly stressed the importance of increasing the circulation of the Voice.

Miss Addie Greely was then introduced and gave the conference a glimpse of the life at Scarritt, telling particularly about the spiritual atmosphere there.

At this point the business was suspended and a memorial service held for Miss Belle Bennett, Mrs. A. F. Watkins leading. Mrs. Watkins paid a very beautiful tribute to the life of Miss Bennett and the splendid work achieved by her, after which Miss Estelle Cheatham sang with much pathos, "Lead, Kindly Light." Dr. Means then spoke eloquently on what Miss Bennett's life and work had meant to the mountain district of Kentucky, her native State. Mrs. B. F. Lewis and Mrs. H. L. McClesky both spoke feelingly of Miss Bennett as a co-worker and a friend, at the conclusion of which Dr. Burton led the closing prayer.

At the adjournment of the morning session the delegates and visitors were invited to the Ladies' Parlors, where an elaborate lunch was beautifully served by the ladies of the Galloway Memorial Auxiliary.

The afternoon session opened with the devotional exercises led by Miss Nellie Robinson, following which the Juniors, under the capable supervision of Mrs. W. H. Bradley, gave a Missionary Play. Mrs. McClesky made a motion that Mrs. Bradley allow this play to be used by the publicity committee; motion carried. Mrs. Bradley then told of the work accomplished by the Juniors and emphasized the importance of educating and interesting the children along missionary lines. Mrs. Gaddis urgently requested the delegates to report the Young Peoples' Societies and announced that the president of each auxiliary is now an ex-officio member of the quarterly conference.

Mrs. Ricketts, the capable and efficient new Conference Treasurer, was introduced, and told the assembly of the splendid financial condition of the Jackson District.

Mrs. Heriong, Conference Superintendent of Study and Publicity, earnestly appealed to the delegates to organize Mission and Bible Study classes, stating that, normally, each auxiliary should have, and report three classes, namely a Spring and a Fall Mission Class, and one continuous Bible Study Class. She explained how to fill out the report cards, and urged that this be done accurately.

Mrs. Ewing, Conference Vice President, then spoke on the development of prayer, urging the promotion of prayer week, and the establishment of family altars.

Mrs. L. W. Alford, Superintendent of Social Service, brought an encouraging report, stating that fifty-nine reports were made the first quarter and fifty-eight the second. She urged this department to plan the work early, and told of the many opportunities for work of this nature.

The key note of the entire conference was "SERVICE."

Mrs. Sutton, representing the Children's Home Finding Society, brought a message from that institution in which she asked the co-operation of all social service committees and the prayers of the entire church in the noble work undertaken by that organization.

Mrs. Gaddis then presented Miss McNeil, volunteer from the Capitol Street Church, who gave her personal experiences in making the decision to do Christian work.

Miss Belton Johnson then sang beautifully and with much feeling, "Guide Us, Heavenly Father," after which the Young Peoples' Society of the Galloway Church gave a missionary charade, entitled "Two Masters," and this was much enjoyed by the conference.

Mrs. Gaddis then expressed pleasure at having so many of the Conference officers present, following which Mrs. B. F. Lewis dismissed the conference with a prayer.

Mrs. ETHELBERT H. GALLOWAY,
Secretary.

Recuperation—There is not so much in the ordinary vacation as there is in a single bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, which refreshes the tired blood, sharpens the dulled appetite, restores the lost courage. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla this summer.

HOW DISCOVERIES COME.

Has it ever occurred to you that most of the great discoveries are the result of an avocation, a plaything during rest-time?

The father of photography was an army officer; and of the electric motor, a bookbinder's clerk; the inventor of the telegraph was a portrait painter; and of the Jacquard loom, a dressmaker. A farmer tinkered up the typewriter; a poet, the sewing machine; a cabinetmaker, the cotton gin; and a coal miner, the locomotive. The telephone was the "after-school" work of a teacher of the deaf; the disc talking machine, the night work of a clothing salesman; the wax cylinder phonograph, of a lawyer's clerk; the typecasting machine, a groceryman. A physician made the first pneumatic tire, because his little son was an invalid.

The story of nearly every great invention has been the result of someone's riding a hobby.—Selected.

Do Not Neglect Your Blood

If it is in abnormal condition, the longer you delay taking a good blood medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla, the longer it will take and the more difficult it will be for you to get back to "normalcy."

Not only boils, pimples, eruptions, but headaches, nervous spells, "all-gone" feelings, indigestion and loss of appetite are readily traced to impure blood. Thousands date getting on the right road to health from the day they began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. Why not try it?

WOMAN COULD NOT WORK

Made Strong and Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

St. Paul, Minn.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for a tired, worn-out feeling and painful periods. I used to get up with a pain in my head and pains in my lower parts and back. Often I was not able to do my work. I read in your little book about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I have taken it. I feel so well and strong and can do every bit of my work and not a pain in my back now. I recommend your medicine and you can use this letter as a testimonial." — Mrs. PHIL. MASER, 801 Winslow St., St. Paul, Minn.

Just another case where a woman found relief by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Many times these tired, worn-out feelings and pains about the body are from troubles only women have. The Vegetable Compound is especially adapted for just this condition. The good results are noted by the disagreeable symptoms passing away—one after another.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a Woman's Medicine for Women's Ailments. Always reliable.

FROM LEXINGTON, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: Lexington is having a prosperous, forward-looking year. The congregations are filling the church and responding to every call.

Our Sunday school has outgrown its quarters. A new young men's Bible class, recently organized, is growing rapidly. Mr. H. H. Johnson is a live, progressive superintendent. He keeps the interest at high tide. We hope to build for the Sunday school this fall.

More than twenty have been received at the regular services.

All the Protestant churches are working together harmoniously. Each Wednesday there are seven women's prayer meetings and two for the men, in addition to the usual night prayer meetings.

Blessings on the Advocate and the Editor. J. W. WARD.

THE CLEVELAND HOLINESS CAMP MEETING.

The Cleveland Holiness Camp Meeting closed Sunday. About one hundred professed to be converted, reclaimed, or sanctified at the altar, and many others were blessed and started forth with renewed courage to fight life's battles.

Rev. E. E. McKeithen brought great, soul-stirring messages.

Rev. H. F. Tate is a devout man of God and preaches with power. Other preachers were present to help push the battle against sin. The music was good, and the finances came up all right.

We are very grateful to God for giving us a good meeting. We have no fanatical or wild-fire preaching at this camp, but teach the old-time doctrines of the Bible as taught by Wesley and others of his day. We believe in eternity, many thousands of souls will be saved as the result of the meetings at the Cleveland camp.

MRS. S. C. TAYLOR,
Secretary and Treasurer.

God Will Provide: Take no thought saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed? But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness: and all these things shall be added unto you.—Matthew 6:31, 33.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE BURNING HEART.

"And they said one to another, Did not our heart burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the scriptures?" The two disciples on the way to Emmaus had a wonderful experience that day when the Lord met them and walked with them and talked with them. They were disappointed, discouraged, sad as they journeyed, for things had not gone as they had expected them to go; but the Master came along and their hearts "burned within" them. Things may not be with us just as we think they ought to be—but the "burning heart" will compensate us for all our troubles, for it means that the Lord is with us.

THE CHURCH AND INDUSTRY.

Monday of this week was observed throughout the nation as Labor Day. In that connection, the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America issued a message concerning the church and industry which undertakes to state briefly but clearly the relationship between the church and industry. Among other things, the message says: "Industrial relations are but one form of human relations, and industrial problems are very largely human problems. A gospel that does not embrace life in its entirety is not sufficient to save men or to express the full meaning of religion. * * * Christian teachings as applied to industry include three cardinal principles—the worth of personality, brotherhood as between all those engaged in industry, and the motive of service. The first principle requires that every person shall be treated as a spiritual end in himself. Christianity aims at the progressive liberation of human life so that every individual may have a share in the life abundant. Brotherhood in industry expresses itself in co-operation between workers and employers as between human beings who possess immeasurable spiritual worth. It is the spiritual content of democracy. The supremacy of the service motive relegates competition for gain to an inferior place in human endeavor. From the Christian point of view, industrial power and privilege are justified only on the basis of the service that they render to those who participate in the industry and to the entire community. * * * The church has a very patent opportunity to study and interpret the moral issues of industrial controversy, to interpret each group to the other and to the public at large, and to teach the principles of sound human relationships in industry. * * * Looking back on the year and into the future which is uncertain and turbulent, is it not clear that the church is called upon to exert itself to the utmost to bring the Christian spirit of fairness and good-will into the economic order, to teach Christian principles and to insist upon their application to industry? Above all, the churches are privileged to give Christian leaders to the forces of capital and labor and to the public, which is exerting a growing influence in industrial affairs."

PULLING DOWN THE PILLARS.

According to a recent news item, the authorities of one of the great educational institutions of this country have announced that henceforth they will employ no married instructors, the explanation being that the salaries paid are so small and the social demands upon the professors are so great that they cannot maintain a family. In the same connection, the statement is made that the wives and daughters of some of the present instructors have had to find employment as clerks, telephone operators, and waitresses in order to live. We confess that this report sounds unreasonable, and we do not vouch for its accuracy; we do know, however, that any such policy would be suicidal for any institution. The establishment and maintenance of homes are two of the great pillars of civilization, and when they are pulled down, society will go down in an inevitable crash. It is inconceivable that a reputable educational institution should confessedly try to operate under a policy that makes family life impossible. It were better that the university should close its doors at once than that it should undertake to promote learning at the expense of morality.

VIOLENCE WINS NO VICTORIES.

We do not assume that the reports of violence on the part of the striking railway shopmen are true—the lawless acts thus far reported may have been committed by those who are not connected with the organizations represented in the strike; but we do know that every such act, no matter by whom committed, has a tendency to alienate the sympathy of the public for those who are contending for what they claim to be their rights, and that the outcome of this policy will be altogether unfavorable to those who follow it or endorse it. Terrorism has never yet won a reputable fight, and the course of history is not likely to be reversed. He is thrice armed who fights in a just cause—but he must fight fairly.

WORTH WHAT IT COSTS.

Within a few days New Orleans will begin the campaign that is expected to result in the extermination of the Argentine ant. The expense of the campaign will be considerable, since some 700,000 can of poison are to be distributed and a large force of workmen will be required, but the money is in hand, having been raised by a popular subscription throughout the city. The contributions were prompt and generous, the householders of the city being eager to help get rid of a pest that has given them no end of trouble. They do not mind the cost, for they know they are making a good investment. We wonder why it is easy to raise money for a purpose like this, and hard to raise it to get rid of ignorance, or to spread the gospel all over the world. Money paid to the Christian Education Movement or to the Centenary represents one of the best investments that can be made—these Movements are doing a work that is worth infinitely more than its costs. It is all right to get rid of the ants and other like pests and we are glad to have a part in the accomplishment; surely we want to have a part in the glorious task of hastening the coming of the Kingdom upon earth.

KEEP DOWN THE WEEDS.

In making a crop, it is important not only to plant the right kind of seeds, but also to keep down the weeds while the seeds are springing up and the plants are coming to maturity; and sometimes keeping down the weeds is the hardest part of the job. In the making of character it is important to keep down the weeds. Many a life that ought to be beautiful is marred by the presence of imperfections that ought never to have come into existence. Some people have a habit of querulousness that makes them unhappy and their friends uncomfortable; a sharp tongue is the great defect in others; lack of appreciation of the kindness and courtesy of others mars some lives—and the list of faults that are often found with virtues might be extended to great length. These things are like coarse weeds scattered among beautiful flowers.

IMPRISONED SOULS.

One of the tragedies of deep mining is the entombment of forty-seven men in a mine at Jackson, Calif., for whose rescue crews of men have been working feverishly four days. The entombed men are almost a mile below the surface of the ground, and there is only a bare chance that they are still alive; but no effort is being spared to save them if possible. The interest in their fate throughout the country is intense, and the newspapers have contained long accounts of the efforts that have been made to reach and rescue them. This we do not wonder at; but we do wonder that there is so little apparent concern on the part of many people about the souls that are in imminent danger of eternal destruction. All over the land, in every city, in every hamlet, there are men whose souls are so buried in sin that they will inevitably be lost unless they are brought into the light and liberty of the gospel—yet their fate seems to be of little moment. The tragedy of an imprisoned soul is infinitely greater than the tragedy of an imprisoned body.

IF I WERE TWENTY-ONE AGAIN.

By Rev. James L. Gordon, D.D.

Disraeli in one of his novels places these strange words on the lips of a certain character: "Youth is a blunder, manbood is a struggle, and old age is a regret." That is a falsebood. For those wbo live rigbt and walk circumspectly, youth is opportunity, manhood is achievement, and old age is a holy memory.

Life has two ends—a beginning and an ending. A certain old preacber once said: "At twenty we know everything—at seventy we know nothing." Matured wisdom, like old wine, has a peculiar quality. We know just a few things at seventy, but we know what we know. T. De Witt Talmage in his autobiography remarks: "It seems to me that the constructive period of a man's life begins when he has passed fifty." Ernest Renan affirmed that "no man can write well until he is forty."

Experience has a message for inexperience. Jay Gould when he was a youth of twenty wrote a book of 425 pages against "capital." At fifty years of age, and the possessor of one hundred million dollars, he made a persistent effort to buy up every copy of his book which was known to exist. He was afraid that the crude ideas penned at twenty might be quoted against him at seventy. Few men are wealtby enough to buy up the past.

Tbe bread of wisdom cannot be baked in a quick oven. The sweetest cream comes of quiet browsing. Every silver hair that crowns the brow of knowledge cost a thought. Henry Clay Trumbull received a package of cabinet photographs from a metropolitan artist. His face, which was lined with tbe furrows of care as thickly as was General Sherman's wrinkled physiognomy, was made to appear as smooth and even as the face of a society belle. Trumhull observed in dismay: "That photographer has taken out every wrinkle; send the pictures back; tbose wrinkle cost me too much." Experience is a great teacher, but she asks a high price for every bit of knowledge wbich she sees fit to impart. Therefore the man of years has a wisdom that he may reveal without the impoverishment of himself and to the enrichment of all those who will listen.

1. If I were twenty-one again, I would give twenty minutes every day to special physical exercise. All things being equal, happiness depends on healtb, health depends on digestion, digestion depends on blood, the quality of blood depends on the circulation, and the circulation of the blood depends on exercise. Health is life's first prize. * * *

2. If I were twenty-one again, I would study and strive to be an original thinker. At tbe age of ten we wonder, at twenty we imagine, at thirty we cogitate, at forty we think, at fifty we have "an idea or two," at sixty we have two ideas, and at seventy we are working on "one idea." The sooner you get to that one idea the better. John Milton made an early discovery of himself. He "betook himself to linking fancy unto fancy, wondering, fearing, doubting, dreaming dreams no mortal ever dared to dream before."

Be an original thinker. The only real difference between the stupid man and the man who is "original" is the vital fact that one man thinks and the other does not. Do not "take things for granted"—take them for what they are worth. Think your way through prejudice, precedent, custom, convention, style, fashion, and all the forms of modern folly, and get at the heart of things. Socrates' brain was not a whit better than yours, but he wore a thinking cap. Tbink your way in and you will have small difficulty in thinking your way out. Apply your mental X-rays to every unanswered question and every unsolved problem. Have faith in your own conclusions when to the subject before you, you have applied every test known to reason, knowledge, and experience. Be original. You can if you will try.

3. If I were twenty-one again, I would steer my life hy a few fundamental convictions. The great convictions of the race are expressed in such words as God, truth, right, love, law, and immortality. Bulwer-Lytton places these suggestive words on the lips of one of his literary characters: "Come and I will tell you the secret of my public life and that which explains all my failures; for, in spite of my social position, I have failed—and this is the cause—I have lacked conviction." A man without conviction is as weak as a door hanging on its lower hinge. Luther was great because he crowned every great emergency with a great decision. In an age of uncertainty he knew what to do. When all others were in doubt he was in full possession of himself. A clear conviction is as a searchlight shining through mountains of mist on a stormy, starless night. A strong thought rooted in the soil of the brain lends fiber to the quality of a man's thinking. One great idea clearly defined and nobly enthroned is a blazing torch in the darkness. Have a conviction. * * *

4. If I were twenty-one again, I would begin life with a clear conviction concerning the sovereign value of my soul in the presence of God. When God contracted Himself within the narrow limits of flesh and blood He appeared on earth as the Christ. When sinful man, redeemed, regenerated, renewed, transformed, appears in heaven, expanded to the full proportions of his spiritual personality, he will stand forth in glory as—a Christ. This must be so, for "we shall be like him." Every man has within him all the upward possibilities of the character of Jesus and all the downward possibilities of the character of Judas. Jesus might have been a Judas. Judas might have been a Jesus. Jesus was, in a representative capacity, humanity at its best. Judas was, in a representative capacity, humanity at its worst. Where the first Adam fell, the second Adam conquered.

I would not bring Jesus down to the level of our common humanity, hut I would bring humanity up to the splendid heights of Jesus. The thought of Jesus lifts the race to its highest pinnacle of power and prerogative. He "thought it not robbery to be equal with God." Splendid audacity! Heirs of God are we, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ. * * *

5. If I were twenty-one again, I would put quality into every thought, word, and deed. A Christian is a person who does ordinary things in an extraordinary way. One day, twenty centuries ago, a carpenter built a cross. That cross has been lifted into a sacred incandescent of spiritual glory. It stands to-day and forever on the skyline of history. The horizon of our civilization, encircling the earth, begins and ends with the cross of Calvary. Its four great arms like shafts of living gold have shed a halo over art, music, drama, and philosophy. It marks for us the most revered place on earth's geography. It stands for us as the most distinguishing landmark on the wrinkled surface of our rolling planet. It marks the dividing line between things ancient and modern and stands exactly at the center of history. Little thought the humble carpenter when he was building the cross that its rough boards, touched by the sacred form of the world's Redeemer, would miraculously flame into sign and symbol for the sacramental hosts of a world-conquering religion.

"In the cross of Christ I glory,
Towering o'er the wrecks of time;
All the light of sacred story
Gathers round its head sublime."

6. If I were twenty-one again, I would try to achieve one splendid success in some worthy realm of human effort. A taste of success in youth is as a taste of blood to a young lion. The man who has failed at everything is apt to be small, mean, bitter, quarrelsome, fussy, critical, oversensitive, and generally lacking in faith in himself and everybody else. If I were a young man, I would get into a new profession in a new country. This is the best day in the history of the world, and the United States is the best place for an ambitious young man. If you can't succeed here, you would not succeed anywhere. This is one of history's focal spots.

7. If I were twenty-one again, I would crowd at least one kind act into every twenty-four hours. Arthur C. Benson, looking back on a prolonged period of sickness, said: "I cared nothing for my personal success, in that hour; nothing for my small position I had gained, nothing for the books I had written. What alone concerned me was the thought that I had helped some poor pilgrim and made his way stralghter, easier, and smoother." * * *

8. If I were twenty-one again, I would live in the light of every grand experience. Life has its sunbursts. There are moments that are sweet and days that are divine. There are events that crowd an eternity into an hour. There are experiences that cause the heavens to be opened and grant to the weary pilgrim a vision of the rainbow round about the throne. There are evenings when the stars seem to be living diamonds, and there are nights when the Northern Lights fling trembling vibrations like divine reflections across the sky. Thank God for every experience rich and rare. Live in the light of your experience. Billy Bray, writing in the year 1823 of the wonderful conversion tbat he had experienced, remarked: "Everything looked new to me, the people, the fields, the cattle, the trees—I was a new man in a new world." * * *

9. If I were twenty-one again, I would have two or three choice friends among the older people. They know the way. They have learned the meaning of life. They can be depended upon in the hour of emergency. They have traveled over the same road. They yearn for tbe compliment of your confidence. They would like to be of service to you. Tbey would like to count you among their few favorites. They would like to be of assistance to you in your plans and schemes. They would glory in your success and boast among their friends of your achievements. Cultivate the friendsbip of the folks who are older.

10. If I were twenty-one, I would read the four Gospels over once every twelve months. The heart of the Bible is the life of Jesus. Everything in the Old Testament grows into, and everything between the Acts and the Revelation grows out of the four Gospels. These sweet, quaint gospel stories are written in a phraseology that is Oriental and richly colored. Broad reading will lead to a proper interpretation. The great thoughts of the Master's mind are set forth in incident, accident, event, conversation, and familiar dialogue.

11. If I were twenty-one again, I would identify myself with some great unpopular cause. Courage is the finest test of character. If you think you are right, have your say. Be downright, upright, and outright. Stand fast, stand firm, stand erect, stand alone. Stand with your back toward the past and with your face toward the unfoldings of God's plan and purpose for humanity. Stand, and having done all, stand. Dare to differ. Dare to discuss. Dare to dispute. Dare to deny. Dare to defy. Be indifferent to the indifference of indifferent men. Remember the brave words of William Lloyd Garrison: "I will not equivocate; I will not excuse; I will not retreat a single inch; and I will be heard!" To be first in advocating a noble cause is to be lonely, but to be thus lonely is to be lofty. I would rather stand alone than creep and crawl with the crowd. I would rather stand alone for God than, moping, move with the multitude.

12. If I were twenty-one again, I would spend a little time every day in the realm of the beautiful. Luther always placed a flower on his desk before he began to write. His stormy nature needed the soothing influence of beauty's touch. We all need it. A beautiful poem, a sweet song, a lovely picture, a rare literary gem—the touch of the beautiful—once a day. The nearest practical approach to this for the average person is a well-ordered notebook, carefully conned and reviewed. Most great men have kept and carried a notebook. The things that we "note" are the things that stay with us. Because the quotation is brief enough to be written in a notebook, it is therefore easy of mental absorption. A line or two read over every day for a month will commit itself to memory. Did you ever try it? * * * .

13. If I were twenty-one again, I would give the flower of my youth to Jesus Christ. I would begin life with Him. I would not wait until my hair had grown white in the service of sin and then offer to the world's Redeemer the ashes of a misspent life—I would begin with Jesus. I would not try to understand all that He said or all that has been said about Him. I would just surrender my life to Him.. I would take Him for my hero, my ideal, my peerless one, my soul partner, my secret fellow, my heart's joy—nothing less than that. And I would have in my room, in a frame of gold, the wonderful face of Jesus. And I would have on my dressing table something that would bring to mind and memory all the sweet hymns that I had ever heard sung about Jesus—"My Jesus, as Thou Wilt," "Sun of My Soul, Thou Savior Dear," "Jesus, the Very Thought of Thee," "Jesus, Thy Name I Love," "Jesus Shall Reign Where'er the Sun," "Jesus, I My Cross Have Taken," "Jesus Savior, Pilot Me," and "Jesus, Lover of My Soul" —and in every hour of triumph, sorrow, or perplexity I would sing them over to myself. I would create a real Jesus in the hidden realm of thought. I would crown Him with all the powers of my imagination. I would gaze on the hands that were pierced, and I would caress them. I would look upon the feet that were torn, and I would bless them. I would fix my soul's vision on the brow that was once garlanded with the thorny crown of hate, and for that blessed head I would weave a garland of light.

"Farewell, ye dreams of night;
Jesus is mine.
Lost in this dawning bright,
Jesus is mine.
All that my soul has tried
Left but a dismal void;
Jesus has satisfied;
Jesus is mine."

NEW TESTAMENT PURIFYING.

By Arthur Madison Shaw.

Paper V.

Let us now see if the argument from locality offers anything favorable to the advocates of affusion.

1. Where were the three thousand converts of Pentecost baptized? We need not dwell upon the fact that the time at their disposal was hardly sufficient for the immersion of so many. The outpouring of the Spirit occurred at 9 a.m. The demonstration which followed, which drew vast multitudes together, must have consumed hours; and Peter's sermon, of which we, of course, have but a bare outline, took an hour or two more. Then, the determination of a suitable place, and the preparation of three thousand candidates required an amount of time which would put immersion on that day out of the question.

What about a place? Some of our immersion friends have found certain pools in Jerusalem quite adequate! Let us note a glaring inconsistency in their argument. They tell us that John and the multitudes baptized by him went to the Jordan in order to have abundant water for immersion. Why did not the disciples do the same? Why have we no record of a single baptism at the Jordan in apostolic times? Is it likely that the Jews of Jerusalem, who admired John and went to his baptism, would have forced him to go to the Jordan to baptize, and would have turned over their sacred pools for the use of the disciples of Jesus, whom they had hated and crucified? In the same connection, we may ask: If abundant water for the purpose of immersion was a requisite and determined the choice of a place, how did Peter find so much available water about Jerusalem, after John had found even the Jordan unsatisfactory, and had gone from there to the Springs of Aenon—two or three miles away—for his supply?

Others have suggested the brook Kidron, as a suitable baptistry. Not to mention the fact that it is said to be dry generally at the season of Pentecost, and when running, was, and still is, choked with the waste and filth of the city, we may again ask, Why did not John use it? And why are we not told of one case in which somebody was baptized in the Kidron?

2. When Saul was baptized, in the house of "one Simon" in Damascus, we are told that Ananias said simply, "Arise and be baptized"—not, "Arise, and let's go to the river." (See Acts, 22:16.) And in Luke's original account of it, it is said, "And he arose and was baptized." (Acts, 9:18.) It is not even probable that Saul rose to a standing posture. He was doubtless kneeling with his face to the floor (as was then the custom); or he may even have been lying prostrate —a position often assumed at that day in agonizing prayer—and he arose most likely to a kneeling posture, and the water fell upon him—like the baptism of the Holy Spirit.

3. The story of Cornelius and his family, taken just as it stands, without comment, reads like the account of a family baptizing in a pioneer Methodist revival. He who finds immersion here must do as he must do with every baptism recorded in the Scriptures: add man's guess to God's Word—a bold and hazardous guess at that! The simple record is: "While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them that heard the Word." Acts, 10:44. And in verse 47, Peter said, "Can any man forbid the water, that these should not be baptized, who have received the Holy Spirit as well as we?" There is not a hint that they left the house; or that there was a baptistry in this Roman Centurion's home!

4. The case of the Philippian jailor is even stronger—if any could be stronger! Briefly stated, (1) Paul and Silas were singing praises to God at midnight, in the prison; (2) an earthquake opened the prison doors, after midnight; (3) the jailor was converted after the earthquake; then, in Acts, 16:33, it is said, "And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes and was baptized, he and all his straightway." That there was a pool and a supply of clean water in that Roman prison is beyond belief! But a recent writer says, "They probably went to the river where Lydia was baptized?" I answer: If Paul had left that prison during the night, then his refusal next morning to allow the magistrates to "cast him out privily," and the demand, "let them come themselves and bring us out." (Acts, 16: 37), constitute one of the most consummate pieces of hypocrisy upon record! Nay, the entire family were baptized in the prison by pouring—the immemorial mode of purifying.

5. These Scriptures preclude immersion; but in 1 Cor. 10:1-2, we have a positive demonstration of affusion—recognized by the great apostle as baptism. "Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea." Immersionists are wont to take two walls of water with a cloud for roof, as forming a vault in which they were buried! (It takes four walls and a cover to form a vault!) But was it not a strange immersion, when neither the sea nor the cloud touched them? "But the children of Israel walked upon dry land in the midst of the sea," is the record in Exodus 14:29.

In the 77th Psalm, the poet tells us how they were baptized. Beginning at verse 15, we read: Thou hast with thine arm redeemed thy people, the sons of Jacob and Joseph. The waters saw thee, O God, the waters saw thee; they were afraid, the depths also were troubled!" That was when the sea stood up in a wall on either side. Now read verse 17: "The clouds poured out water; the skies sent out a sound: thine arrows also went abroad!" (This refers to the destruction of the Egytians.) "The voice of thy thunder was in the heaven: the lightnings lightened the world; the earth trembled and shook. Thy way is in the sea, and thy path in the great waters, and thy footsteps are not known!" But some may answer, "Maybe this has no reference to Israel's passage through the Red Sea, or the baptism to which Paul refers." Verse 20 settles this: "Thou leddest thy people like a flock, by the hand of Moses and Aaron!" Here then, is a wholesale purifying by pouring, which Paul distinctly calls a baptism. He who demands more proof than this would have to drink the whole ocean to be convinced that it is salt!

WHITE LEADERSHIP NEEDED.

By Dr. J. H. Reynolds, President Hendrix College, Conway, Ark.

On the whole the relation between the Southern white people and the Negro during slavery was perhaps as beautiful and humane as ever characterized the relations of master and slave. The leading Southern white people took marked interest in the welfare of the Negro. He was often a member of their church, and was ministered to by white preachers. A strong bond of sympathy tied the two peoples close together.

Unfortunately we Southern people have permitted leaders of the two races to drift apart. The Negro is no longer a member of our church and the white preachers are no longer preaching to the colored people. The strong moral grip which our leaders had upon the Negro in the past has largely been lost. This is a condition fraught with the possibility of serious consequences.

The most important elements of power are in the hands of the white man—government, education, wealth, and social prestige. The Negro is one of the best dispositioned peoples in the world. If trouble develops between the white and black races, the blame will rest largely upon the dominant race. We should not let the weaker and the more vicious elements of the two races determine their relations. It is the lower strata of the two races that come in closest contact. Here lies the danger.

We should therefore give the hearty welcome to every movement and organization looking to bringing the races closer together, and especially their leaders. If the white man does not take the place of sympathetic leader, the position may be seized by Negro agitators who might foment antagonism. The situation is an eloquent appeal to white leaders. Religion, humanity and self-interest require that we should be active, sympathetic friends of the Negro.

THE FLYING SQUADRON.

Men of honor, men of faith,
Men of courage and of strength,
Men who care and men who dare
To carry the message everywhere.

The stand they take, the lives they live,
The love which only God can give;
The hope to reach the highest goal,
The joy of saving just one soul.

"Go Tell the Story Now," they sing,
God's message they to others bring;
A charge against the hordes of sin,
They're fighting for the souls of men.

IN MEMORIAM—REV. J. D. HARPER.

By Rev. Franklin N. Parker, D.D.

Rev. Jacob Dick Harper was born in Shelby County, Alabama, March 19, 1846. He died in McDonoghville, La., March 19, 1922, and was buried on his birthday, March 19, at Mansfield, La. His parents were Henry W. Harper and Juliana Pierce. Both were natives of Virginia. Members of his father's family were in Washington's army at Yorktown. There were five sons and two daughters; of these, two survive: Mrs. Amanda Akin, of Bernice, La., and Dr. Webb Harper, of Ruston, La.

About 1850 the family moved from Alabama to the northern part of Louisiana. At this time quite a number of families migrated from Alabama to Louisiana. A Methodist church was built hy these settlers near the line of Claiborne and Union Parishes and was named Alabama Church. The Harpers were Methodists and cast in their lot with this church. Brother Harper joined the church on probation, August, 1859, was converted in October of that year, and received into the church by Rev. C. W. Hodge in 1860.

He was recommended for admission into the itinerant ministry by the Farmerville circuit, Ouachita District, and admitted on trial by the Louisiana Conference in January, 1873. This session of the Conference met in the old Carondelet Street Church in New Orleans, Bishop Pierce presiding. He was admitted into full connection in 1875 and ordained elder by Bishop Wightman in December, 1876.

During his nearly fifty years of uninterrupted service in the Louisiana Conference Brother Harper served the following charges: Washington, 1873; Arcadia, 1874; Plaquemine and Gross Tete, 1875; Evergreen Circuit, 1876; Lake Charles, 1877; Opelousas District, 1878-79; Alexandria and Pineville, 1880-81; Columbia, 1882-85; Alexandria District, 1886; Delhi District, 1887-90; Ruston, 1891-93; Homer, 1894; Arcadia District, 1895-96; Mansfield, 1897-98; Delhi District, 1899; Alexandria District, 1900-03; Lafayette, 1904-07; Bunkie, 1908-09; Winnfield, 1910-11; Zachary, 1912-15; Opelousas, 1916-20; McDonoghville, 1921 to March, 1922.

Brother Harper's opportunities for an education were limited, indeed, so far as schools are concerned. He attended an "old field school" until the beginning of the Civil War. In this school he had as a classmate Col. J. W. Nicholson, who was subsequently professor of Mathematics at the Louisiana State University. Brother Harper was a great reader and lover of great books. He was diligent in study and tenacious in his grasp of what he read. He acquired a large fund of information and a mastery of his mother tongue. His ability found early recognition. He was made a presiding elder only one year after his own ordination as elder and was returned to that office a number of times. I served with him in the cabinet and bear witness to his fidelity and fairness in the discharge of his duties there.

At the time of his death he had been preaching fifty-two years, and was in his fiftieth year in the Conference. He had attended every session since his admission on trial and had never missed a first roll call. Late in life he could say that he had never been out of the Conference room when his name was called.

He was methodical and precise in his working habits. What tasks were committed to him he attended to with conscientious and cheerful diligence. He was self-possessed and clear in his views of men and issues. Because of these qualities he was called upon to serve in many important affairs of the Conference. He knew our church law, and was fair in his dealings with the rights and interests of other men. His high place in the Conference is indicated by the numerous boards and committees he was called upon to serve. He was secretary of the Board of Education, chairman of the committee on Conference Relations, president of the Board of Church Extension, and of the Board of Missions, eight years a member of the General Board of Church Extension. He was frequently on committees of examination. In all of these places his work was well done. He was ready for whatever came. During the latter part of the Civil War he served in the Confederate Army, and was stationed at Alexandria, La., where he labored in the construction of those forts, the remains of which may now be seen above the town on the opposite bank of the Red River. Three of his brothers served in the army of the Tennessee, the eldest of whom found a soldier's grave at Corinth, Miss.

Brother Harper was genial in temperament and had the real human touch. He loved to hunt and fish. The call of the wild found in him a ready listener. He was not averse to a game of chess, enjoyed his friends, and took his part in the social life of the community.

As a preacher he followed the expository and practical method. He was thoroughly conversant with the theology of evangelical Christianity and presented its teachings with clearness and enforced its practical demands upon the hearts and lives of his people. His own religious life was a uniform progress towards the Eternal City. He settled all qustions definitely. There was no uncertain place in his religious convictions. His love feast testimonies were always clear, spiritual and marked by the modesty which adorned his character. He was a good man, full of faith and the Holy Spirit. He wrought well. His works follow him. "I know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works; and the last to be more than the first."

There remain to mourn their loss, the beloved wife, who was Miss Virginia Fox, of Alexandria, La., and his two daughters, Mrs. S. P. Woolfolk, of Baton Rouge, La., and Miss Ruth Harper, of New Orleans, and Rev. R. H. Harper, pastor of the First Methodist Church, of New Orleans.

MAKING THE CHINESE CHURCH INDIGENOUS.

By Professor R. G. Moore.

In these days of close international contact and intercourse it is not difficult to find people of one continent interested in those of another. Those who inhabit one land are eager to learn about the customs, traditions, governments, etc., of other lands. Some are concerned about the study of one aspect; others, some other.

Perhaps there are more Americans to-day who know something about China, the Young Republic of the Far East, and wish to know more than there has ever been at any previous time. Business firms are lured by the vast resources of China, which hold out increasingly large benefits from commerce and industry and the ultimate acquisition of great fortunes. Ambassadors of the Master—missionaries—inspired with the spirit of world-service and conscious of the deepest needs of men, gladly give themselves to the heroic task of helping to bring the Kingdom of God among men.

To the latter class of men and women, who have been laboring in China during the past several hundred years, the world owes much. In the preservation and promotion of international good will and brotherhood they have rendered invaluable service. In introducing and advertising the goods of some of our biggest American business firms they have sometimes done more than the duly appointed agents of said firms. Such service of the missionary, however, is only incidental as compared with what he has done in carrying a Gospel that possesses liberating and energizing forces and endeavoring to apply it to the varied problems and needs of a complex society and nation.

That China is weak no one doubts. She woefully lacks UNITY of PURPOSE, and UNITY of INTERESTS. China has a host of outsiders who sympathize with her, but she still lacks an internal unity of NATIONAL FEELING. She is far from being at the present time an inherent Power, but is largely held together by the agreement of outside, as well as internal powers. Her greatest need is the social cement of the Gospel of Love.

At the present time two forces are discernible and are at work in re-shaping China:

1. Pragmatic—The pressure of international competition in trade, finance, Government, etc.

2. Spiritual—The many uplifting and wholesome influences of churches, schools, etc., in their beneficent work of promoting international brotherhood and unity. While the former forces, inflated with jealousies and rivalries over iron, coal, tea, silk, bean cake, etc., are feverishly clamoring and struggling for economic imperialism on the Pacific, the latter are operating quietly, sometimes obscurely, ever intent upon their gracious ministry of service.

No one who carefully studies the China of to-day will fail to recognize the development of these forces and their subsequent influence in bringing about the gradual transition from the past. Unfortunately, the two have been divorced and, like to parallel streams which never converge in their course, each has been pouring a great volume of life and energy into this great land of four hundred and twenty-five millions of souls, which have for the most part been as unlike in their nature as light and darkness. The business man in his desire to get rich and in the midst of new-born liberties too frequently forgets his decency and propriety. The missionary's demand for clean living, the application of the "Golden Rule" to all of the relationships of men, has thus helped to widen the breach between the two channels of life and has resulted in an unwarranted distinction between the sacred and the secular, a distinction which is too often made in our own land, forgetting that the secular without the sacred is impotent, and that the sacred without the secular is an ineffectual force. Until the two have been wedded in harmonious service and mutual helpfulness, the world will continue to be as organically disarranged as would the human body without the normal relationship which exists between red blood and muscle and flesh.

In considering the present status of the Christian church in China one must keep in mind these two types of forces and their consequent influence.

What the church has achieved in China is obviously largely due to the untiring and unselfish efforts of missionaries, representing every phase of missionary enterprise, viz., Evangelistic, Educational and Medical.

Some of the missionaries from the beginning of their contact with the Chinese have made the impression among the Chinese that their stay was only temporary and that the purpose of all their work was to assist the Chinese toward the establishment of a Chinese church. With this idea ever in their minds, the Chinese have long been laboring with the missionaries, hoping some day to realize the benefits of an organized indigenous church.

During the past few years this hope has had a growing acceptance among the Chinese. To-day there are thousands of Chinese, both Christian and non-Christian, who think the hour has struck when the church in China should be made indigenous.

Here are some of their reasons:

1. A growing national consciousness.

2. Anti-foreign feeling caused by the practice of commercial greed and political conquest by certain nations in China.

3. Divisive elements among the missionary forces resulting in the establishment of independent societies, sects, and creeds.

4. Organization of Home Mission Societies to work in the interior Provinces of China.

5. The fear that the support which has been accorded the Christian church during the past from the Occident will be withheld in the future because of the financial burdens growing out of the great world war.

Thousands of enthusiastic, patriotic students are promoting nationalism in China. They covet the same consciousness of national unity which has wielded such a strong force in making other governments of the world potent factors in the proposed League of Nations.

One of the most effective obstacles to national unity has been interference with internal affairs on the part of unscrupulous foreigners allied with disloyal officials of China, each act of violence resulting in a more enfeebled government with the exercise of less sovereignty. Thus it is not strange that missionaries are often labeled "foreign devils" by the Chinese who know only that class of foreigners who are in China to make great fortunes; nor is it difficult to see how by analogy the Chinese Christian who fears the power of the unscrupulous managers of foreign firms, who, they say, lord it over the Chinese, would likewise resent the power which is vested in the foreigners who, on behalf of the several Boards, control the property of the church in China.

Unfortunately the church in China is too often called the foreign church, and for this reason many Chinese who, by virtue of influence and property, would be able to render valuable service refrain from having anything to do with it. Many Chinese have said to me, "If the foreigners did not dictate so and so to the Chinese, the church would have a much larger membership; and if the Chinese were allowed more voice in directing the affairs of this school and that school, or this church and that church, more money and help from the Chinese would be forthcoming." Again, too often we hear the charge that denominationalism—individual differences regarding baptism, predestination, foreordination, apostacy, etc.—are confusing and meaningless to the average Chinese; that our disciplines, prayers and song books are too foreign and do not mean as much to the Chinese as they do to the foreigners; that the mistakes and blunders made by foreigners in conducting the affairs of the church and schools in China, who too often do not understand the Chinese mind, customs and traditions, are a strong argument for the control of these matters to pass more and more into the hands of the Chinese.

Surely it should be cause for deepest gratification, not apprehension, among those in the home—the mother church—to know that they have helped to raise up and train a host of young men and women in China who have demonstrated ability and leadership, who are eager to-day to grapple with problems of organizing, financing and directing a Chinese Christian church with a present constituency of nearly 400,000, that can make a stronger appeal in the name of Christ to one-fourth of the world's population. Surely we will be glad to help them through our prayers, sympathies, and by making our Centenary pledges good, to realize autonomy in the Kingdom of God. Those of us who are on the field, as well as those who are in the home land, should be willing to say to the Chinese, "You must increase, but we must decrease." This seemed to be the key note which was sounded at the recent National Christian Conference, which was held in Shanghai in last May, at which there were present five hundred Chinese delegates and five hundred foreign delegates, with many prominent visitors who had been invited from various parts of the world.

SOLDIERS MUST LEARN TO SHOOT.

Suppose a regiment of fighting troops had in it a man who could not shoot. He could milk cows and keep books and run a street car, but he could not shoot. He knew nothing about a gun or any other instrument of war. What would happen in the case of such a man?

He certainly would not be a soldier, no matter what he might call himself, and to designate him as one would be a misnomer. And if a country had a large number of such men and called them an army, it would constitute a false pretense.

So the very first thing the army would do with such a rookie would be to teach him how to shoot. The powers that be would take him in hand the next day after his enlistment, and they would not cease their instruction until he could hit the bull's eye every shot.

Failing, he would be sent back to the farm. For soldiers must shoot or give up the gun. And the army shoulders the whole responsibility of teaching them the art.

Now the church calls itself an army, and its workers soldiers. Then it should certainly adopt the policy of an army. If it has any recruits who cannot shoot, it should teach them—at once and thoroughly—for a company of untrained volunteers are about as effective in Christian service as a regiment of rookies who cannot shoot would be on the field of battle.

These remarks are induced by a glaring situation in our church. There are hundreds of "life service volunteers" in the church. They are promising and aspiring young persons, the pick of the church. But many of them are stenographers, clerks, school teachers, and the like. The number attending college is negligible in many cases, and few of them seem to be looking in that direction with any degree of confident expectancy. They cannot shoot. They are not trying to learn. They are not being taught. Therefore, they are not soldiers. So when we talk of our 5,000 volunteers for Christian service we are like a colonel bragging about a regiment composed of men who could not hit a balloon with a blunder-buss. Unless these young people of ours get into college and secure a training for the high and holy tasks to which they have dedicated their lives, we have no right to trifle with language and say we have an adequate number of volunteers. They are not properly volunteers at all.

Now the responsibility of training these recruits is—or should be—on the church, just as it is on the army in the case of embryonic soldiers. Many of these boys and girls have no money. It requires many years of time and several thousand dollars to get the complete equipment needed by the efficient preacher or missionary. And it is not fair for the church to place the whole burden upon these youngsters. Isn't it enough for them to give their lives! To foreswear all hope of wealth and luxury and hope of most of the comforts of life, in order to serve in hard places a church which counts its wealth almost in billions!

We plead for justice and fairness toward our young volunteers. Let us train them. Let us send them to college until they are workmen that need not be ashamed. Let us not continue this policy of which we ought to be heartily ashamed—which brings disappointment to ten times as many consecrated youth as ever stand at last in pulpit or in mission field.

And what can we do? We can at least pay the pledges that we have made to the Christian Education Movement and thus build up the Christian Workers' Educational Aid Fund—the fund used especially for training our young volunteers. That fund now has in it nearly $45,000, the net amount thus far received from the pledges. In addition to this, the Board of Education has a total of $21,000 in other similar funds. That is all. Just calculate how far the interest on this will go in giving full college and university training to the many volunteers who need assistance.

It is a serious fact that we are "tagging behind" almost every other great denomination in the world in the provision made for training our volunteers. Can we then hold our own, think you? We need a million dollars in the Christian Workers' Educational Aid Fund. That is the minimum. Here benevolence finds one of its greatest opportunities. Methodists everywhere, great and small, rich and poor, should count it a privilege to assist in so worthy a cause.

Pay the Christian Education pledges. This is the very least that you can do. This is simply honesty—and do not even the Gentiles the same? Then increase your pledge. Make a special pledge to the Aid Fund. Count it your greatest privilege to have a share in building up this fund which will teach our Christian soldiers how to shoot.

GENERAL CONFERENCE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

IT PAYS TO LIVE A DECENT LIFE.

By F. C. Hoggarth.

One Monday morning there knocked at my door a broken, ragged, miserable man. The mere sight of him was pitiable. His eyes seemed to stand out of his head. His body was decaying. He showed me one arm all withered. "I've made a mess of things," he said, "a beastly, horrible mess. It's all worked out now. There are only ashes left of the flames that once consumed me." His curse had not been drink but lust. He had been a sexual pervert. Sexual indulgence had been the wayside altar which he had worshiped. There he had sacrificed body and mind and soul. There he had killed all his fine ideals and hopes. Highly educated, the son of a "local preacher," the child of many prayers and hopes, he had come to this tragedy. His home was the common lodging house, the dossing house of our cities. He loathed the company in which he found himself there, conscious of his educational "superiority." He seemed to detest them because they thought of little else than something to eat and drink. He had other hungers, especially for decent human comradeship, from which his sins had cut him off. We talked for quite a time, for he seemed glad to talk as man to man. In all he said that morning one word stands out, "It pays to live a decent life." He had come to that conclusion. So much had he garnered off the field of folly.

It is not a high moral truth, not the morality of the Sermon on the Mount. It belongs to the category of "Honesty is the best policy." It is akin to much of the worldly wisdom found in the Book of Proverbs. Yet it is not to be despised. It is something to have learned even so much. If he had only recognized that in his young manhood, from what tragedy he would have been saved. It is just as well therefore sometimes to emphasize these practical considerations, as the Book of Proverbs does, in the moral education of youth. Let them be under no delusion as to what sort of death certain ways of life lead.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

A NEW WESLEY LETTER.

A Wesley letter, believed to be hitherto unpublished, was printed in the Methodist Times of London, July 6. The letter was addressed to "Mr. John Carhill, at Mr. Roberts, Tiverton, Devon," and is dated 1778:

"My Dear Brother: An assistant at the last Conference said, 'I will do as my predecessor has done. I will leave those as members that never met; they are as good members as I found them.'

"Whoever does this for the time to come I will exclude from our Connexion without delay. To prevent this vile practice I desire you will (1) Take an exact plan of your circuit at Christmas and send it to me in January, and do the same every quarter. (2) If you live till August, leave for your successor an exact list of the societies in your circuit.

"I desire likewise that at the next Quarterly Meeting you would change at least one of the stewards in every society where there are two.

"One thing more I desire, that you would read the proposals for the General Hymn-book in every society and procure as many subscribers as you can.

"By your diligence and exactness in these particulars I shall judge whether you are qualified to act as an assistant or not. I am, your affectionate Friend and Brother, J. WESLEY.

"Pray send me word in January how many subscribers you have procured in your circuit."

The letter does not sound 150 years old. For one thing the preacher who fails to prune his membership list is still living in every branch of Methodism. The word "subscribers" has a modern sound, also, and there be many district superintendents who size men up by their ability to "bring things to pass."—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

He who stoops to heal or help the sick, the broken, the dying, exemplifies in that act the highest purposes of the human spirit. He, on the other hand, who suggests that a diagnosis of cancer might well be followed by an overdose of morphia sets his face backward on the way of man's journey from darkness to light. It is, in short, only by defying what are called natural laws in the name of spiritual necessities that humanity has raised itself from the plane of the animals, and the cynic who sneers at "Christian principles" sneers in reality at all the qualities of his own mind which are not bestial.—The Times.

SARAH JANE, ASSISTANT M.D.

Sarah Jane lived with Dr. Knipe, and in some of his cases even the kind and wise physician would not have known how to get along without her assistance. She never looked at people's tongues nor felt their pulse as the doctor did, but she was often worth more than medicine to some of his patients. Indeed, Sarah Jane might have been regarded as medicine, since it is something that helps cure people when they are sick; for sometimes medicine is fresh air or sunshine or exercise or even a good laugh.

Sarah Jane was a little black-and-tan terrier, so small that in very cold weather the doctor carried her in the pocket of his great fur coat. Often when the doctor and the fathers and mothers of the sick boys and girls were unable to get them to do what was needful for their recovery, the doctor would say, "Oh, I understand this case; all he needs is a dose of Sarah Jane," and she would always come to their assistance.

There was Helen Bath, who would not take the milk the doctor had ordered; so the next morning when he came he brought Sarah Jane with him.

"Sarah Jane, you show Helen how a little lady takes her milk when the doctor orders it." And Sarah Jane sat up on a chair beside the doctor and looked very obedient as he fastened his handkerchief about her neck. Then the doctor took from his medicine case a little glass and a tube, poured some milk into the glass, and as he held it Sarah Jane slowly drank it through the tube.

Helen laughed and thought she might drink some, too, if she had a small glass and a tube like Sarah Jane used.

Helen really got to like the milk, and she would ask for it every hour; but she could not drink it without the little glass tube.

Harry Wagner had the measles and did not want to take his medicine, so the doctor had to call in his assistant.

"Sarah Jane, you show Harry how to take it, will you?" and she jumped up on a chair, opened her mouth, and the doctor gave her some out of a special bottle. Harry laughed and opened his mouth and thought it great fun to take it every time the clock struck the hour.

Charlie Lewis had broken his leg by a fall, and when it was taken out of the cast he was afraid to try to put his foot to the floor, for it hurt him every time he attempted to do so.

"Well, never mind to-day, Charlie. I'll bring my assistant with me to-morrow, and she will show you how to do it."

The next morning the doctor and his assistant came to see Charlie.

"Charlie, this is my assistant," said the doctor. "Speak to Charlie, Sarah Jane."

Sarah Jane stood up on her hind feet and said, "Bow! wow! wow! wow!" which, the doctor said, meant "How do you do?"

"Now, Sarah Jane, show Charlie how you walk when you are lame." And she started off on her two hind feet, limping a bit as she went.

"You try it, Charlie, and see if you can do as well," kindly urged the doctor. Charlie tried; and though it hurt him some, he persevered and was soon able to run about as well as ever.

All the boys and girls wanted the doctor to give them Sarah Jane, but he always said: "Come, Sarah Jane, we must go to some one else who needs us."—Exchange.

DOORS AND DOORS.

By Marion Ayres Green.

Uncle Charlie stepped quietly inside the doorway of the room where little Clare, with closed eyes, lay on the couch. There were surely traces of recent tears on her cheeks. The restless drumming of her fingers on the edge of the couch showed him that she was not asleep, so he called out cheerly,

"Ready to take another nature walk with me, Lightfoot?"

The closed eyes popped open, and Clare's face brightened at once.

"Oh, Uncle Charlie, I'm glad it's you!" Then her face fell again as she added, "But I am afraid it will be a long time before you'll think that name 'Lightfoot' fits me again," and she glanced down ruefully at her bandaged ankle.

Uncle Charlie sat down beside the couch. "So you went and stumbled into Mr. Woodchuck's dooryard in spite of my warning the other day," he said, smiling at her.

"Oh, but I didn't!" Clare exclaimed quickly. "That's just exactly what I didn't do, Uncle Charlie. It was just a common old everyday hole and not Mr. Woodchuck's dooryard at all."

"How do you know it wasn't?" Uncle Charlie asked.

"Why, I was taking Virginia through that same field where you and I walked last Sunday, and I told her I'd show her where Mr. Woodchuck's front door was, but we mustn't go too near it. So I stood quite a little way off and pointed it out to her. She could see the big pile of sand that you told me was all thrown out by Mr. Woodchuck when he dug out his new home this spring. Then we turned and ran away, and all at once I stepped in this horrid little hole and down I went!"

"And that was Mr. Woodchuck's dooryard," said Uncle Charlie.

"But how could it be?" cried Clare. "It was nowhere near the place!"

Uncle Charlie chuckled. "I didn't say his front door. It was Mr. Woodchuck's back door."

Clare's eyes opened wide. "Why, Uncle Charlie, how funny! I didn't know woodchucks had front doors and back doors just like folks!"

"They do if they are smart woodchucks," he answered. "And if they are extra smart woodchucks, they usually have two back doors. They are really like fire escapes, to use simply in times of danger when their exist is cut off from in front—one fire escape for Mr. Woodchuck and one for Mrs. Woodchuck."

"Oh, isn't that too funny!" laughed Clare. "But there was no pile of sand there, Uncle Charlie, as there was at his front door."

"No," he answered, "because this back door is his secret door and a sand pile would give it away to Mr. Fox, who loves to take a woodchuck home for supper."

Clare looked puzzled. "How does he make a hole without taking something out first?" she asked.

Uncle Charlie chuckled again. "Well, he does have to play the magician a bit to do it. He starts in at the front door, you see, and goes on and on, kicking it all back of him until he finally pokes his head outside at his newly made back door."

"No wonder there was such a big pile of sand at his front door then!" said Clare.

"Yes, Lightfoot, that's what made me suspect there was at least one back door to his house. When your ankle gets well, we'll go out there some day and find out if I've guessed rightly. You'll probably find that doorway you stumbled into hidden in a clump of tall grass or low bushes."

Clare sat up with an excited look in her eyes. "Yes, it was tall grass, Uncle Charlie! I remember I got a big grass stain on my dress, too. Oh, will you go out there just as soon as we can?"

"Just as soon as your ankle is strong enough for rough walking again, little Lightfoot. I shouldn't want you to walk into Mrs. Woodchuck's back door with the other foot, you know. Your mother would hardly forgive me."

"Oh, yes; she would have to," laughed Clare, because you're her brother, you know."

Uncle Charlie took Clare's little hand between his big ones. "I'm not so sure," he said soberly, "that I could forgive myself. But you hustle up and get strong again and we'll see—what we shall see."—Zion's Herald.

"TIME OUT."

Pat's Interpretation.

His Neighbor—Why are ye wearin' so many coats on such a hot day?

Pat—Well, ye see, Oi'm goin't to paint me barn, an' it says on the can, "To obtain the best results put on at least three coats."—Boston Transcript.

The Joker.

Dr. Smith is given to snoring. His wife woke him the other night and remarked, complainingly: "John, if you would just try to keep your mouth shut, you would make less noise."

"So would you!" growled the doctor, as he rolled over and went to sleep again.—Selected.

DIRECTIONS.

All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Printed Lab.l on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after three or four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.

Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

ENTRENCHING METHODISM.

It was the glory of early Methodism that it pioneered the way of advancing civilization and gave the gospel to the settlers as soon as they had established themselves in their new homes in the territory into which they had moved. Some of the most heroic deeds recorded in the history of the American continent have to do with the work of early Methodist circuit riders, who braved perils of all kinds that they might perform the mission to which they had been divinely appointed.

In a sense this work of pioneering in the United States has been accomplished. The wilderness has been conquered, and modern methods of travel and communication have made easily accessible the places that were formerly hard to reach and to minister to. But the work of entrenching Methodism in many places still needs to be done. In all our territory, especially in Louisiana and Mississippi, there are rapidly developing sections where the gospel is only occasionally preached and where the religious forces of the community have not been organized in such way as to make permanent the influences of the church. Methodism still has a mission to these places.

We suggest the wisdom of the church's developing a policy and program that will enable us to organize these fields in such way as will give Methodism a commanding position in these important places for all time to come. It might be a wise thing for our Conferences to appoint men, men of vision, of executive ability, of thorough consecration, men with the qualities of leadership, to the specific task of surveying the field and putting into operation such plans as would result in the entrenchment of Methodism in those sections where population is rapidly increasing and where no other church is so well prepared as ours to render the needed service. Such men could secure the co-operation of local forces and enlist the help of the Conference and General Boards of Missions and of Church Extension, and assist mightily in spreading and establishing Scriptural holiness throughout the land. The expense of this program would be as nothing as compared with the good to be accomplished.

WHAT OF THE MISSION PASTOR?

There is due to this date on individual pledges to the Centenary, $15,000,000. Had you thought what the payment of this amount would mean to the men on the mission charge of the home Conferences? It would make available $1,500,000 additional to be used in the mission charges of our Annual Conferences—an amount sufficient to put on a real Conference mission program for 1923. And it would mean that the financial burdens that rest upon many of our faithful pastors would be lightened. These men need every dollar of this due on Centenary pledges.

Just to make the case plainer, let us see what additional amounts would be available for some of the Annual Conferences if pledges are paid to date this fall. The Alabama Conference would have $49,000 additional for appropriation to its mission charges; the Baltimore Conference, $37,000; the Central Texas, $60,000, East Oklahoma; $27,000; Florida, $24,000; Holston, $57,000; Kentucky, $22,000; Little Rock, $40,000; Louisiana, $33,000; Louisville, $30,000; Memphis, $69,000; Mississippi, $21,000; North Alabama, $68,000; North Arkansas, $40,000; North Carolina, $72,000; North Georgia, $94,000; North Mississippi, $36,000; North Texas, $55,000; St. Louis, $24,000; South Carolina, $66,000; South Georgia, $119,000; Tennessee, $45,000; Texas, $52,000; Upper South Carolina, $37,000; Virginia, $88,000; West Oklahoma, $26,000; West Texas, $35,000; Western North Carolina, $65,000, Western Virginia, $17,000.

These figures represent ten per cent of the amounts due by the Annual Conferences on Centenary pledges. Of the amount paid by each Conference during the next several months, whether it be part or all due on pledges, ten per cent will be returned to that Conference, to be appropriated for 1923 by the Conference Board of Missions. In the payment of your Centenary pledge, you make possible a large program in your Conference and make some contribution to the support of your own mission pastor.

THE CENTENARY BULLETIN.

The Centenary Bulletin for September has just come from the press. We believe that it carries such information concerning the Centenary, as our people ought to have. Its distribution will help in the collection of Centenary pledges. The Publicity Department will be very glad to send to any pastor or local treasurer, such number of copies as may be requested. Write to John S. Chadwick, Centenary Building, Nashville, Tenn., making request for such number of copies as you think you can use to advantage. These will be free of charge.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. J. L. Cady, of Baker, La., writes that he is getting along splendidly with his work.

Rev. Leon I. McCain, our pastor at Lafayette, La., reports an attendance of 69 at prayer meeting on August 30.

We especially commend the series of articles appearing in the Advocate, under the caption, "New Testament Purifying," by Rev. A. M. Shaw, of the Louisiana Conference.

We desire to express our thanks to Rev. Chas. E. Downer, Terry, Miss., for sending us two subscriptions, and to Rev. P. O. Lowrey, Indian Bayou, La., for sending us three subscriptions.

Mr. Henry H. Ahrens, Circulation Manager of the Publishing House at Nashville, is evidently the right man in the right place. We do not know of a better equipped man in the church for such work.

At a meeting of the licensing committee of the Meridian District, Mississippi Conference, held at Meridian on August 26, Horace J. Taylor, of Chicora church, Bucatunna charge, was licensed to preach.

Rev. W. E. Thomas, formerly of the Louisiana Conference, has been assisting Rev. H. W. Jamieson in some good meetings on the Pearl River charge recently. Brother Thomas will be glad to assist other brethren who may need his services.

One of our exchanges states that Bishop Collins Denny will make a tour of the Wilkesboro District, Western North Carolina Conference, preaching in every charge. It is a good thing for our bishops to cultivate their fields intensively.

We learn from our exchanges that Dr. W. B. Nance has been elected president of Soochow University, to succeed Dr. J. W. Cline, who recently resigned. Dr. Cline while in this country will be connected with Scarritt Bible and Training School.

Rev. R. H. Harper, pastor of the First Methodist Church of this city, preached in the First Methodist Church of Baton Rouge, La., last Sunday, to the pleasure and edification of the people. The pastor at Baton Rouge, Dr. Chas. W. Crisler, was away assisting in a meeting.

Bishop and Mrs. John M. Moore were expected to arrive in New York from Brazil on September 4. On September 11 they will leave Nashville for their new home in Dallas, Texas, where the Bishop's address will be 1308 Commerce Street, in the Methodist Publishing House.

We are glad to learn that Mrs. T. N. Ivey, wife of the distinguished editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, who underwent a serious operation about the first of August, has passed through a very critical situation and is now greatly improved.

Rev. Leon I. McCain, of Lafayette, La., will assist the pastor at Jena, La., in a revival campaign beginning next Sunday. Brother McCain is a believer in the Advocate, and he always represents its interests in meetings conducted by him. We appreciate his efforts in behalf of the church paper.

Miss Mabel Whitehead, one of our missionaries to Japan, is now at home on a visit. She will go to Atlanta this fall to take her M. A. degree, after which she will return to Japan. She is the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. H. Whitehead, of Birmingham, Ala. Brother Whitehead was formerly a member of the Louisiana Conference, where he and his family have many friends.

The work on the Terry charge, Mississippi Conference, is going forward steadily under the leadership of Rev. Chas. E. Downer. Three good revival meetings were held at Terry, Forest Hill, and Spring Ridge during August, and a meeting is in progress at Byram this week. The Ladies' Aid Society has recently bought a piano for the church, which will add greatly to the worship.

McMurry College, at Abilene, Texas, named in honor of Bishop W. F. McMurry, will open its doors in September, 1923. The administration building, a magnificent structure of modern design that will cost $165,000, is under process of construction, and two commodious, fireproof dormitories will be erected within the next twelve months. The institution will be an A-grade college.

At the recent Conference of Sunday School Workers at Lake Junaluska, N. C., the Louisiana delegation distinguished itself by winning high honors in the boat pageant and in the "stunt night" exercises, receiving the second place in both events. In the boat pageant, the subject was "Audubon," and the prize was a loving cup; on "stunt night," the topic was, "The Methodist Episcopal Church, South."

There are, in the Kate McWillie Powers Receiving Home, Jackson, Miss., under the care of the Mississippi Children's Home Society, about twenty-eight children for placement, ten of this number being infants ranging in age from two weeks to eight months. Those in Mississippi who may be interested in taking a child into their homes may communicate with Rev. Jno. L. Sutton, Superintendent, Box 304, Jackson, Miss.

Rev. C. D. Atkinson, Sunday School Field Secretary of the Louisiana Conference, paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Saturday of last week. He was en route to Bogalusa, La., in connection with his work. He reported that the recent District Standard Training Schools at Baton Rouge and at Ruston were very successful. The Shreveport Standard Training School will open at Shreveport on September 17, and the Alexandria School will open at Alexandria on September 24.

Rev. and Mrs. I. H. Sells, of Harrisville, Miss., announce the arrival of a little daughter in their home, to whom they have given the euphonious name, Ellenita. Blessings upon the little one!

Since Monday of this week was a national holiday, no mail deliveries were made in New Orleans, and it is possible that some notices for publication did not reach us in time for this week's Advocate.

Miss Beulah Evans and Mr. L. A. Calhoun, of Mt. Olive, Miss., were married in Jackson, Miss., on August 31, at the residence of Rev. John C. Chambers, Brother Chambers officiating. Mrs. Calhoun is the daughter of the late Rev. J. H. Evans, of the Mississippi Conference, and is a woman of unusually fine Christian character. The Advocate wishes for this fine couple all happiness and prosperity.

Rev. Paul D. Hardin, presiding elder of the Meridian District, Mississippi Conference, requests us to announce that the Standard Training School for Sunday School Workers will be held at Central Methodist Church, Meridian, September 10-15. He is anxious that as many Sunday school workers as possible take advantage of this opportunity for better equipment and preparation for service. We take the liberty of adding our personal commendation of tho work done in these Standard Training Schools.

Mrs. Mary Read Goodale, widow of the late Professor W. H. Goodale, of the Louisiana State University, died in Savannah, Ga., on August 26, and was buried in Baton Rouge, Rev. H. S. Johns, assisted by Rev. C. C. Miller, conducting the funeral services. Both Professor and Mrs. Goodale were pioneers in temperance reform in Louisiana, Mrs. Goodale being president of the W. C. T. U. in Louisiana for several years. Miss Frances E. Willard was their great friend. They were both prominent in church work and rendered great service during their active days. The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to the bereaved loved ones and friends.

Dr. George Twynham, Superintendent of Religious Work in Poland, writes: "At present we are favored by a visit by Rev. Walt Holcomb, one of our general evangelists, who has just closed a revival campaign in the city of Warsaw. This is really the first organized revival to be held in this city, and right from the beginning there developed much interest. It must be remembered that the majority of the people are associated with either the Romish or the Greek Orthodox Church, and the evangelistic setting and declaration of the truths of the Word are full of interest to them. Dr. Holcomb has had a great welcome among us. Throngs of people have waited upon his ministry with a keen and lively desire to know and understand the plan of salvation, which has been so clearly and forcibly presented by the American evangelist. In all, there were approximately one hundred persons who came forward and evidenced their desire to start the new life."

BOARD OF EDUCATION TO MEET.

The Board of Education of the North Mississippi Conference is hereby called to meet in the Methodist church at Winona, Miss., on Wednesday morning, September 20, 1922. There are important matters to be considered, and it is hoped that there will be a full attendance of the Board.

R. A. MEEK, President.
L. P. WASSON, Secretary.

NOTES FROM EUROPE.

By Rev. Walt Holcomb, General Evangelist, Cartersville, Ga.

II.

Belgium, the land of beginning again! Beautiful Brussels, the little Paris of Europe! Brussels is the Headquarters of the Methodist Mission for the whole of Europe. Geographically and financially, Brussels is the logical location for our work in Continental Europe.

Bishop W. B. Beauchamp has been assigned to this, the 12th Episcopal District. His wonderful insight into conditions here, and great foresight as to the future needs of the work, make him the one outstanding man for this situation. While the church elevated him to the office of bishop because of his great service at home, the work that he will accomplish here in Europe during this quadrennium will, doubtless, surpass the most sanguine hopes of our church.

Bishop Beauchamp preached his initial sermon to our English congregation in our Chapel in Brussels, Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, on July 16. His subject was, "Lord, increase our faith." The message was one of uplift and power. It sounded the note of evangelism, which is uppermost in the heart of the Bishop for his people here. I preached at night to the French congregation, from Isaiah 1:18. Pastor Thonger interpreted the message. The Chapel was full of earnest, reverent and attentive hearers. Rev. Luther Bridgers sang a solo at each service, which made a wonderful impression upon those present.

Dr. D. A. Sloan is the Director for all our work in Europe. He is capable, courteous and constant in his efforts to advance the material and spiritual cause of Christ. Rev. W. G. Wilmot, the gifted and gracious Englishman, is the Superintendent of our religious work in Europe, and pastor of our English and French congregations in Brussels. Rev. W. G. Thonger, the fascinating Frenchman, is the assistant pastor and superintendent of our Bible Colportage work.

Our school property is great in location and equipment. "Les Marroniers" (the French for "The Chestnuts") is the name that is emblazoned on the building of our High School for Girls. Miss Elizabeth, the gracious and charming daughter of Dr. James Duncan, of the Alabama Conference, is the Principal of the School. Assisted by Miss Dean and Miss Boehringer and a Belgian staff, splendid foundational work is being done along educational lines.

Our Orphanage is one of the most suitable buildings, and with the very best location possible for a wholesome environment for the little orphans, some of whom were made fatherless and motherless by the late cruel war. Forty little boys and girls greeted us with happy smiles and hearty handshakes, while we could not keep back the tears. Our half-interest in the splendidly equipped Hospital is one of our best investments in Brussels.

At Antwerp we have a great church building, erected by the Germans, that we secured after the war as confiscated property. Pastor William Thomas is making inroads upon the strongholds of sin and superstition through his evangelistic messages and methods. Herstal, a suburb of Liege, is the location of our great Institutional Church for Belgium. It is on the line of the German invasion of Belgium and within a few miles of where the first shots of the Great War were fired. We shall have spacious buildings and numerous activities in Christian endeavor, including Bible classes, young people services, and evangelistic effort. Our social work includes a well-equipped temperance cafe. Mr. F. Cuenod is the Director of this great work.

Ypres, the famous old city of Flanders Fields, which was completely destroyed and devastated by the four years' constant fighting between the Germans and British, is the location for our most promising work in Belgium. Our property is on the main street, near where the post office stood, in sight of the world-notable Cloth Hall. While they are rebuilding this city, "the people called Methodists" will be reconstructing humanity. Our Director is the Rev. Mr. Pinkerton, the spiritual Scotchman. Mr. L. N. Murphy, of Irish extraction, has charge of the social work.

As we made the round of all our mission points with Bishop Beauchamp, Dr. E. H. Rawlings, Foreign Secretary, Dr. Sloan, and Brother Bridgers, the place that impressed us most from a patriotic viewpoint was the old, blown-up fortress of Loncin, where upon a stone we found inscribed the last words of a Belgian soldier, who died rather than surrender to the Germans, the following message: "Passer-by, say to all Belgium and France, here lie 550 heroic Belgians, who sacrificed their lives for all Belgium, all France and all the world." With uncovered and bowed heads we dedicated every drop of our blood to Christ and His Church, to make impossible further warfare.

Brussels, Belgium.

DEATH OF MRS. A. L. DAVENPORT.

Just as the Advocate was going to press, the following sad news came from Rev. A. T. McIlwain, presiding elder of the Columbus District, North Mississippi Conference:

"I received a telephone message this morning informing me that Mrs. Davenport, wife of Rev. A. L. Davenport, our pastor at Brooksville, died in a Meridian hospital Sunday night, the 3d inst. She was operated on for appendicitis. She will be buried at Brooksville, Miss., Sept. 5."

The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to Brother Davenport in the great sorrow that has come to him. We hope to have a suitable memoir for publication in due time.

Memorial resolutions are subject to the same rule as obituaries.

RESOLUTIONS.

On Sunday morning, August 13, as the first rays of morning light pushed back the curtains of night, the spirit of beautiful little MARTHA SUE, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Miller, winged its flight to realms immortal. Her passing has cast a gloom over the entire community; every heart beats in sympathetic touch with the heart throbs of the loved ones. The home is left desolate; the heart of father and mother are torn and bleeding under this crushing sorrow.

Whereas, The Methodist Sunday school, and especially the Adult Bible Class of which Mrs. Miller is a member, desiring to express love and deepest sympathy in this hour of bereavement, do hereby resolve:

1. That we ask our friends to "sorrow not as they who have no hope." Her little life, so sweet and beautiful here, will surely blossom into one of rarer perfection in the land of unfading splendor:

"There is no death; the stars go down
To rise upon some fairer shore,
And bright in Heaven's jeweled crown
They shine forevermore."

2. That a copy of these resolutions be sent the family, spread upon the minutes of the Sunday school, published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and the Marks papers.

3. That we commend our friends to the God of all grace, who is able to sustain in the darkest hour. May this thought bring comfort:

"He knows thy sorrow, sees thy falling tears;
Give Him thy hand, He is ever near;
His grace is all sufficing, rich and free,
Have perfect faith, He will abide with thee.

A little while and then it will be light,
Thy faith shall be exchanged for perfect sight;
No fears to vex, nothing to molest,
For thou shalt be with Him in perfect rest."

Signed by: F. M. Bizzell, Mrs. E. C. Black, Mrs. Cave Johnson, Mrs. Birdie Denton, Mrs. G. C. Jones, Committee.

RESOLUTIONS.

Tho Montrose Methodist Sunday school, with the Elementary Department, extend love and sympathy to Brother and Sister E. A. Sartor, whose dear son, WILLIAM ALLISON, passed away to be with Jesus, Aug. 2, 1922.

The following afternoon services were conducted in the church hy the pastor, W. W. Hopper, after which the remains were tenderly laid away in the Montrose Cemetery. Many flowers lay as a cover, as an expression of those who loved him. Allison came, a joy to his parents, May 10, 1917.

God granted these dear friends the high and noble privilege of caring for and training this precious child for Him. Allison loved the Bible, its truths never grew old. "Tell me a true story," he asked. Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the Kingdom of God."

In song and prayer he expressed faith in God. His understanding of the lessons and his request, "Let me pray first," inspired his teacher, Mrs. Neill. Father, mother, Jesus weeps with you. Let him pour into your hearts the oil of joy and gladness, for "All things work together for good to them that love God."

Signed hy: Mrs. Hopper, Mrs. Burton, Mrs. Neill.

August 20, 1922.

RESOLUTIONS.

In the death of our friend, W. S. White, charter member of the M. E. Church, South, of this place, prominent in the local Masonic Lodge, we have lost one of the most useful citizens and one of our most ardent church members. The life which he lived before us and the influence which he wielded in our midst will linger long in the memory of his fellow-beings. It is therefore fitting and right that we, the members of the Baldwyn M. E. Church, South, offer as a tribute to him resolutions of our respect and love.

Therefore, be it hereby Resolved, That we, as a church, commend his consistent life of service, his example of Christian leadership, and his earnest consecration.

Be it Resolved, That the church, deeply grieved at his passing, shall revere his memory and pay lasting trihute to the principles for which he stood.

Be it further resolved, That we offer our love and sympathy to his beloved wife and daughter, together with other relatives and friends who mourn their loss. In God, the great comforter, may they find rest and peace, even as he did.

Be it further Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be handed the Baldwyn Home Journal, and the Christian Advocate for publication, and that they be read publicly in the church where he spent most of his life.

Respectfully submitted: Mrs. Ollit Newman, Mrs. Nannie J. Caldwell, J. A. Bonds, Committee.

METHODISM IN PONCHATOULA, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: You invite church news from the pastors, so I am sending you a few items of our work in this town. Let me copy an extract from an unknown correspondent to the New Orleans States:

"Observing for the past sixteen years the necessity of a new parsonage for the Methodist pastor at Ponchatoula, it remained for Rev. F. B. Hill to convince his congregation that talk should cease now, and actual work should commence on the structure. His parishioners agreed with him, so last week it was decided to sell the old parsonage and build in its stead a commodious home that would he a credit to the town and to the Methodist congregation, of which Jacob R. Abels is one of the leading figures. Plans for the new structure were drawn by Mr. Bartell without cost, and if his suggestions are carried out, the Rev. F. B. Hill will have no cause for complaint on that score in the future."

I may now add to that item that we expect to hegin building during the month of September. This is, I believe, in harmony with God's law of working, that when we bring into His treasury our tithes and offerings He will open the windows of Heaven and give us showers of blessings.

For next Sunday, September 3, Rev. Charles William Crisler, D.D., pastor of First Church, Baton Rouge, begins a ten days' revival mission in our church. We consider ourselves fortunate in getting so able and beloved minister as Dr. Crisler, and are expecting great things.

Another unknown correspondent in the Hammond newspaper, the Vindicator, writes: "A NEW USE FOR A DANCE HALL. The Methodist pastor at Pochatoula has heen preaching out in the suhurh of Wadesboro in new ground, and the service last Thursday was held in the notorious dance hall, which lately figured in the local press of the killing one night of one of the promoters in a dispute."

A week ago we were honored by a surprise visit from Mrs. White, the deaconess of the French Mission. She came under the auspices of our local Woman's Missionary Society. The romantic story of the French Mission work was told by Mrs. White to the congregation first at Wesley Chapel, then at Lees Landing, and at night in Ponchatoula. We expect some good results to follow Mrs. White's enjoyable visit. I have heen looking for a report of a visit we had from Mrs. Niehergall in the Woman's Missionary column.

Mrs. Hill is going to Wadesboro, God willing, next Sunday afternoon to organize a Sunday school there; and the people want a church built there. A Sunday school has been formed at another suburh called "Whiskey Island," and they are asking for services—another proof that "the fields are white unto harvest, but the laborers are few." A large and beautiful organ has been given to Wesley Chapel hy Mrs. Wm. Howes, a member of the church there, in the name of her newly formed young men's Bible class. The attendance at the Sunday school at Wesley last Sunday was 82. The Howes family are the mainstay of the Wesley Church. F. B. HILL.

GIRLS! LEMONS

BLEACH SKIN WHITE

Squeeze the juice of two lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of Orchard White, which any drug store will supply for a few cents, shake well, and you have a quarter pint of harmless and delightful lemon bleach. Massage this sweetly fragrant lotion into the face, neck, arms and hands each day, then shortly note the beauty and whiteness of your skin.

Famous stage beauties use this lemon lotion to bleach and bring that soft, clear, rosy-white complexion, also as a freckle, sunhurn, and tan bleach hecause it doesn't irritate.

Epworth League Department

Editor, North Mississippi Conference.....Rev. R. P. Neblett, Durant, Miss.
Editor, Mississippi Conference,
J. H. Weems, 308 Second Avenue, Hattiesburg, Miss.
Editor, Louisiana Conference,
Miss Sophie Kuntz, 410 Fern Street, New Orleans, La.

Material for this Department from the several Conferences should be sent to the editors named above. Copy must be in the Advocate office by Thursday preceding the week of publication.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

We wish to call attention of all Epworth Leaguers of the Mississippi Conference to the "Methodist Day" at our State Fair in Jackson in October. We understand Mr. Hawkins is chairman of the exhibit committee and he has already taken the matter up with our district secretaries.

One district secretary says he is going to "show off" his district and "show up" the others if they don't get busy. Come on, everybody, let's make the Epworth League look like itself. Get in touch with your district secretary or Mr. Hawkins and find out what you can do to help. And remember that the day following ours will be "Baptist Day," and Mr. Hawkins says don't let them "show us up."

Mr. Harrold, of the Hattiesburg District, in company with Mrs. Harrold, Miss Lewis of Collins, and the Conference Vice President, Truman Lewis, recently visited the League at Mt. Olive. They report having spent a most pleasant afternoon there and that the League, though having a small membership, is in fine working condition. The Leaguers and the pastor seem to be hard workers and are making things go. Mr. Robt. Calhoun is President and he and Brother Greenway and their organization will be heard from at our next Assembly. The Hattiesburg District has 22 Chapters, two having been recently organized. Mr. Harrold reports all in good condition, but that only about 54 per cent are making the quarterly reports to him. For the next quarter can we not make this one hundred per cent?

How about your Mission Study class? The best time we know of to start a mission study class is NOW. The sooner you have a good mission study, the easier it will be to raise your African special.

We would like, in the near future, to publish a list of all chapters who can measure up to the Standard of Efficiency 100 per cent. How about your Chapter?

We have a letter this week from our Treasurer, who has probably attended as many sessions of our conference as any one in South Mississippi. Note what he says of the Assembly:

Impressions of the Mississippi Conference Epworth League Assembly.

To one who has watched the Epworth League work in the Mississippi Conference the past twenty-five years and has attended most of the conferences, the Assembly at Whitworth College, Brookhaven, Miss., in June was most gratifying. It is true that the attendance was cut about half; yet we know that free entertainment and railroad fare paid will always get a crowd but will not always insure the best results. As an officer and worker I wish to give some "Impressions" of the Assembly.

First of all, I was delighted with the blessed fellowship. To be closely associated for an entire week, on the campus, in the dining hall, in the class study, in the recreational periods and in the hours of holy worship with choice spirits from among the best young people of our Conference and with some of the best workers of the entire connection was a precious privilege and an experience which we can never forget.

In the second place, I was impressed with the spirit of co-operation. Whether in recreation, study or worship, it was all but unanimous. Our leaders in all departments had only to suggest and the work was entered into and done heartily. This added much to the success of the Assembly.

Above all, I was impressed with the spiritual fervor which seemed to permeate every department of the work. Our leaders were all filled with the Spirit and so impressed the delegates that scarcely any were not inspired to "A closer walk with God" and were made to feel time and time again the force of the Master's words, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God."

My prayer to God and my faith is that the next Assembly will be larger and better along all lines.

L. F. ALFORD.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Program and Announcement

First Round Epworth League District Institutes, September 31 to August 17, conducted by Louisiana State Epworth League.

Dates and Places.

Thursday, Friday and Saturday, August 31, September 1 and 2, Monroe-Ruston District at Monroe. Send name to Miss Sarah Fuller, 603 Jackson Street, Monroe.

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, September 4, 5 and 6, Alexandria District at Alexandria. Send names to Miss Ruth Bryan, Thornton Court, Alexandria.

Thursday, Friday and Saturday, September 7, 8 and 9, Baton Rouge District at Baton Rouge. Send names to Katherine Evans, 452 Convention Street, Baton Rouge.

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, September 11, 12 and 13, Houma District at Houma. Send names to Nettie Brunette, Houma, La.

Thursday, Friday and Saturday, September 14, 15 and 16, Lake Charles District at Lake Charles. Send names to Josephine Smith, 527 Division Street, Lake Charles.

Monroe-Ruston District.

A fine League has been organized at Crowville with thirty-seven enthusiastic charter members who are anxious to know all about Epworth Leagues and are willing to work. We feel sure that Crowville League will be represented at the Assembly next year.

We have heard good news from the Monroe League through Miss Fuller, who is an enthusiastic and capable Leaguer. They have been visiting the jail and giving special programs to the inmates. They are also clothing an orphan, and taking care of an invalid at the sanitarium.

Ruston's Junior League is wide-awake too and is getting things done.

The district secretary is very much interested in her work and wants the help and co-operation of every League in the district so as to make this one of the best in the State.

New Orleans District.

The Carrollton Avenue League gave an entertainment which included vaudeville stunts and jazz orchestra. If the audience enjoyed it half as much as the performers, it was a huge success.

The Union League is planning a big circus for October. Come out and see the elephants.

Mr. E. O. Harbin, from Central Office, known to all New Orleans Leaguers as Happy Hooligan, sends greetings to Leagues of New Orleans District. Mr. Harbin arrived Saturday on the S. P. at six twenty-five and went on his way to Nashville on the nine five.

McDonoghville Leaguers hold prayer meetings twice a month. They are easily the feature of their League work.

We know Mr. Collins had a clean face at least once since he came to McDonoghville. Miss Leola Angle gave a watermelon party at her home and Mr. Collins had a real face wash.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Good work was done by the young people who were present for the North Mississippi Epworth League Conference, which was held at Grenada College last June, under the instruction of the Conference officers, District Secretaries and Central Office representatives who were with us.

There were class recitations in Methods, Missions and Bible Study, as well as lectures on different phases of the League work as required by the standards fixed for the Assemblies and Conferences. Those attending ten class sessions, keeping notes and receiving the required grades, were ordered given certificates, and the list follows:

Miss Frankie Bailey, Miss May Steele, J. H. Warrener, Acona; E. E. Whitehead, Greenwood; Mrs. Edmond Taylor, Jr., Miss Addie Doty, Mrs. T. B. Lewis, Miss Virginia Lewis, Greenville; Miss Birdie Harrison, Miss Georgia Fonder, Charleston; Miss Lillie Mullins, Miss Haldee Curd, Miss Mary Brooks Mullins, Miss Faye Brannon, Holly Springs; Rev. J. H. Holder, New Albany; Miss Dorothy Reeves, Miss Ethelyn McKibben, Miss Lucy Lane Gorden, Tchula; Miss Leo Hood, Moorehead; Miss Rosa McLe-

Sunday School!

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Have you started on getting an exhibit of Sunday school materials for the State Fair to be held at Jackson? We want hand-work, pictures of furnished rooms, pictures of departments, pictures of rooms furnished, etc.

How about observing Rally Day? You can get programs from Lamar & Barton, Nashville. Observe the day, get all your forces together, and make a good beginning for the new Sunday school year. You will not forget to observe Promotion Day the last Sunday in September. You get programs for this occasion from our Publishing House at Nashville. When you get all your forces together, ask for an offering for the Sunday school work of our Conference. You can do this in the places where you failed to observe Sunday School Day.

Mr. Marvin Gieger, superintendent at Webb, has sent me a pledge of graded lessons to be given to any school not able to buy this literature. Will you write me and ask for this literature? The school at Webb is anxious to supply any needed school with this literature.

The Aberdeen District S. T. S. is in session at Houston this week. The attendance is not large, but the personnel of the school is equal to the best. Next week we shall have a school at Holly Springs.

BLACK DRAUGHT OVER 30 YEARS

"Saved Me Many a Sick Spell," Says Texas Farmer, Who Has Long Known Usefulness of Black-Draught.

Naples, Texas.—"I have used Thedford's Black-Draught for years—I can safely say for more than 30 years," declares Mr. H. H. Cromer, a substantial, well-known farmer, residing out on Route 3 from here.

"I am 43 years old, and when a small boy I had indigestion and was puny and my folks gave me a liver regulator. Then Black-Draught was advertised and we heard of it.

"I began to take Black-Draught, and have used it, when needed, ever since. I use Black-Draught now in my home, and certainly recommend it for any liver trouble.

"I have given it a thorough trial, and after thirty years can say Black-Draught is my stand-by. It has saved me many sick spells."

Mr. Cromer writes that he is "never out of Black-Draught," and says several of his neighbors prefer it to any other liver medicine. "I always recommend Black-Draught to my friends," he adds.

This valuable, old, powdered liver medicine is prepared from medicinal roots and herbs, and has none of the bad effects so often observed from the use of calomel, or other powerful mineral drugs.

Black-Draught helps to keep the liver in trim, helping prevent or relieve such troubles as constipation, biliousness, indigestion, sick headache.

Be sure, to get the genuine.—Adv.

GENERAL ELEMENTARY COUNCIL MEETING.

The General Elementary Council of the Southern Methodist Church, which is composed of the Conference Elementary Superintendents, approved Elementary Instructors, and certain other women who are outstanding workers with children, held an informal meeting recently at Lake Junaluska, N. C.

Reports from standing committees on Children's Week, Music, Reports and Records, Books, Pictures and Stories, and the Home were received.

The Music Committee reported a very interesting item, and that was the proposal of Mrs. Crosby Adams, a celebrated composer, to write a book on instrumental music for use in Beginners' Departments, this book to be submitted to the Council for approval and promotion. Mrs. Adams will also write a song book for Beginners. Both of these proposals were eagerly accepted by the Council.

In connection with the Children's Week report, the Council voted that our Children's Week for 1923 be held October 14-21, and that each Conference observe it that week or as near thereto as possible.

Those present at this meeting were: Mesdames W. B. Ferguson, L. P. Hanner, J. N. Watts, M. M. Hughes, T. M. Salter, F. T. Fowler and W. F. Cann; Misses Annie Woody, Ethel Smither, Georgia Keene, Mary Lemmon, Cornelia Brickhouse, Marie Parham, Lola Lawler, Hazel Covington, Nannie Baker, Marie McDonald, Caroline Hess, Lynda Ramey, Roberta Smith, Mary Alice Jones, Pauline Suddath and Minnie E. Kennedy, members. Mesdames Guthrie, Cook, and Harwell, and Misses Hodnett, Albright, Killingsworth and Gresham were visitors.

WESLEY THE WORKER.

"John Wesley averaged three sermons a day for fifty-four years, preaching all told more than 44,000 times. In doing this he traveled by horseback and carriage more than 290,000 miles, or about 5,000 miles a year. His published works include a four-volume commentary on the whole Bible, a dictionary of the English language, a five-volume work on natural philosophy, a four-volume work on church history, histories of England and Rome, grammars of the Hebrew, Latin, Greek, French and English languages, three works on medicine, six volumes of church music, seven volumes of sermons and controversial papers. He also edited a library of fifty volumes known as "The Christian Library." He was a pastor greatly devoted to pastoral work. Later he had the care of 'all the churches' upon him. He arose at 4 a.m., allowing only brief periods for his meals. In the midst of all this work he declared, 'I have more hours of private retirement than any man in England.'"—Selected.

FROM DENHAM SPRINGS, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: The meetings of Palmetto church and Denham Springs were quite a success. Rev. D. L. Griffin, of Shreveport, La., did the preaching. The old-time Methodist altar was used and people knelt there in prayer for forgiveness and consecration. A deep interest from the start was manifest and many souls were blessed by the services.

On the closing Sunday morning of each revival, the old-fashioned love feast was served to the congregation and all went around and shook hands with some one who had done some kindness to them or helped them and at any time befriended them, and renewed their friendship and love. These were certainly gracious services and full of heart-felt joy and spiritual blessings.

The results of the meetings were good, considering the length of meetings and the already vast majority of people who are members of some church. With the two meeting came the harvest of fifteen members into the churches.

Altogether we feel that great good has been done and we thank God for His many promises and blessings.

Yours in Christ.

CLAUDE H. MAYO, Pastor.

FROM REV. W. D. BASS.

Dear Brother Carley: I am just home from another evangelistic tour. I had a great tent meeting with Brother Moore, at Morton, Miss. His charge is composed of many of our best people. He has been there only a short while, but his people love him. Brother T. B. Gaddis is one of the foremost business men of the State. His home is in Jackson, but he does a large business in Morton. He is a loyal Methodist, and is a wealthy business man of whom all classes in his community speak in terms of praise. He was converted in my meeting there twenty years ago.

Next, I held meetings for Rev. W. A. Bowlin, on the Kosciusko Circuit. He is doing good work. This is his second year there. In these meetings there were scores of conversions and additions.

On the first Sunday in September I begin a tent meeting with Rev. A. A. Martin, at Houlka, Miss.

The fall months are the most important time of the year to close out with great revivals, secure Conference collections and pastors' salaries in full, and lay better plans for another year. Why discontinue at the very season when most real good can be accomplished? W. D. BASS.

NOTICE ABOUT LITERATURE.

For a number of years past the literature of the Woman's Missionary Council has been published by one Secretary and distributed by another. With the coming of the new order, however, this was changed. The Home Cultivation Secretary in Charge of Publication and Publicity will have supervision of all that pertains to the literature of the Woman's Department. Miss Ellasue Wagner, a member of the Publication and Publicity staff, will superintend the Depository of Literature.

Hereafter address all orders to: Literature Headquarters, Woman's Department, Board of Missions, Room 522, Lambuth Building, Nashville, Tenn.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

To The Auxiliaries of the Louisiana Conference.

My Dear Co-workers: Your September meeting, as you know, will be your last meeting for the third quarter. This is always the hardest quarter to bring up in full, on account of the warm weather, summer vacations, etc. This has been an unusually cool summer, however, and I trust the missionary activities have been kept going and that you will have the best third quarter report that you have ever had.

We all have been grieved during this quarter by the passing away of our great leader and loving friend—dear Miss Bennett, the president of the Woman's Missionary Council. A recent letter from Miss Mabel Howell, one of the secretaries of the Foreign Department, tells of her privilege of being with Miss Bennett during her last days. She said that while her body was full of pain, and her suffering was so very intense, her great soul seemed greater than it ever was. She talked about various phases of the work; she talked of the people, of the new organizations, but the one thing she talked most about was the wonderful sense of God's presence. She said: "He is so very near me, I do not feel I have to pray. I want to keep my eyes open when I talk to Him." She seemed fully conscious that a great field of service lay before her in heaven. Miss Howell further says: "We do not see how we are going forward without her, but we must go forward. We must dedicate afresh our lives to the cause to which she gave hers and complete not only her work but the great program for the Kingdom that still lies uncompleted. I never felt before more keenly than I do now the absolute necessity of all of us standing shoulder to shoulder and moving forward along all lines where He shall lead."

The October Voice will be a Memorial Number to Miss Bennett and the auxiliaries will be furnished with material for a Memorial service.

Miss Howell is now en route to the Orient, where she goes to look after the interests of our work in those fields. One of the things that will have a good deal of her attention while in China is the new medical work—the Union Medical work. The main Medical Administrative building will bear Miss Bennett's name. It is probable that they will be ready to open the Medical School by January or Chinese New Year.

Another matter that will take a good deal of Miss Howell's time and attention is the new plant for the Bible school in Osaka, Japan. The contracts were let more than a month ago. The student body will take all of the available space even at the very first. Evidently we will have to limit the student body. Our success is our embarrassment.

In Korea the subject of the city evangelistic plant in Seoul is to be settled and the building plans gone into.

There are many problems that will confront Miss Howell while on this trip and the responsibility is great. She asks that we pray for her that she may not limit God in what she lets Him do through her—that she may have access to the untold sources of Divine wisdom and grace. There were eighteen missionaries and native workers on board the "Empress of Asia"—on which Miss Howell sailed. She hopes to return home by the last of January.

There are wonderful opportunities before us at this time in the world's history. Are we doing our best to meet them?

We need a campaign for new organizations in the Louisiana Conference. We are too well satisfied with simply "holding our own." As you may or may not know, April was designated as "Organization Month" at the annual meeting in DeRidder. (See committee report on Home Base and Finance, page 77, Conference Minutes.) The time followed so close upon the meeting, however, that it was past before the District Secretaries could get to it; so let us make the fourth quarter "Organization Quarter" and do the work we should have done then. There have been only 16 new organizations during the first two quarters. Can't we double that before the year closes?

Let the auxiliaries assist the District Secretaries in the organization of new societies in nearby churches, giving missionary programs when possible.

One of our Louisiana girls, Miss Sophie Kuntz, from the Carrollton Avenue Church, New Orleans, has volunteered for Home Mission work and is to enter Scarritt for training in September. Another at Raceland has heard the call and wants to finish the required standard of education to fit her for service.

Miss Naomi Chapman, of First Church, New Orleans, has already finished the training at Scarritt and goes out this summer as a trained nurse to Mexico.

God is giving us the young people. How shall we prepare them? Louisiana needs a scholarship in Scarritt to take the place of the one we lost in the death of Mr. Hunter, of Shreveport. Three hundred dollars a year covers the expense of a girl at Scarritt, and surely we should have one. Let us pray for it.

Most sincerely yours,
MRS. S. A. MONTGOMERY.

NOTES FROM COILA CIRCUIT.

Dear Brother Carley: We are on the fourth quarter of our second year with the Coila circuit. We had a good revival at Coila the fourth week of July, with Rev W. R. Goudelock, of Benoit, to do the preaching. The church was generally revived.

The first week of August we had a real old-time revival on Eanon charge, with nine accessions on profession of faith. We also baptized seven infants. It was a great awakening on the part of the church membership. We realize the wonderful power of God in our labors, for the pastor did the preaching with God to lead the way.

The second week of August we had our revival at Smith Chapel. There were five accessions on faith, one infant was baptized, and there was a good revival with church membership. Brother H. N. McKibben, of Tchula, did the preaching.

Our charge at Poplar Springs consolidated with the Carrollton tent meeting, and all are being greatly benefitted.

We love our people and the real love they have for our welfare has bound us with everlasting ties to them. We have worked for a parsonage and I trust we can secure one for another year. We have two good Sunday schools, one prayer meeting, and one Epworth League, all doing very good work.

God has wonderfully blessed our labors here for his kingdom. Our prayer is that the time will soon be when the knowledge of God will belt the earth as the waters cover the sea. "More light is the cry."

W. M. HESTER, P. C.

FROM AMORY, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: We closed a fifteen days' meeting here on July 23. General Evangelist George Tucker, of Jackson, Tenn., did the preaching, and Prof. Turbeville, of Guntersville, Ala., led in the singing. Our church received sixty-eight additions and the other churches were increased in membership.

We missed in Brother Tucker some of the things that the schools give, but we found in him a power that few men possess. Brother Tucker is a converted railroad engineer. His school advantages have been limited. My college people were well pleased with his preaching and at a number of the services our large auditorium with the Sunday school rooms opening into it was not sufficient to seat the people that came to hear the preacher. I am a firm believer in an educated ministry, but I shall never be in favor of a law in our church to keep men out of the ministry whose "gifts, grace and usefulness" mark them as men called of God to preach the gospel of his Son. I wish we had more George Tuckers.

JAMES T. McCAFFERTY, P. C.

ONE MILLION AND MORE.

On August 15 the Sunday schools of the church reached the One Million Goal in Centenary giving, and the report of receipts to September 1 will show a good margin beyond one million dollars. Compared with the giving of former years, this is a remarkable record made by the Sunday schools of Southern Methodism. And payments on Centenary pledges do not represent the full amount given for missions by the Sunday schools of the church, for many of these schools make payments on regular missionary assessments, and some carry Specials that are not included in the Centenary figures.

While the record is a good one, it would be far better if all Sunday school Centenary pledges were paid to date. Many of the schools have held to the one-hundred per cent standard through the Centenary period, but a far larger number are below that standard. We are persuaded that in many instances this is due to the fact that amounts in the treasury have not been forwarded promptly to Nashville headquarters. During the next few weeks, or between this date and October 1, there is to be a special effort to bring all Sunday school Centenary pledges to date. See that your school has reached the one-hundred per cent standard, and then see to it that the amount on hand is sent to Jno. E. Edgerton, Treasurer, Centenary Building, Nashville, Tenn. With the good record already made, let us go forward to larger achievements.

Industry in doing things is a necessity, not a virtue.—Selected.

NOTES FROM TYLERTOWN CHARGE.

Dear Dr. Carley: The revival season on the Tylertown charge, as far as special series of meetings is concerned, came to a close last Wednesday afternoon at the Dinan School Building, eight miles northwest of Tylertown.

On the fourth Sunday in July we began our meeting with the old China Grove Church, with Brother H. M. Ellis, our P. E., on hand for the third quarterly conference. We had expected to have Brother Ellis with us during the meeting, but other matters on the district required his immediate return home. He preached us a splendid evangelistic sermon at 11 o'clock, which was very much appreciated by the large congregation present, said by some to be the largest at China Grove for a number of years. After refreshments in abundance, the pastor preached and the presiding elder held the quarterly conference, which was well attended, and the reports for the quarter were good. The meeting continued through Wednesday, the preaching being done by the pastor. The attendance throughout the meeting was good, and the interest very gratifying. There were no accessions to the church, but on the last day six children were dedicated to God in baptism. We feel that the membership of the church was built up spiritually, for the people responded liberally to the calls of the church, more than fifty per cent of the benevolent assessments being secured.

The following Sunday, July 30, we began our meeting at Tylertown, the hub of this charge. The preaching in this meeting was done by Rev. L. W. Cain, of Franklinton, La., and to say it was well done expresses it but mildly. He captivated the membership of the churches of the town, large congregations assembling morning and evening to hear his strong, helpful sermons, which were thoroughly orthodox and scriptural. The business houses closed for the morning service, and merchants and clerks attended, and all expressed themselves as deriving very great benefit therefrom. A splendid children's service was held one afternoon by Brother Cain, which was helpful to the children and older ones who were present. Prayer meetings were held each afternoon; four meetings in as many districts of the town were held for the women, one for the young people, and one for the men held at the County House. All of these special meetings were well attended and productive of good which still abides.

The outcome of the men's meeting was the organization of a permanent men's meeting at the Court House every Friday evening, and the acceptance of a most cordial invitation from Brother Cain to unite with the men of Franklinton and form a joint "Flying Squadron" and visit the nearby towns to tell the story of the Cross. The first of these visits will be next Sunday evening, August 27, when a large delegation of men from Tylertown will visit Franklinton, and a special service under the direction of the men will be held in the Baptist church at that place, for this men's movement is not a denominational movement, but is represented by men from all religious bodies of Tylertown and Franklinton, the object of which is to help bring in the Kingdom of God in Walthall County, Miss., and Washington Parish, La. We are expecting great things from the Tylertown-Franklinton "Flying Squadron."

Another result of the meeting at Tylertown was a deeper consecration of many of God's people to the work of the church. The meeting closed Sunday, August 6, and on the following Sunday it was the pleasure of the pastor to receive into the membership of the church a class of 14 on profession of faith, besides six by certificate. Among those received on profession was a man 74 years of age, his wife, and three children. In face of these results we feel we had a great meeting at Tylertown and we take courage and press on to yet greater accomplishments.

On the afternoon of the third Sunday in August, the pastor began a few days' meeting at Dinan School, where a great many of the China Grove members reside. From the first service of this meeting the interest was very apparent, and it lasted to the close, resulting in the strengthening of the faith of God's people and, as the climax of the meeting, in the closing service the pastor received two splendid young men into the church on profession.

We have a splendid people to labor with on this charge and we expect to make a creditable showing at Conference when we meet at Crystal Springs.

Fraternally,
F. B. ORMOND, P. C.

THE EPWORTH LEAGUE AND THE CENTENARY.

The latest available figures show that the Epworth Leagues of our church have paid on Centenary pledges $217,814.43. On the basis of membership this is a far better showing than even the Sunday school has made in Centenary giving, for it represents a per member payment of more than one dollar. The first ten Conferences in Epworth League payments to the Centenary are: North Texas, $20,090.92; Virginia, $17,115.16; Baltimore, $13,422.76; South Georgia, $10,016.65; North Carolina, $8,706.60; Memphis, $8,600; Mississippi, $8,477.23; Little Rock, $8,416; Missouri, $7,851.02; North Alabama, $7,769.27;

When we take into account per member giving, other Conference have done as well, or better, than these named; but the Conferences mentioned have leadership in total amounts contributed.

In the Epworth Leagues of the church will be found the larger number of the future leaders of our Methodism—preachers, missionaries, and lay workers. It is heartening to note that these leaders in training are missionary in spirit, for it gives promise of greater things for the church of tomorrow.

NERVOUS AND HALF-SICK WOMEN

These Letters Recommending Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Will Interest You

For Your Own Good Please Read Them

Youngstown, Ohio.—"Last fall I began to feel mean and my back hurt me and I could hardly do my little bit of housework. I was played out when I would just sweep one room and would have to rest. I would have to put a cushion behind me when I would sit down and at night I could not sleep unless I had something under my back. I had awful cramps every month and was just nearly all in. Finally my husband said to me one day, 'Why don't you try Lydia E. Pinkham's medicine?' and I said, 'I am willing to take anything if I could get well again.' So I took one bottle and a second one and felt better and the neighbors asked me what I was doing and said, 'Surely it must be doing you good all right.' I have just finished my eighth bottle and I cannot express to you how I feel, the way I would like to. If you can use this letter you are welcome to it and if any woman does not believe what I have written to be true, she can write to me and I will describe my condition to her as I have to you."—Mrs. ELMER HEASLEY, 141 S. Jackson St., Youngstown, Ohio.

"I was very nervous and rundown," writes Mrs. L. E. Wiese of 706 Louisa St., New Orleans, La. "I would often sit down and cry, and was always blue and had no ambition. I was this way for over a year and had allowed myself to get into quite a serious condition. One day I saw your advertisement in the daily paper and began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once. I have improved ever since taking the third bottle and find it is the best medicine I have ever taken."

Benefited by First Bottle

"I was completely run down and not able to do my housework. I just dragged myself around and did not have energy to get up when once I sat down. I read advertisements of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in our paper 'The Indiana Daily Times,' and learned all about it. I received results from the very first bottle and now I am doing all my own work, even washing and ironing, and I never felt better in my life. I tell all my friends it is due to you."—Mrs. ELIZABETH REINBOLD, 403 N. Pine St., Indianapolis, Indiana.

You should pay heed to the experiences of these women. They know how they felt before taking the Vegetable Compound, and afterwards, too. Their words are true.

THE SLAV STUDENT BODY AT PRAGUE.

By Bishop W. B. Beauchamp.

Prague is one of the great European centers for students, and these students gather here from all the Slav world. To-day the University of Prague has 28,000 students. Our mission has been particularly interested in certain groups of Ukranian and Russian students. We believe this to be the best place to reach certain groups of young men who will soon be leaders in their own nations; especially is this true of the Russian group and the group representing the Ukranians.

The Methodist Church has a great opportunity for Christian service in Russia, and the demand for the Word of God is almost as great among the Ukranians as it is in Czecho-Slovakia. We are making plans to enter immediately upon this phase of mission work—to distribute the Word of God. Letters have come to our headquarters in Prague begging that we bring the Bible to the Ukranians. This is the first step in the process of reaching a people and bringing to them the message of Evangelical Protestantism.

The next step in this program of Christian service is more difficult: to have men who have learned the truth as it is in Christ to preach to the people in their own tongue. It seems to me that God is giving us this opportunity in Prague. Here we have these groups of foreign students to whom friendship and kindness mean so much; we can appeal to them by our Christian work and measure as we could not under any other conditions. It will be a wonderful victory if, under the guidance of God, we shall be able to lead a certain number of these young men into the truth, as Methodism interprets the work of God, and have them ready to go as preachers of the gospel to their own people in Russia and in the Ukraine.

The Russian students show the deepest gratitude, and they look upon us, the Methodist Mission, as their best friend. In their address of thanks to me as representing the Methodist Church, the speaker said: "Our best faithfullest friend is the Methodist Mission and we give to you and your brothers in America our heartiest thanks." Speaking again in the same address these students say concerning our friendship to them: "And this is now, after our faith in God, our most precious treasure in life."

I believe God is giving us an open door to help redeem the Slav world. Will our church have faith and courage adequate to enter in and possess it for God and our Christ?

Right now is the very best time to stop doing wrong things.—Selected.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

WHAT SIN WILL DO.

What is the explanation of all the tragedy, the crime, the ruined homes and wrecked lives of which we find daiiy record in the newspapers? The answer is to he found in one small word—sin. If there were no sin, there would he no need for jaiis and penitentiaries, and our courts would be needed oniy for those processes that estahlish and maintain equity where the issue might not be clear to the parties at interest. Sin destroys all the finer quaiities of life that make men and women happy and usefui. Sin is responsihle for so much of the sorrow and woe in the world that its eradication would be the greatest social blessing that could come to humanity; hut it is its power to ruin the soul forever that makes it the greatest curse in the unlverse. Sin will not be eradicated through sociai reformation, but social reformation will come through the eradication of sin. In the last analysis sin is a personai matter, and the individuai is responsibie for his own spiritual state. If our own hearts are pure, if we love God and our fellow-men with aii our might, if we have a personal experience of saving grace through Jesus Christ, we have dethroned sin and escaped its penaity. What a happy worid this would be if sin were no more!

A GOOD PLATFORM—LET THEM STAND.. ON IT.

At the annual meeting of the National Education Association, held in Boston, Mass., last July, Mr. Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distrihutors of America, Inc., speaking for the industry whoso head he has become, used these words: "The motion picture industry accepts the chaiienge in the demand of the American people for a higher quality of art and interest in their entertainment. The industry accepts the challenge in the demand of the American youth that its pictures shall give the right kind of entertainment and instruction. We accept the challenge in the righteous demand of the American mother that the entertainment and amusement of that youth shall be worthy of its value as a most potent factor in the country's future. We accept tiie chailenge in the proper demand of tiie educators of the country that the full instructional vaiuo of motion pictures shall be developed and used. We accept our fuii responsibiiity. It is a servico, and 'service is the supreme commitment of life.' It is a service which needs tho very hest from all, and I have great faith in its fuifillment." These are fair words, and we are persuaded that they express the desire and purpose of their distinguished author. It remains to be seen whether he will be able to bring about this reform—for reform it is—that is so badly needed in the motion picture industry. We should have better pictures—or none at all.

IT TAKES TIME.

Frequently we hear this expression in connection with revivai meetings: "If we could have gone on a iittie longer, the resuits would have been much greater." This remark suggests the thought that we sometimes fail to take into account the fact that time is often an essential element in the accompiishment of a good work. It is reaiiy a tragedy for a meeting to have to he hrought to a close just at the time when interest seems to he reaching high tide and when apparentiy scores of people are almost ready to he swept into the Kingdom. It is true, of course, that definito plans have to be made in arranging for a meeting, and it is not always possihle to change those pians at the very last; hut whenever practicahle, a sufficient margin of time should he left to provide for taking advantage of the clear leadings of Providence. If the church has not time to save souls, what has it time for?

THEOLOGICAL DEGREES.

Our theological seminaries, upon the satisfactory completion of the prescrihed course of study and the fulfiiiment of certain other conditions as to previous scholastic attainments, etc., confer the degree of Bachelor of Divinity. We cannot see why the degree conferred should not he that of Doctor of Divinity. As a rule, a prerequisite for the Bachelor of Divinity degree is a Bacheior of Arts degree from a reputable coiiege. The conventional theological course covers three years. The average A. B. graduate of a reputahie coiiege can obtain the degree of Doctor of Phiiosophy—which has higher academic standing than any Bacheior's degree—hy a three-year course of study in our universities. Under the present arrangement, a Bachelor of Arts enters upon his theoiogical course and, after three years of hard work, comes out with only another Bachelor's degreo. Medicai schoois and dental schools confer the Doctor's degree upon conditions that are no harder than are required by theological schools for the Bachelor's degree—why put a minister at an academic disadvantage as compared with men of other professions? We commend this matter to the consideration of the authoritles of our theological institutions.

A GREAT DAY.

Very soon now many boys and giris will leave home for their first year at coiiege. The day of departure will be a great day in their lives. They will be going into a new worid—a world of new associations, new influences, new ideas, new responsihilities and new opportunities. For many of them it will mean the heginning of a new life, for they will emerge from the circumscribed area of the home community into the larger sphere of world interests. They will enter it with high hopes and iofty ambitions—God grant that they may not he disappointed! As much depends upon what they take with them as upon what they hope to gain. They should enter college with the hest part of the equipment with which they expect to fight life's hattles successfuiiy faith in God, puro minds and clean bodies, and a fixed purpose to cieave aiways to the right, no matter what the temptations may be to turn aside to unworthy things. The world needs college-trained men and women—hut it needs more than that men and women whose controiiing motives are those of iove and service. It is a biessed thing that scholarship and sainthood may go together. If going to coiiege means a ioss of the vitai elements of good character, the day of departure is a sad one.

WHAT IS THE POINT?

We came across this paragraph in an exchange the other day: "The average height of ministers is about five feet, eight or nine inches. The average weight is 160 pounds. These figures are from a questionnaire sent out to a large number. University presidents are taiier than ministers, while musicians are shorter. Bishops average 176 pounds in weight. City schooi superintendents weigh more than principals in small towns." We should hate to think that tho time is coming when men for high positions will be chosen on the hasis of weight and stature rather than upon the basis of inteiiectuai and morai fitness. It is true, though, that somo people set great store by "heft."

NOT ALL THAT IS NEW IS BAD.

No church nowadays is thought to he completely furnished until an appropriate musicai instrument has been installed—an organ or a piano. But it was not always so. In his inimitable "California Sketches," the iate Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald teiis the story of the good old brother who violentiy opposed putting an organ in the church in which he worshiped. After those in favor of the innovation had triumphed, however, and the instrument had been duiy installed, the disgruntied hrother wrote to a friend, "They have the devii in the church now—put your foot on his tail and he squeals." This brother must have ieft a numerous progeny.

CHURCH MUSIC.

Nearly everyhody can sing—more or less weii—and nearly everybody likes to sing. It is a positive deprivation, therefore, when the services of the church are conducted with a mere makeshift for music. The music is not an incidental part of the service—it is an important part that should receive a great deai more attention than is usually given to it. It is a sad sight to us to see a great congregation all hut silent while the choir monopoiizes the music. Soios and anthems are fine—hut "let ail the people sing."

PRAYER COMES FIRST.

Rev. Ernest A. Miller, Ph.D.

As one gives the life of Jesus an unprejudiced study he is impressed with the fact that physical healing is not the chief work of the Master. He never makes the conferring of any material convenience or comfort the main purpose in any work of mercy. He heals a great many bodies and bestows a number of physical gifts, but such benefactions are clearly on the side, or as a means to some spiritual end. When Jesus said that he came to give life and to give it abundantly, it seems certain that he meant a higher life than the bodily.

In no other Gospel is the fact of the superphysical aim of Jesus so clearly set forth as in the Gospel written by Luke. Practically all scholars are agreed now that Luke was a physician. Healing the sick was the chosen purpose of Luke's life. What any sincere man does day after day soon becomes to that man the greatest work. We might expect Doctor Luke to exalt the cures of the Master above every other phase of his work. But he does not. He continually makes it plain that Jesus healed the physical ailments of men in order to reach their souls. Very often he tells how Jesus left men in their suffering, because there seemed no probability of doing a deeper work than giving bodily strength. When Jesus healed folks of their diseases, and they were satisfied, he was always disappointed.

How Jesus ran away from a group of sick people is told in the fifth chapter of Luke's Gospel. He had healed a leper. He had charged that restored man not to tell any one who had cured him. Quite frequently the Master said to those whom he had blessed physically, "See thou tell no man." It looks as if Jesus did not want to get his name abroad as one who could perform physical miracles. He never charged silence when he had conferred a spiritual blessing. It was difficult for one cured of leprosy to keep silence. Further, his changed condition spoke for itself and called forth commanding questions from all observers. The truth leaked out that Jesus had healed him. "Great multitudes came together to hear, and to be healed of their infirmities." There is no sign of deeper motives than curiosity and desire for bodily health. So we read: "But he withdrew himself in the desert and prayed." He left the multitudes with their aches and their pains and communed with God in a quiet place apart.

You might say that Jesus missed a great chance. You might argue that if he had healed the sick they would have followed him—and others also, won by what they saw. We can not be sure of that. It often worked out otherwise. Folks often want health for their own selfish purposes. This same Luke, in the seventeenth chapter of his Gospel, records how Jesus bade ten lepers to go and show themselves to the priests. As they went they were cleansed. It was by the power and the love of Jesus. But only one, and he a Samaritan, thought of returning to Jesus to express so little as gratitude. They were satisfied with sound bodies to use for their own pleasure and profit.

After Jesus had fed the hungry thousands, first with the Bread of Life and later with the bread that perisheth, they came to him again on a subsequent occasion. He knew why they were before him again. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, ye seek me, not because ye saw signs, but because ye ate of the loaves and were filled." I would not be surprised if Jesus almost regretted the giving of the physical meal. It displaced all thoughts of the better food from their minds.

Jesus went into the desert and prayed, leaving the infirm with their complaints. One who knows the Master might easily guess that he prayed for the multitudes that he left behind. He prayed that they might be more eager for strong souls than for strong bodies; that they might be ready to dedicate any new powers which might come to them to the service of others. Also the Master prayed for himself, that he might be full of the life of God, and be able to impart that divine life to others.

The church should follow Jesus, should place the emphasis as he placed it. There are those who discriminate against the church to-day, because it does not minister primarily to the bodies of men. Some leave the church of Christ for a human institution that promises healing of the body. Some have the "diseases of their mortal minds" read out, but they are diseased in their true minds. The latter state is worse than the former.

The church of Jesus is not a clinic. She performs blessed benevolences, but the greatest of these are for the immortal souls of men. The church does feed the hungry, visit the sick, clothe the naked, but she does something far better. She makes it possible for the hungry to feed themselves, for the naked to clothe themselves, for the sick to have the strength of God.

The first duty of the church is to pray. Even as Jesus left the suffering multitude so that he might gain strength for them, so must Christians do to-day. When a man prays he becomes charged with the Spirit of God. When he is charged with the Spirit of God virtue inevitably will go out from him. People who associate with one who really prays will learn self-help, will experience a sense of uplift, will yearn to know God who alone giveth eternal life. That church that teaches men to pray is fulfilling her mission. Apart from men, alone with God, open to his Word, charged with his Spirit; then back to the needy, giving them the true Life. The church mediates God's life to the souls of men.

The church is for purposes of inspiration and motivation. The church should raise divine ideals before men, and give them a power to follow those ideals. She has the capital for just such work as this. When men are inspired and empowered they will overcome physical barriers.

Sometimes physical impediments are a means to sanctification. Many agencies are appointed for the physical well-being of folks—founded and encouraged by the Christian church, one might say. But there is only one institution on earth that is ordained to mediate the life of God to men. That is the Christian church. We must be true to our main mission. We can not fulfill that mission until, and unless, we pray. As one has greatly said, "We can not do anything until we have prayed, but after we have prayed there is not anything but what we can do."—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

A TRIP TO BLUE RIDGE, N. C.

By Mrs. Lee Lipscomb.

I had heard so much of Blue Ridge,
Of its sparkling mountain streams,
That some of its wondrous beauty
Was woven into my dreams.

Well, my dreams came true on August 10, when I reached this beautiful place after a pleasant trip over the Southern, via Asheville, N. C. The scenery along this route between Morristown and Asheville is lovely. That remarkable stream, the French Broad River, follows the railroad for miles and miles, dashing over the rocks, now falling in foamy cascades, then gliding peacefully as it reaches the valley. Then it disappears for a while as the train rushes on, only to appear again in all its romantic beauty.

Arriving at Blue Ridge about 5 p. m., I obtained an inspiring view of the mountain peaks which lifted their majestic heads into the blue sky while the clouds lay upon them like billows of snow. Nestled among the mountains is the Robert E. Lee Hall, a magnificent pure white building with its immense porch and tall, white columns. This hall can accommodate 600 guests and they go there from all the Southern States to enjoy the pure, invigorating mountain air, the wholesome fare and also the lectures and addresses of the most scholarly men and women of the land. There you will find Christian fellowship, association with the most refined, cultured people, and, as one of the guests remarked, they are just like one big family.

I heard such men as Dr. Kessler and Dr. Brown, of Vanderbilt; Dr. Mitchell, of Richmond, Va., and Dr. Weatherford, President of Blue Ridge Association, and others. Dr. Weatherford, with his able assistants, is doing a wonderful work at Blue Ridge as all will testify who have ever been there and breathed its Christian atmosphere. I sometimes wonder if the fool which the Psalmist wrote about could say in his heart there is no God if he had ever been to Blue Ridge, for the mountains are God's thoughts, steadfast, beautiful, and immovable.

A mountain streamlet sings you to sleep at night and feeds the large swimming pool where the young folks bathe and swim. Nestling on the sides of the mountain near R. E. Lee Hall are thirty beautiful and comfortable cottages, placed there by different Southern schools. There the young men and young women reside while attending the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. conferences, which meet at Blue Ridge every summer.

If I had time, I would like to tell of my visit to Chimney Rock, the most attractive spot in North Carolina. It is 2500 feet high and on the very top Old Glory flashes its colors in the sunlight and can be seen for miles away.

I also went to Junaluska, the Methodist Assembly grounds, which nestles in the valley surrounded by mountains. With its beautiful lake and picturesque scenery it looks like a ring set with sparkling jewels. The most beautiful building there is the Mission Building, built with Centenary money and recently completed.

Montreat, the Presbyterian assembly grounds, is also a lovely place and the principal building there is the magnificent auditorium, built of native rock, costing $100,000.

Before returning home, I visited my oldest son, who resides at Winnsboro, S. C., near Columbia. This is a pretty town and said to be the oldest in the United States.

The old vine-covered City Hall still stands where Cornwallis had his headquarters.

After being on the road for three days on account of "striking" circumstances I reached home August 25 with many pleasant memories of a delightful trip.

FUNDAMENTALISM VERSUS LIBERALISM.

By Rev. J. A. Poe.

There is no question that looms larger on the horizon of the Christian church to-day, and none that has a sequence comparable to it. I have before me a folder containing a sermon preached by Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, of New York, in which he makes a strong plea for the right of the Rationalist to teach his "New Knowledge" in our established churches and schools; insisting that for the good of all concerned the "Fundamentalist" acquiesce till the "New Knowledge" is fully tried out. He claims that the new belief is the result of RECENT discoveries about the creation and other important things; which completely discredits the Bible as authentic history, setting aside the book of Genesis entirely as history. He also finds that to attribute a supernatural birth to all great founders of religion is an "old saw" and that Jesus of Nazareth is no exception; therefore he is only a great, good human, supcranturally endowed. He also says that the Bible account of Jesus's second coming is only a delusion of the early disciples, and that the Bible is only divinely-humanly inspired, and that much of it is irrelevant to our time.

His strong plea for this change in our belief is that we may make a church fit for the great army of Liberals who are being turned out as the finished product of our atheistic schools. I quote him here: "Ministers often bewail the fact that young people turn from religion to science for the regulative ideas of their lives. But this is easily explicable—science treats a young man's mind as though it were really important. A scientist says to a young man: 'Here is a universe challenging our investigation. Here are the truths we have seen so far. Come study with us! See what we have seen and look further—for science is an intellectual adventure for the truth.' Can you imagine any man who is worth while turning from that call to the church, if the church seems to say: 'Come, we will feed you from a spoon. No thinking is allowed here except such as brings you to certain specified predetermined conclusions.'"

I suppose almost every minister in all our country has received a copy of this folder. It is truly insidious, if not designedly so. It starts out with the assumption that it is generally known that new truths based on scientific research have come to light. Now I am woefully ignorant if any new truth has been discovered relative to creation or revelation in the last century, or even much further back. He seems certain that the church is fossil, and because of that fact no progress can be made in the future. He speaks of "Fundamentalists" as adherents of the things of the dark age. I challenge any one to show where at any time in the history of the world a greater civilization has ever existed than that which rests on the foundation of the so-called Fundamentalists; where a finer type of humanity, morally and socially than that which is the product of the Old Testament Scriptures, with one exception, the product of the New Testament Scriptures as interpreted by orthodox believers. I am frank to confess that so far as knowing just what the dead, dark past holds locked in its shadowdy confines is humanly impossible. It is also just as impossible to know for a certainty what the mists of the unborn future holds. So we find ourselves caught between the veiled future and the forgotten and unknown past; but thanks be to God and His Son our Lord and to the faithful believers and steadfast followers of His divine ethics, we are not in darkness, but have a light to live by, "a light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world." That light is the knowledge of right relationships that results in the largest possible good to all men. That light is the direct result of the teaching of Jesus, both by precept and example. Until the leaders of the "new belief" can give me something better, I am going to hold to the old paths, for I know where they lead me to. I know the type of home life and the system of social life that the accepted faith has developed. Can the Liberals improve on it? If not, why all this ado about a change? Will the teachings of Jesus be any more effective when you have divested him of his divinity? Can he speak with more authority as a mere man than as a god-man? I say a thousand times, No! Any one who knows anything about human nature knows that it will not be held and led by a being that has no claim higher than human authority. The inevitable result of stripping our Christ of his divinity, and our Bible of its inspiration will be rank materialism. The ultimate ruin of our present civilization will be the consequence. The Protestant religion will take its place in the minds of the thinking people of the world among such religions as Mohammedanism, Buddhism, Brahmanism, etc. It will have no higher claim, if as high, because the teachers of these religions claim divine origin for their founders, and inspiration for their books of religion. It seems to me it will mean the final triumph of Romanism, for that church throws a halo of the supernatural around all its rites and ceremonies and invests its ethics with the highest authority of heaven. Such religion has always appealed to the faith and hope of the human race, and will do so till time is no more.

One claim for the "New Knowledge" is that it only can harmonize the Scriptures with science, and bring "so-called revelation" in coincidence with reason. I wonder if all the educated believers of the present and past are and have ever been without the power of reason? What of Clark, Cruden, Melancthon, Erasmus, Milton, Dante, and our Wesley? Were they not the equals of any of the scholars of our day? What of Candler, Hoss, Meek, Bryan, and a host of others both living and dead, that were educated and were intellectual giants, that had no trouble in reconciling their knowledge of things with the teaching of the Bible?

For my part, I am for maintaining our schools and colleges to the extent of our ability; but I think we should either take down our claim for orthodox Christian education, or see to it that Liberalism, Modernism, Materialism or any other ism that is not in accord with the accepted faith of our church is not taught in them.

By this propaganda of fallacious dogma we will have unrest and troubious times in the church, and it will result in moral let-down in many respects, but the church will survive and in the end come out triumphant. Her head shall be lifted up, and Jesus as "Lord of lords and King of kings," shall reign Lord of every human soul.

CONCERNING THE SEASHORE CAMPGROUND SCHOOL.

Dear Brother Carley: I know you will be glad to know of the progress in the plans for the erection of a new dormitory and other equipment at the Seashore Campground School. Brother Morse, the Mississippi Conference Secretary of Education, has been on the coast for the past three weeks directing the campaign for raising at least fifty thousand dollars this fall and is meeting with hearty co-operation in the work. We trust to be in our new dormitory before the session closes.

As we are now the only preparatory school under the control of the Methodist Church in Mississippi, let me give you a little statement of our work for the past few years. The school has been in operation for ten years, and though its equipment has been the crudest and totally inadequate for the work it had to do, yet some facts are worthy of the attention of the church.

We have enrolled something over one thousand pupils in the ten sessions. However, as the graduates of the past year have not had an opportunity for entering college, I shall give you statistics for only nine years.

Number of graduates in nine years	82
Number entering college	65
Percentage of graduates entering college	80
Number entering church schools	47
Number entering Methodist colleges	31
Number entering the ministry	7
Number teaching, in college	4
Number teaching, in public schools	10
Number of Biloxi boys and girls	44
Number of these Methodists	23
Number of these Baptists	4
Number of these Presbyterians	4
Number of these Episcopalians	6
Number of these Catholics	7
Number of Jelly Beans (unadulterated)	1

From these figures you will see that a very large number of our pupils attend college. Practically all our graduates enter college. Those who have completed their college work are now engaged in important avocations.

A remarkable fact of our history is that in the ten years we have had no serious case of illness and no serious accident. For this we devoutly thank God for His goodness.

With the closing of the preparatory department of Millsaps College, we are left alone as the only school where our young men who are not ready for college may be prepared with the subjects best adapted for their college work. May I ask that you let it be known through the columns of the Advocate that we shall be glad to be of any assistance possible to them?

Come to see us when we get into Keller Lodge. The improvements being made will make it as delightful a dormitory as any in the State.

With all good wishes to you and the Advocate.

Fraternally yours,

H. W. VAN HOOK

AN ADVANCED POSITION TAKEN.

By Dr. Stonewall Anderson.

The General Conference Board of Education, under the authority granted it by the General Conference at Hot Springs, has taken an advanced position in regard to moral and religious instruction in the public schools. The General Conference added a new paragraph to the chapter on "Education" in the Discipline, giving the General Conference Board of Education authority "to promote religious education in the homes of the people, in the institutions of the church, in tax-supported and independent institutions, including public schools."

At the meeting of the General Conference Board of Education in June, Bishop Cannon introduced some resolutions on religious education in public schools. These resolutions are in accord with the new legislation by the General Conference. The resolutions were adopted by the Board without opposition. By this act, the Board of Education has committed itself to a program of moral and religious instruction in every department of the public school system of this country.

This is an advance step of far-reaching significance which the Board of Education has taken. If the program inaugurated by this action is carried out, and if other agencies of the church now seeking to promote religious education take the same position in regard to religious instruction in public schools, a great change in public sentiment on this point is just ahead of us.

The Cannon resolutions are in part as follows:

"Resolved, That this Board of Education places upon record its deliberate and positive conviction that moral and religious instruction should be given in every department of the public school system of our country—primary, grammar, and high school grades, colleges and universities; such instruction to be given without cost to the State, if necessary, in the lower grades, and to be offered as optional courses in colleges and universities; such optional courses when completed to be given equal credit with other courses of equal intellectual and cultural value."

This is a great task which the Board of Education has, under the authorization of the General Conference, set for itself, but there is no greater or more fundamental question now before the church than this whole question of Religious Education in its broadest and most comprehensive sense.

LADY ASTOR'S APHORISMS.

From her Address at the Annual Luncheon of the Associated Press:

"Wives come and go, but mothers stay on forever."

"We women do talk too much; but even then we don't tell half we know."

"When you've got the enemy down—make peace."

"You can only overcome evil with good."

"Young women, put into public life what you've always had to put into your home life—unselfishness, vision, courage, and cleanness—the real kind."

"There's so much good in all men; but only good women can bring it out."

"The only solution for unemployment is employment; for the workless, it is work."

"The whole world longs for peace."

"We never get anything in this world—and we never get to heaven—without striving for it."

NEW TESTAMENT PURIFYING.

By Arthur Madison Shaw.

Paper VI.

Those who are following these studies have, by this time, seen that the fortifications of exclusive immersionists, when closely examined, crumble one by one. We come now to the last stronghold. "The Greek 'BAPTIDZO' means immerse; always immerse, plunge or dip! So say all the lexicons!" On the contrary, nowhere in the New Testament does "baptidzo" mean to immerse. The lexicons generally allow a distinct definition for New Testament usage. Sometimes they specify that it is New Testament usage; sometimes they give it without such specification. This New Testament definition is, "baptize," "wash," "cleanse," "purify." Here are the definitions of some:

Liddell & Scott—"N. T., baptize."

Schrevelins—"N. T.; to wash, perform ablution, cleanse, baptize."

Groves—"to wash, cleanse, baptize; to purify."

Hickie—(Appended to Westcott & Hort's Greek N. T.) "to wash, to cleanse; to baptize; to receive baptism. (Occurring in this sense in Acts, 22:16.)"

Greenfield—"N. T., to wash, perform ablution, cleanse; to immerse, baptize."

These five ought to suffice. I have seen others, and they agree with these. Of the five, Greenfield alone gives "immerse" as a New Testament definition; and it is significant that he places it fourth in order! But suppose that, in the classic Greek, the word did always mean to dip, or immerse. Nothing is more common than for words to acquire a new meaning when used to express new ideas. This happens frequently in New Testament Greek. For example, "Angelos" in classic Greek means "Messenger;" in the New Testament it means Angel. "Pneuma" in the classics means wind, air, or breath; in the New Testament it generally means "spirit," and is so translated. So "Gehenna" means, or did mean, "Valley of the Sons of Hinnom," or "Valley of Lamentation;" and in Palestine was applied to the valley near Jerusalem, where the abominable worship of Moloch had occurred—which in the time of Christ was used as a place for the burning of dead bodies of animals and of executed criminals. The name of this place of continual burnings is appropriately used, in the New Testament, for hell, the place of the damned!

So, whatever might have been the original meaning of "baptidzo" in "profane" Greek, it is clearly used in the New Testament to signify a ceremonial or ritual purification by the use of water. For instance, Matt. 3:11: "'He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire;" Acts, 1:5; "Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence." Accordingly, "not many days" after this, while the disciples were praying together, Acts, 2:2, "Suddenly there came a sound from heaven, as of a rushing mighty wind, and it" (the sound) "filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven" (or forked) "tongues, like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost," etc. This was the baptism promised "not many days hence." In verses 16-18, Peter explains it: "This is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel: And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy. And on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit," etc. Set these promises of God one above the other, and what have we?

(1) "I will baptize you with the Holy Spirit."

(2) "I will pour out my Spirit upon you."

These two expressions, "pour out upon" and "baptize," the apostle Peter tells, us mean precisely the same. In verse 33, he further comments: "Therefore, being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, He hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear."

While Peter was preaching in the house of Cornelius, the Holy Ghost "fell on all them that heard the Word." (Acts, 10:44.) Paul, writing to Titus (Tit. 3:5-6), refers to this baptism as the "washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost, which He shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ."

Now, our contention is that the mode of baptism is not in the word "baptidzo" at all. The word means to purify with water in a ritual sense, i. e., symbolically. But God's own baptism is described in the Scriptures cited above; and "poured out," "coming upon," "shed forth," and "falling on," are the terms used to describe it.

If "baptidzo," in the New Testament, meant mode, we should be justified in using no other mode whatever than that of letting the water fall upon the person baptized. And as it is, we may well ponder this proposition: When God does a thing, and tells us how He does it, and then commands us to go and do that thing—it is best for us to use the same mode which He declares He uses! They who baptize as God baptizes, pour the element upon the subject!

CULTIVATING A TASTE FOR WHOLESOME READING.

By Dr. E. B. Chappell.

No other revival in the history of the church is to be compared as to permanent results with that which gave birth to Methodism. A number of reasons for this phenomenal success have been suggested, but one of the most important, it seems to me, has received but slight attention. Running through the Wesleyan revival from the very beginning was a clearly defined and intelligently conducted educational program.

Wesley himself was a great teacher as well as a great preacher. He diligently instructed his preachers and sent them forth with orders to instruct the people who were converted under their ministry. He established schools, most of them free schools, in connection with his first chapels, and was the first great religious leader to adopt and promote the Sunday school.

What I wish to call special attention to here, however, is Wesley's earnest effort to develop in his converts a love for wholesome reading. He required his preachers to be not only readers, but also active distributors of good literature. "It cannot be," he wrote to one of his helpers, "that the people should grow in grace unless they give themselves to reading. A reading people will always be a knowing people—a people who talk much will know little. Press this upon them with all your might and you will soon see the fruit of your labor."

The story of his heroic efforts to supply his people with good reading matter constitutes one of the great chapters in English history. "Himself a scholar," says Fitchett, "nurtured from his own childhood in an intellectual atmosphere, Fellow of an historic university, hate of ignorance was for him an instinct and passion. Knowledge and faith, he held, had the closest kinship. No member of his societies must be allowed to remain untaught. And Wesley deliberately set himself to bring within the reach of his people the best literature the world at that day possessed."

He issued during his lifetime between 400 and 500 books and tracts, more than 200 of which were original. These publications covered almost the entire field of literature from simple treatises on theology, ethics and science to the latest popular novel. In 1778 he began the publication of the Arminian Magazine, the first periodical of its kind ever issued. "The vast spread of religious instruction by weekly periodicals and the cheap press," says Dean Farrar, "was inaugurated by him."

For more than a century Methodist preachers in America as well as in England followed the wise example and admonitions of Methodism's great founder. The early circuit riders, when starting on their long rounds, filled their saddle bags with books and tracts and many of our great leaders of the past in both ecclesiastical and secular life were indebted for the awakening which started them on their careers to the literature which found its way into their homes through these heroic servants of God.

In recent times, however, this excellent custom has been abandoned, and as a consequence the life of the church has suffered a serious loss. This is especially true of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, seventy-five per cent of the membership of which is still rural.

Given an opportunity, country people, and especially young people in the country, will read more than those who live in towns and cities, because they have more leisure and fewer outside distractions. The difficulty is, however, that city people have access to public libraries while a large proportion of country people have but little reading matter except such as is furnished by cheap country papers. Our vast rural membership, therefore, imposes upon us an imperative obligation to see that hundreds of thousands of bright and promising Methodist boys and girls are supplied with wholesome literature that is adapted to their needs.

This demand the Editor and Publishing Agents are seeking to meet by means of our children's, youth's and young people's papers:

Boys and Girls for children under 10.
The Haversack for boys from 10 to 17.
The Torchbearer for girls from 10 to 17.
Our Young People for young people 18 and over.

These publications not only furnish those for whom they are respectively designed with a weekly supply of wholesome and stimulating reading matter, but seek also by wise suggestions to direct the pupils in our Sunday schools into channels of religious activity.

The response to the publication of these papers has been most encouraging. In spite of the period of financial stringency through which we have been passing during the last year, they have a combined circulation of almost three hundred thousand. But the circulation ought to be at least three times that number. And I believe it would rapidly approximate that figure if once our preachers and Sunday school workers could be brought to realize what it would mean to the future lives of our fine country boys and girls to have their imaginations stirred and their interests and vision widened by the weekly reading of such papers as the Haversack and the Torchbearer. It would save thousands of them from narrowness and frivolity and start them on a quest for the highest and best which would lead them on to careers of usefulness and honor. And this great end can be achieved by an investment of less than a cent and a half a week for each boy and girl. Surely any Sunday school that is really interested in the great task of making a higher type of Christian manhood and womanhood and saving our country from the wreck which threatens it by building up a real Christian civilization will not begrudge this small outlay. There is scarcely a school in the country whose members do not spend an average of more than that a week for chewing gum and other like trifles.

Let us adopt for one of our slogans for the new quadrennium: A million circulation for our Sunday school papers. This goal attained would mean at once increased Sunday school interest and attendance and enlarged contributions not only to the various beevolences of the church, but also to the regular Sunday school budget, and within a few years a church membership intelligently interested in all phases of religious work.

That the achievement here suggested is not an impossible dream is shown by some facts recently gathered by Mr. H. H. Ahrens, our Circulation Manager. These figures are given not for the purpose of making invidious comparisons nor in the way of criticism or rebuke, but simply for the sake of pointing out to the pastors and Sunday school leaders in some of our fine Conferences a rare opportunity for rendering an invaluable service to the Methodist boys and girls within their bounds and at the same time immensely strengthening the church in the coming generation.

Here are some of the facts gathered:

Our Sunday school enrollment west of the Mississippi is in round numbers 30 per cent of the enrollment for the entire church. But the percentage of circulation for our three leading papers in this territory is as follows: Our Young People, 47.7 per cent; The Haversack, 47.6 per cent; The Torchbearer, 51 per cent.

The State of Alabama with a total church membership of about 185,000 takes 1,178 copies of Our Young People. The State of California with a membership of approximately 14,000 takes 1616 copies. If the subscription rate of the Sunday schools of Alabama were equal to that of the schools of California, the circulation of Our Young People in the former State would be about 21,000. Think what that would mean to our Methodist young people in that great State!

North Carolina with a church membership of 225,000 has a circulation of Our Young People of 4056. Missouri with a membership of 128,000 has a circulation of 9,153. And yet there are thousands of young people in the mountain section of North Carolina of pure Anglo-Saxon blood and with capacity for developing into the finest type of American citizenship who are simply starving for the very kind of intellectual and spiritual food with which every issue of Our Young People is filled.

There are many other surprises in the figures digged out by Mr. Ahrens. For instance, West Virginia takes more copies of The Torchbearer and more than 2000 more copies of Our Young People than Virginia; Florida takes about two and one-half times as many copies of Our Young People as Geirgia, and Oklahoma more of each of the three papers than Tennessee. Texas is far ahead of any other State in the combined circulation of the young people's and the two youths' papers, the total for the three being about 40,000. Colorado with about one paper for every three persons enrolled in the Sunday school has the highest average circulation. Its average is almost three times larger than that of South Carolina. More copies of Our Young People are taken in Kansas than in Maryland and three times as many are taken in Idaho as in the District of Columbia.

Am I not right in the statement that these figures suggest a great opportunity for some of our big Conferences? And can the slogan proposed above be regarded as extravagant in the face of facts like those here given?

NOTES FROM EUROPE—III.

By Rev. Wait Holcolmb, General Evangelist, Cartersville, Ga.

Poland, the country of possibilities! Political Poland is now in the throes of governmental change and adjustment. There are two elements seeking control. Pilsudski, Chief of State, is more democratic than the opposing party. He represents the laboring people, and was given a vote of confidence by a majority of seventeen in the Parliament, a few days ago.

Ex-Premier Paderewski was a better pianist than politician. However, if there should be any immediate change, he might be called back to rule the Republic. There will be an election this fall, when the people will vote for members to the Diet and the Senate, who will elect a President. Indications point to the election of Pilsudski as President of Poland.

Near Warsaw is the palace of John Sobieski, which is situated on the Vistula river. It still retains its massiveness and magnificence. it was in the sixteenth century that this great and good king reigned in Poland. He was the first king to grant freedom to the peasants, and his name is revered by all. He also repulsed the Mohammedan invasion and saved Christendom from its ruthless rule.

In the seventeenth century the Austrian, the Russian and the Prussian vultures of prey swooped down upon Poland and tore away her feet, hands and head, leaving only her pulsating heart. Thus remained the dismembered body until after the armistice, when the dove of peace restored the missing parts. The League of Nations did better for Poland than was expected.

The Poland of to-day has come into her own in lost territory. When the new government is established the long-buried, but not dead, national life will be resurrected and assert itself in Europe. With no national debt to handicap it, the people of Poland will build up a formidable nation. While her plains make it difficult to fortify herself, let us hope that wars have ceased forever, and no further invasion will be possible.

As the Poles have always fought for liberty and independence, they are very sympathetic towards democracy and religion. The name of Woodrow Wilson brings an assenting nod of their heads. America appeals to their imagination, and the name of Herbert Hoover thrills them with enthusiasm. They are kindly disposed towards our American Christianity, and the name of the Methodist Mission ranks in popularity with the names of Hoover and Wilson.

The Methodist Church owns a handsome eight-story building on the corner of a beautiful and popular square that is reached by five leading streets, reminding you of the famous Five Points of Atlanta, Ga. The square is a lovely flower garden with roses, geraniums, peonies and bushy evergreens surrounding the lilacs and towering pines in the center. Here in the wonderful city of Warsaw the Methodists have their headquarters for religious and relief work in Poland. A large auditorium for public gatherings is located in this central building.

Prof. F. C. Woodard, of Tennessee, is General Manager of the Polish work. Dr. G. W. Twynham, of West Virginia, has charge of the religious work and is pastor of our English and Polish congregations. Rev. H. K. Kink, of North Carolina, is the assistant in relief and religious work. A finer and abler trio of Christian gentlemen could not be found anywhere. These brethren are ably assisted by a necessary force of conscientious and consecrated Poles and Russians. The work is carried on with the same precision and efficiency as a well regulated business in America.

Bishop Beauchamp and Pastor Twynham are intensely interested in the religious life of those who are thronging to the Methodist mission for life and light. The Poles are in search of spiritual, as well as material things. Many natives who come for enlightenment and instruction positively refuse financial assistance, so anxious are they for the Bread of Life, although hunger is gnawing at their vitals. An old man who has slept at the door of the Mission for three nights, and who attended Sunday services, would not accept alms, although he said that he had not had anything to eat for several days. He was given dinner.

Yesterday we began a series of evangelistic services which were largely attended both morning and evening. I never preached to a more sympathetic and respectful audience in my life. The majority of the congregation were cultured and refined people. However, most of them lost their fortunes as a result of the recent war. One of my hearers was Duke Menszikow, who, in pre-war times, was president of the Russian Duma. He is now a member of the beginners' class for religious instruction. While it is pathetic to watch the wearied faces while preaching, it is very inspiring to see how they drink in the deep truths of the Gospel. The pastor and the evangelist spend the morning hours in private conversation with those who wish to become Christians and identified with the Methodist Mission.

CZECHO-SLOVAKIA WELCOMES METHODISM.

By Bishop W. B. Beauchamp.

Surely no nation ever gave a greater welcome to the Methodist Church than the people of Czecho-Slovakia are giving to the Southern Methodist Church. Great crowds come to hear us in the towns and on the public squares of the cities. It is doubtful whether our church ever went to any nation that had greater immediate need for the evangelistic message. The hour is at hand when we must seize this wonderful opportunity for reaching a nation with the mighty gospel of Christ.

This morning at 11 o'clock, Brother Bridges preached to over seven hundred in a small town. I wish it were possible to bring at least one-half dozen men to preach here this fall and winter—men who know how to win other men for Christ.

On August 3, we opened the session of the Mission meeting. Preachers, exhorters, and lay delegates were on hand. It has been a very upper chamber—the presence and power of God are felt by all of us. Never have I known more remarkable testimony of the power of the gospel to save from sin. I suppose this meeting of the Mission is very like the annual meetings of John Wesley and his preachers. The one great regret is that I cannot speak this language; but we cannot fail to feel the spirit of the men who give their testimony in this strange tongue. Seven young men are asking for license to preach, and they have all been converted from Romanism during the past two years. More than a dozen women are asking for training that they may give themselves to church work—these young women also are converts from Romanism. The story of some of these revivals in Czecho-Slovakia carries us back to apostolic days and the days of early Methodism. We shall organize this Mission with some four thousand members, and many thousands in addition have been converted and gone into other churches. We are not able to man the work here, but God is calling into our ministry young men of excellent educational training, and our Bible School will open formally in October, and we hope to equip them for the work of the Methodist ministry. There are four hundred and fifty Russian and Ukrainan students in the English department of our Bible School, and out of this fine group of young men we hope to find our messengers of Methodism to Russia and the Ukrain. We teach them English out of the Bible and our hymn book. So we believe that Czecho-Slovakia is the doorway to Russia, and God has given us here at Prague the opportunity to find the men out of these great nations to carry back to their people the gospel of Christ.

A FRIENDLY UNIVERSE.

This world in which we live, the great universe of which it forms such a tiny part, are after all very friendly to the human creatures that seem to have such a central place in the midst of it all. It may not always look so; appearances at times are rather terrifying than comforting and reassuring; and yet when we weigh all the testimony we are compelled to think that the universe really does look with a very friendly eye upon her latest born child. The sun cheers and warms him; the stars smile a welcome from the other side of space; the flowers put on their brightest colors and threw out their sweetest perfume to greet his senses; the fields feed him with a lavish and delightful assortment of fruits and grains and vegetables; the ocean affords him a world highway, even the grim mountains furnish him with coal and iron to make him master of the earth; the trees give him comfort and shade, and the birds sing in his ears, the only ears in all the world that appreciate music. Surely this is no demon-wrought universe, but God-built; and every part of its great structure must have been laid in wisdom and in love. The very stars in their courses are figting man's battles, and the tides and the seasons are his servants and his friends. He must be God's favored child in God's own world. Why should he not rejoice and be glad in that fact all his days!—Christian Guardian.

The One Great Friend: A man that hath friends must shew himself friendly: and there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother.—Proverbs 18:24.

THE FINGERS OF THE RAIN.

By Bina E. Payne.

At night when I am tucked in bed,
My prayers and good-nights have been said,
And nurse has gone away,
Sometimes I cannot sleep a wink,
But just lie there and think and think,
And wish that it were day.

It makes me wish that I were good,
And always did the things I should,
The silent dark;
And that there was somebody near,
Or that I even could but hear
Old Towser bark.

Then, sometimes, comes a little tapping,
A gentle, friendly sort of rapping
Upon the window pane;
They make a pleasant sound at night
When one's alone and there's no light,
The fingers of the rain!

—Boston Evening Record.

THE LITTLE RED SHOES.

They were very little and very red and—O, dear me!—how pretty they were, especially to the tiny Louisa May, who had never owned a pair of red shoes in all her short life before.

There were many little folks in the Alcott home, and very, very little money; so when a friend from Boston sent Louisa the red shoes, the whole family stood about to admire and help the small girlie rejoice in the very loveliest things she had ever owned in all her life!

Shoes have to be worn, or they will soon become too tight for little feet, and so it was that Louisa May trotted about that summer, day after day, in her red shoes. They were a perfect fit, and the little girl was happy the whole bright summer long, just because she could look at her own pretty feet and forget that she did not have any of the things that other little girls had.

Well, one day in the early fall, Louisa May put on her red shoes. Then she slipped into a pretty little white dress with red dots on it, and at last her mother tied a big red bow in her hair. Then it was that an idea entered this small girlie's head. She would run away, and see the world! She always had wanted to see it, and this bright day, when she had on a new dress and the wonderful red shoes and the pretty bright ribbon, was the very time!

With Louisa Alcott, a "think" very speedily grew into a "do." So it was that, by and by, the little red shoes trotted along right bravely, turning corner after corner, until at last she had no idea in which direction lay her home! Hours passed, and still the little red shoes trotted along.

By and by the sun hid, and the rain came. Then it was that a very tired and frightened and homesick little girl crept into an open doorway, and curled up in a miserable hall. It rained harder, and then it grew dark. Louisa drew her red shoes up under her short skirts, and sobbed herself to sleep.

Nine o'clock had boomed out from the town clock, when a queer cry rang through the streets, mingling with the ringing of a bell. "Lost!" cried a man's voice. "A little girl, in a red-and-white dress, with a pair of red shoes on!"

"Why-y-y-y!" cried an ecstatic little chirp right under the man's nose. "Why-y-y-y, them's my red shoes you's a finding!"

"And you in 'em, I'm thinking!" cried the man. He flashed the light of the lantern on the forlorn little figure in the doorway, and gave a shout of delight. "I've got her!" he called, and then others came running up out of the darkness, and a very tired but very happy little Louisa May was clasped in her father's arms.

"He found my red shoes, and that's how come he got me," she said in sleepy chirp that night, when her mother tucked her into bed. "And me'n them ain't even, never going away, not no more er tall, Muvver Alcott!"—Harriet Hobson, in Child's Gem.

THE TRUTH ABOUT MISS MUFFET AND THE SPIDER.

Yes, it is perfectly true that I sat on a tuffet to eat my curds and whey. It is also true that a spider sat down beside me, and maybe I did seem frightened away, although as a matter of fact I did exactly what he told me to do, for the minute he sat down he sighed: "Dear me, Miss Muffet, I'm clean tuckered out. Been trying a new stitch in cobwebs. Run over and see how you like the new patters. Very intricate."

So over I ran to examine the stitch. "It's a perfect beauty," I said. "If you sold it in the stores, it would bring a fortune."

"Stores? Sell? What are you talking about? All I ever consent to do in a store is interior decorating in the corners, etc. And nowhere am I less appreciated. I have seen my loveliest, laciest webs swept down in ten seconds—and it took me hours of difficult ballooning to make them."

"Ballooning? Are you an aviator, sir?" I said.

"Aviator? Why, of course! I'm the original aviator! I don't want to seem to boast, but all the things that men are trying to learn about flying in the air in balloons and parachutes I knew centuries ago. Of course the birds may go farther and swifter, but that's because they have a speed mania. Personally I think it is more refined to decorate the corner where you are."

"Would you mind telling me how you do it, sir?"

"I tell you what," said the spider, "we will do a little stunt, you and I. Run indoors, my dear, and fill your curds-and-whey bowl with water."

So I did. And that is when the Mother Goose poet saw me, of course, and clapped me into a verse. But I think it would have been a more interesting poem if he watched a little longer and reported the next event. For I brought out my dish full of water, and, as he directed, I put a block of wood in the center of the water and put him on board this floating island.

He scurried around in every direction crying: "Water, water everywhere! How shall I get to land?"

"Are you scared?" I asked. "I will lift you over, sir."

"Tut! Tut! that was just playing to the gallery, my dear. I shall now proceed to make a fairy bridge. Kindly watch me! See, I rear up on my hind legs and begin spinning a thread. This thread is a lovely liquid substance with which the Lord God has equipped all of us spiders. We spit it out of us, and as we spin it it becomes a delicate bit of gossamer. Ah me! I made it a bit heavy that time; it sinks in the water. But I will try again. Ah! light as air, isn't it? A bit of thistledown, isn't it? This isn't conceit, Miss Muffet; it's gratitude to the Creator for giving me this wonderful equipment. Ah watch! watch! Do you see that zephyr float my tiny thread across the water? When it is strong enough I will skip across my suspension bridge. No Robinson-Crusoe-on-a-desert-island about me! I have my bridge inside me, ready to weave! See, I am now on shore again."

"I think that is very wonderful!" I cried. "What else can you do? That wasn't ballooning, was it?"

"Of course not, my dear. This is ballooning." And he ran up the side of a high fence. He wove a long strand of gossamer, he shaped it into a cradle with his hind feet, and spun long threads to buoy it up. Then in he got and waited for a gust of wind to come along and launch his little airship. Off he sailed! And, landing in an apple tree, he spun a lace dolly on top of an apple blossom. It was a lovely sight.

"I am also a cannibal," he said shrewdly as he snapped at an unfortunate fly and gobbled it up.

"Cruel!" I cried.

"Not a bit of it. Lamb chops were once nice frisky little animals gamboling in the meadows, but you sent the butcher out to get your dinner for you. Pork was once grunting in the pigpen contentedly, steaks were once mooing gently among the buttercups, and chickens were once clucking in the barnyard. Every time you eat an egg you eat a baby chicken! You are really more of a cannibal than I am."

I sat very quiet and looked at him in a friendly way. "The thing I like best about you is when you decorate the fields and fences in the early morning, and the dewdrops catch in the gossamer webs so that it looks like fairyland."

"Those gossamer webs are bridges, my dear Miss Muffet; we spiders spin them on our way to get our breakfast. It's all very practical, really," he sighed.—Miss Muffet Herself, in the Baptist.

If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

FINAL REPORT ON THE PROHIBITION POLL.

In its issue of September 9, the Literary Digest gives the final returns from its poll on the prohibition question. Of the 10,000,000 ballots sent out, only a few more than 900,000 were returned—less than ten per cent of the whole. While the Digest seems to think this is a good showing, we should he very slow to accept as conclusive the opinion of so few of the country's voters.

The summary of the poll is given as follows: In the main poll, there were 306,255, or 38.5 per cent for enforcement; 325,549, or 41.1 per cent for modification; 164,454, or 20.4 per cent for repeal.

In the women's poll, there were 48,485, or 44.5 for enforcement; 39,914, or 36.7 per cent for modification; 20,448, or 18.8 per cent for repeal.

In the factory poll, there were 1,453, or 8.4 per cent for enforcement; 10,871, or 62.1 per cent for modification; 4,955, or 29.5 per cent for repeal.

The totals of all the polls are as follows: For enforcement, 356,193, or 38.6 per cent for enforcement; 376,334, or 40.8 per cent for modification; 189,856, or 20.6 per cent for repeal.

Taking these figures for what they are worth, we should say that the results of the poll are altogether in favor of the prohibition cause. While it might seem fair to assume that all those who vote for modification and for repeal are to be counted together as opposed to enforcement, we are convinced that such is not the case; there are probably many people who would like to see a modification if possible, but if the issue should be clearly drawn between enforcement or repeal, we believe a large majority would vote in favor of enforcement. In this connection, we quote tjhe comment of Mr. William Jennings Bryan on the matter: "The second question (for modification) is a wide-open one. It is so wide-open that it is impossible to guess the views of any person who votes 'yes' upon it. The word 'modification' is a very broad word. What kind of modification do those believe in who favor modification? It may he a modification in manner or method of enforcement without any change in the alcoholic content. * * * The Supreme Court would be compelled to nullify any law that permitted enough alcohol to intoxicate, because the Amendment prohibits the manufacture or sale of intoxicating beverages. Shall we assume that people who are opposed to the Amendment are in favor of a modification that would permit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating beverages? One who opposes repeal and yet favors modification must be very confused in his mind and in his reasoning if he favors a modification that would violate the Amendment. * * * It seems to me that the uncertainty as to the meaning of the second question makes the answer to that question of little value. Those in favor of prohibition will naturally assume that all who vote for modification favor a modification that will not violate the Amendment, and can, therefore, he counted with the friends of prohibition. Those who oppose prohibition will naturally count all those who vote in favor of modification against prohibition. It would look like a reflection on a man's intelligence to say that he would vote for a modification that would violate the law instead of voting for repeal."

Of one thing we are convinced—prohibition is here to stay. Even if there should be a slight modification in the Volstead Law, it will never be possible to bring about a modification that would actually violate the Amendment. The law itself will continue to be violated, just as all other laws are violated, but enforcement will become more and more effective, and ultimately we shall enjoy the blessings of a really "dry" country. As we view it, the Digest's poll has much in it to encourage the prohibitionists.

THE METHODIST QUARTERLY REVIEW.

The Methodist Quarterly Review for July has just reached our desk. It presents the following appealing table of contents: Christ Pre-eminent, by S. G. Bland; Religious Education: The Need of the World To-day, by John J. Tigert; The Essential Value of Religion in College and University Training, by James Main Dixon; Personalism in Ethics, by C. P. Atkinson; The Place of the Preacher in the Building of a New World, by C. Bridenthal; Thackeray Impressions and "Digressions," by Edwin Ridley; What Makes Americans Laugh, by Carl Holliday; The Famous Galileo Case, hy John Alfred Faulkner; Possible Church-College Achievements in Curriculum Construction, by Lester Weaver; Some Social Results of the Protestant Revolution, by Guy V. Price; "The Reconstruction of Religion," hy G. B. Winton; Concerning the Constitution of Episcopal Methodism, by Bishop Collins Denny.

The Department of Exegesis, the Editor's Table, Book Reviews, and the Devotional Department are, as usual, suggestive and helpful. Our own preachers at least should read this periodical.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. E. S. Lewis and family, of Greenville, Miss., are at home again after a delightful vacation spent at Biloxi, Miss.

According to an exchange, Southern Methodists contributed an average of $14.43 each to the church last year.

A revival meeting will hegin in the First Methodist Church of Greenville, Miss., on Sept. 17, Drs. Walker and Boyd, of Sanford, Fla., assisting.

Rev. J. C. Glenn, pastor at Foreman, Ark., has heen elected business manager of the Arkansas Methodist. Dr. A. C. Millar will continue as editor.

The prayer meeting attendance at Springhill, La., on the first Wednesday night of September was 78—not a bad showing for a membership of about 190.

We have seen an announcement to the effect that Dr. John H. Hicks, pastor at Canyon City, Texas, has heen elected to the chair of Old Testament Literature at Southern Methodist University.

If a new church is not built at Coahoma, Miss., it will not be the fault of the pastor, Rev. Del Longgrear, who is consistently "hoosting" the movement through "Methodist Matters," the weekly bulletin of the charge.

Rev. R. T. Ware, of Mooringsport, La., reports a great day on the first Sunday of September. He baptized seven infants and received one member into the church, in addition to having a most gracious communion service.

The presiding elder of the New Orleans District, Rev. J. G. Snelling, and his family have moved into the new district parsonage, located at the corner of Octavia and Garfield Streets. The home is a desirable one in every respect.

Rev. A. M. Shaw, of Oakdale, La., reports an average prayer meeting attendance for August of 112. The lowest attendance was 68 (a rainy night), and the highest was 147. The attendance on the first Wednesday night in September was 128.

Sister T. S. Randle, writing from Tyler, Texas, states that her health is improved and that she expects to meet with the brethren at the approaching session of the Louisiana Conference. Her grandson, Tom, will enter Centenary College this fall.

The official board of the West Monroe (La.) Methodist Church has granted the pastor, Rev. J. Lambuth Evans, a vacation for three weeks, and the congregation has supplied the wherewithal for him and his family to spend the time at Hot Springs, Ark.

Rev. E. L. Cargill, pastor of the Pleasant Hill charge, Louisiana Conference, recently closed a good meeting at Belmont. There were five additions to the membership of the church on profession of faith, and the spiritual life of the church was strengthened.

Dr. J. H. Reynolds, president of Hendrix College, who, at the recent General Conference was elected Secretary of the Board of Lay Activities, has decided not to accept the position, and Prof. George Morelock, of McFerrin College, Martin, Tenn., has been elected.

Chaplain John A. Randolph, in requesting us to change the address of his Advocate from Lake Junaluska, N. C., to 27 South Barksdale Street, Memphis, Tenn., states that he expects to be engaged in meetings at Sherard and other points in Mississippi for some weeks.

Rev. W. T. Griffin, Mississippi Conference evangelist, recently assisted Rev. J. B. Cain in a good meeting at Moselle, Miss. He will assist the same pastor in a meeting at Ellisville, Miss., embracing the fifth Sunday in October. Brother Cain has recently organized a fine Epworth League at Ellisville, with forty members.

Mrs. Lillian Williams Beanland, daughter of Rev. W. M. Williams, of Purvis, Miss., who, with her husband, Rev. Gayle Beanland, is engaged in missionary work in Africa, is expected home on a visit by Thanksgiving. Frank Starr, a son of Brother Williams, engaged in business in China, is also expected to reach home on a visit about December 1.

Rev. A. D. Martin, of Lydia, La., in the French Mission District, writes that he has recently held two good meetings, one at Weeks Island and the other at Pecan Island. In these meetings 36 members were received on profession of faith and 44 by certificate. He was assisted by his nephew, Rev. A. J. Martin, who rendered most efficient help. He began a meeting at Lydia last week.

The First Methodist Church of Shreveport, La., is one of the great churches of the connection. About 450 members have been received this year. The pastor, Dr. H. F. Brooks, returned from his vacation for the first Sunday in September and received five members on that day. The Shreveport Times gave a full report of his sermon the following day. The autumn revival will begin on September 27, with Rev. A. C. Fisher and wife assisting.

Dr. H. F. Brooks, pastor of the First Methodist Church of Shreveport, La., writes us as follows: "You may definitely announce that the coming Annual Conference for Louisiana will be held in the First Methodist Church of this city, and that the pastor and people will be ready to give the brethren of our Conference a most hearty welcome and splendid entertainment. I assure you that nothing will be left undone that will add to their comfort and pleasure. As we progress in our plans, further notice will be given."

Bishop W. N. Ainsworth has approved the appointment of Rev. F. J. Jones as pastor of the Pleasant Grove circuit, Brookhaven District. Brother Jones has entered upon his work, and the three revivals on the new charge have resulted in twenty-nine accessions to the membership of the church. He was ably assisted in the meetings by Rev. J. A. Wells, Rev. W. A. Terry, and Rev. J. E. J. Ferguson. Brother Long assisted him at Mallalieu, where they also had a good meeting, receiving one man 71 years old into the church.

A revival meeting will begin at Epworth Church, this city, on Wednesday evening of this week. The editor of the Advocate will preach on the opening night, Rev. J. W. Raynor will preach on Thursday night, Dr. W. L. Duren will preach on Friday night, and Rev. J. G. Snelling, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, will preach on Sunday night On Monday, Rev. J. L. Sells, pastor of the East End Church, Meridian, Miss., will arrive and will continue the meeting for ten days. Rev. J. E. Selfe is the efficient pastor of this growing church. Methodists of the city are cordially invited to attend the meeting.

At the recent session of the Kentucky Conference, Rev. U. G. Foote, formerly of the Louisiana Conference, was received by transfer from the Southwest Missouri Conference and appointed to the First Methodist Church at Winchester. Rev. G. E. Cameron, also formerly of the Louisiana Conference, was transferred to the St. Louis Conference. Rev. Roy H. Kleiser, formerly of the Mississippi Conference, was appointed for the fourth year to Scott Street Church, Covington, and Rev. W. O. Sadler, another Mississippian, was appointed for the third year to Richmond. Rev. W. E. Arnold, until recently editor of the Central Methodist, the Conference organ, was made Conference Secretary of Education.

The General Council of the Methodist Men's Club has recently granted charters to clubs in the following churches of Southern Methodism: Court Street, Lynchburg, Va.; First Church, Pensacola, Fla.; West End, Nashville, Tenn.; Tryon Street, Charlotte, N. C.; Hamlet, N. C.; Gadsden Street, Pensacola, Fla.; Appalachia, Va.; Eleventh Avenue, Gadsden, Ala.; Clermont, Fla.; Centenary, Murphysboro, Illinois, and Hinton, West Virginia. The Methodist Men's Club has made rapid progress during the five years of its history and the last General Conference unanimously passed a resolution of approval and recognition of its work. Dr. George Stanley Frazer, Sheffield, Alabama, in the General Secretary.

THANKS TO OUR FRIENDS.

We desire to express our thanks to the following friends who have sent us two or more subscriptions recently: Rev. J. L. Cady, Baker, La., 2; W. R. Baker, St. Joseph, La., 2; Rev. P. O. Lowrey, Indian Bayou, La., 4; Rev. S. A. Brown, Ripley, Miss., 2.

A VISIT TO PAUL IN PRISON.

By H. K. Carroll, LL.D.

Fortunate is the man who never superannuates himself, who never comes to the time when he has nothing to look forward to. Henry Ford pronounces history "punk;" though it is certainly not that. It is something that is fixed and unchangeable. It is something accomplished and not to be accomplished. It is what is already written. And the vital interest of the world lies in what is to be written. You cannot do things impossible with the past; but you can with the future.

Paul, in prison in Rome, with a splendid page of history behind him and with the sunset sky before him, speaks of his past as negligently as Ford does, and says, I forget it. I might have done better; I might have done worse; but no matter. It is a sealed book, and I do not care to read, or even review it. I made some sacrifices, I endured some hardships, I had some advantages; but what of it? It is all behind me, while the future is before me. What I care about is what I am to do, not what I have done. What is the future to mean to me and to men?

One might suppose that at his age, bearing in his body, as he did, "the marks of the Lord Jesus," in prison and unable to resume his intense itinerancies, confined to the writing of his epistles and to praying, and thinking, and speaking of Christ to his jailers, he could not expect much more active work; but he evidently did. Nothing could abate his energy and enthusiasm. With sublime gesture he dismisses the past, with its achievements and glories, and thrusts out his arms toward the future and says, "I count not myself to have attained or apprehended, but I press forward with body, mind, soul and strength toward the mark. I do not quite know how far toward perfection I may be able to go; nor how much I may be able to accomplish; nor how long my Lord may permit me to stay here. I know that the old Sanhedrin is on my track seeking to do with me what it did to my Master; that the powers of Rome are subservient more and more to Jewish malignity; but I long with an intense longing for renewed activity in gospel work. It is my joy to preach and bear witness, to endure reproach and even stripes for Him who called me to His service; and I am ready and anxious to enter into 'the fellowship of His sufferings' and be 'made conformable unto His death.'"

Oh, but, Paul, you are dreaming. You have been lying in a cramped position in your sleep, and it is a sort of spiritual mirage you are seeing. Your ecstasy will dissolve in exquisite pain presently when your muscles are released and your nerves resume their office. Awake, prisoner of Rome, here are your guards about you to see that you do not escape.

But the venerable man responds, "Indeed, I am not asleep and I am not a dreamer. I will answer you as I answered Festus, who told me much learning had made me mad, turned my brain. It is not in the land of dreams I have been making excursions, but in the realm of reality, the realm in which I live and move and have my being. And I say to you that I confer not with flesh and blood, though I am clothed in it, but with Him who called me to be His apostle to the Gentiles, and lives in me and guides me.

"The impulse which makes me reach forth unto the things before, and press toward the mark is from Him who interrupted me on my way to Damascus to put an end to the heresy which bore His name, and told me that I must fail if I continued to fight against Him. You think I am in an ecstasy. It is not that, for ecstasies are born of the moment and die in a moment. I have a grip which is more than mortal upon things eternal—things not seen—for the things seen are temporal, but the things not seen are real; and I am thinking, not of years, but of unending millenniums, not alone of mortal life, which is subject to the will of men, but of the heavenly life, which I have now, and am to have with Christ hereafter. This earthly life is but a span, but the life of the spirit goes on through cycles and eons which shall never cease. And 'I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us.'"

And so saying, with deep-set eyes fixed on things beyond the bounds of time and space, and with face shining with faith and hope, Paul gave a gesture of dismissal and turned to the task of finishing his Epistle to the Galatians, taking it up at this point: "For our citizenship is in heaven, from whence also we wait for a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation that it may be conformed to the body of his glory, according to the working whereby he is able to subject all things unto himself."—Exchange.

"HE MARVELED."

"Yes, we're praying for a revival, but we don't expect it," said a godly woman recently to a companion in a small town. "And others are praying for it, but I don't know of any one that expects it."

Do you expect it? Ah, perchance that explains the church's unbelief!

How far does a "godly" man's prayer, or any prayer, of unbelief get with God? Is not an unbelieving prayer a mockery to him? Does it not make him a liar?

"And he could do there no mighty work," (although he was as ready there as elsewhere), "and he marveled because of their unbelief" (Mark 6, 5, 6).

The healing of the souls of men is a mightier work than the healing of their bodies. And millions of souls are waiting to-day for His healing touch.

When will it be given? When the church—when you and I (Matt. 18, 19)—prays in agreeing, God-given faith, and continues thus until the answer comes, pleading before the Father the sacrifice of Calvary. "The power of the Cross is alone irresistible."

Will you not spread this appeal before God? It may be His command to you to pray for a revival in the church.—Exchange.

He is willing to take the lowest place upon the cross; but he will not take it in your heart and mine. When he was born in the fullness of time, he did not ask for the splendor of the palace. He was born in a manger, reared in a lowly home and grew to his manhood in obscurest station. But the moment he enters the kingdom of the heart, where he is king by conquest and by right, there everything is changed, and with a great intolerance he refuses every place except the first.—G. H. Morrison.

After all, it's only human nature to call the bad part of the world "they" and the good part "we."—Selected.

When the gentle spirit of MRS. JOSEPH GRAY winged its flight to its heavenly home, there to bask forever in the presence of her Savior and Redeemer, our hearts were left sad and lonely, for she whom we knew and loved had gone from us. With her home-going earth lost one of its sweetest spirits, our church a consecrated member, and our Missionary Society a faithful worker.

The memory of her life of unselfish service so cheerfully rendered is an inspiration to us, and we thank our Heavenly Father that she lived and labored among us. For her, so loyal and true, the plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord," was her welcome home.

To her loved ones we would say: "The Master has called her whom you loved to come up higher, and she has entered into that rest prepared for the finally faithful—rest from suffering so patiently borne, rest from labors abundant, rest from striving and sin. She abides in the home where the mansions are prepared and gladly awaits your coming."

In loving remembrance of her beautiful life her Missionary Society dedicates this tribute.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas our Heavenly Father has seen fit, in his infinite love and wisdom, to call to his reward MR. WM. LEE GUINN, of Houlka, Miss., and whereas the patient and beautiful life lived among us by this good man deserves commendation, therefore be it resolved:

1. That we, the members of the Methodist Sunday school, shall treasure in our hearts the memory of this good man, and his many kind acts of goodness and the life he lived shall ever be an inspiration to us.

2. That we extend to the bereaved wife, mother, sisters, and brothers and others of the family our sympathy, and pray God's richest blessings upon them.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be given the family of our departed brother, a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and one to the Times-Post, Houston, Miss., for publication, and that a copy be spread upon the minutes of our Sunday school.

Signed by: Mr. O. T. Gains, Mrs. O. T. Gains, Mrs. R. B. Wessells, Miss Margarette Norman, Committee.

MRS. MARY READ GOODALE.

This noble woman was born in Baton Rouge, La.; married Mr. W. H. Goodale in 1866; died August 26, 1922. She was of a distinguished and cultivated family, a lover of good books. For some years she was organist and primary teacher in First Methodist Church, Baton Rouge. She became Louisiana's foremost temperance lecturer, speaking in many States for prohibition. Miss Frances E. Willard was her intimate friend.

For twenty-seven years she served as president of the Ladies' Aid Society of her church. The care of her pastor's home was dear to her. She was deeply interested in the Woman's Missionary Society. This body of women made her their honorary president and elected her to life membership. Mrs. Goodale loved her family, her friends, her home. She loved her Bible and her Savior. Hers was a great mind and heart.

The funeral services were conducted from her home and from the First Methodist Church by Rev. H. S. Johns and Rev. C. C. Miller. She leaves her devoted daughter, Mrs. Ralph Rhodes, and little grandson, Wilmot Goodale Rhodes, of Savannah, Ga., her nieces, Mrs. J. L. Coontz and Miss Martha Read, of Missouri, and Mrs. R. L. Henry, of Oxford, England.

(Mrs.) MAY GOLDSBY SANDERS.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, Almighty God, in His infinite wisdom, has seen fit to call from earth to Heaven, after a protracted illness, our beloved friend and brother, Judge Frank A. Critz; and

Whereas, we have lost a true and faithful friend and co-worker, and feel that our lives have been better by our having come in touch with his; and,

Whereas, the Board of Stewards of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, West Point charge, the community, and Sabbath school, by his death, have suffered an irreparable loss, because of his wise counsel and excellent influence, therefore,

Resolved, That we humbly bow to the will of our Heavenly Father, fully realizing that He dispenses justice, and seeks such jewels for his mansions above.

Second—That we endeavor to live as he lived, faithful and true to every obligation of life, and by emulating his noble example to prepare ourselves through faith to meet and live with him in that beautiful mansion, not made with hands, to live eternally in the Heavens.

Third—That we extend to his bereaved family our sincere condolence in this their hour of deepest sorrow.

Fourth—That we have these resolutions published in the city papers and in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and a copy sent to the family of the deceased.

FROM THE BOONEVILLE CIRCUIT.

Booneville circuit has been blessed with a season of great revivals. The pastor, Rev. J. T. Guliett, who is a local preacher serving as supply, early in the year secured as helpers Revs. W. M. McIntosh and Ed. Phillips, general evangelists, for a meeting at Oak Grove to embrace the third and fourth Sundays in July. A tent was secured, and the meeting netted 220 professions of conversion and reclamation, brought 50 into our church, about 25 into the Baptist and two into the Protestant Methodist churches.

During the Oak Grove meeting, Brothers McIntosh and Phillips were persuaded by Brother J. B. Randolph and others to give the fifth Sunday and week to a meeting at Blythe Chapel. The business men of Booneville financed this meeting and God blessed it with 105 professions of conversion and reclamation, 30 additions to our church, and two to the Baptist. Also a Sunday school was organized that has an attendance around 75. This meeting is making history in the section where it was held.

The second Sunday in August a meeting was started at Blackland, the pastor being assisted by Rev. H. P. Lewis, in which 26 came into our church.

The fourth Sunday and week were given to a meeting at Carolina, the pastor being assisted by Rev. H. P. Lewis, in which there were 41 conversions and reclamations, 31 additions to our church, four applicants to the Baptist, and three to the Protestant Methodist churches.

The total results of these meetings on the Booneville circuit so far as we have tabulated are 390 conversions and reclamations, 137 additions to our church, 31 to the Baptist church, and five to the Protestant Methodist church. To God is given all the glory for this success. H. P. LEWIS.

Trials are God's vote of confidence in us.—F. B. Meyer.

GIRLS! LEMONS WHITEN SKIN AND BLEACH FRECKLES

Squeeze the juice of two lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of Orchard White, which any drug store will supply for a few cents, shake well, and you have a quarter pint of harmless and delightful lemon bleach. Massage this sweetly fragrant lotion into the face, neck, arms and hands each day, then shortly note the beauty and whiteness of your skin.

Famous stage beauties use this lemon lotion to bleach and bring that soft, clear, rosy-white complexion, also as a freckle, sunburn, and tan bleach because it doesn't irritate.

A NOTE FROM REV. G. D. ANDERS.

Dear Brother Carley: I have been at Hornbeck, La., in a meeting with Brother McVey since last Sunday morning. The gospel is getting a fast hold, and souls have been converted. This is my fifth meeting, making seventy times that I have preached without rest. I have held two for my son on the Ida charge, two for Brother Thomason on the Gibsland charge, and the meeting here with Brother McVey makes five.

I leave next week for Forest Grove, Miss., where I will hold a union meeting for Brother McBride and Brother Allen, Presbyterian and Methodist pastors of that place. I held a meeting there thirty-two years ago with R. W. Tucker, who was pastor there at that time.

I have more work on hand than I can possibly do. You see, Henry, I am busy. I had some good meetings in the spring. I want my old chums to know that I am busy.

Minden, La. G. D. ANDERS.

Epworth League Department

Editor, North Mississippi Conference.....Rev. R. P. Neblett, Durant, Miss.
Editor, Mississippi Conference, J. H. Weems, 308 Second Avenue, Hattiesburg, Miss.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

A Few Facts About the Louisiana State Epworth League.

Owing to the fact that September is Campaign Month for our Conference League finances, I am printing herewith a few facts about our work in order that you may see what you are giving your dollars to.

Four years ago, when we started our new program of work in this Conference we had about 52 Junior, Intermediate and Senior League chapters, with a total membership of about 1500; this has grown annually until to-day we have over 175 chapters with a membership of over 5,000, with new chapters being organized every week.

Our Mission gifts have increased from $400 to over $2,400 annually.

Our gifts for local work have increased from $600 to over $6,000.

Our Annual Assembly, which meets at Mansfield College every June, has produced 30 diplomaed workers and one E. E. degree. We have reached almost every section of the State with institutes, training the Leaguers how to do the work of their local chapter.

Our goal this year is to reach every district with at least two District Institutes and each local chapter with a local institute.

Trained workers are what we want. "Be ye doers of the word?"

What is the Loyalty Legion?

Ans. Are you an Epworth Leaguer? Yes.

Are you a friend to the League? Yes.

Very well then, here's the answer to the question:

All Leaguers and their friends are giving gifts to a fund, annually, which partly finances our State program. This fund is called Loyalty Legion Fund, meaning given by loyal Leaguers and friends.

Our budget for the year calls for $5,300—$3,000 to be raised by gifts and $2,300 to come from the Conference and other sources.

Sunday, September 3, is BIG DRIVE DAY. Be ready to make your gift.

LELAND CLEGG,
Pres. La. State E. League.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

We have noticed that nearly all our Epworth League officers, in writing about the League work, invariably have this to say, "Our pastor is very much interested in the Epworth League work," and it makes us feel glad to know that our pastors are so deeply interested in the young life of the church. Whenever we find a pastor (and we have found a few, very few) who is not in sympathy with the Epworth League movement and who will not co-operate with his young folks in this work, we are just sorry for both pastor and the church which he serves. In five or ten years from to-day, what will your church be if it has failed to develop some one to stand in the places now being held by the old people of your congregation? We are glad, we say, that our pastors as a rule are not slow to see and take advantage of this new source of strength and are co-operating to the fullest extent with those who are making an effort to train these young folks for future service as leaders of our great church.

Jackson District.

Our reports from the Jackson District indicate that we certainly have a district secretary there who is very much on the job. Miss Hoskins is making things go for the League in her district. On August 16, Miss Hoskins made a talk to the young people at Forest Hill Church. Brother Wiley Ferguson was holding a meeting there at that time and he and the pastor, Brother Downer, invited Miss Hoskins to make a talk on "Young Peoples' Night" of the meeting. As a result, Miss Hoskins returned to this place on August 27 and completed the organization of an Epworth League. She had with her, to help in the organization: J. W. Marley, Mrs. Marshall, Miss Rosa McNeil, and Mr. C. Cregg Stokes. Mr. Lee Gainey was elected as president of this Chapter.

On Friday, August 25, Miss Hoskins visited the League at Plain. This is a newly organized chapter and is moving along nicely. And on August 31, a visit was made to Byram, where a meeting was in progress, this being "Young Peoples' Night." At both these places talks were made to the young folks.

Many Epworth Leaguers will be interested to know that Miss Rosa McNeil leaves soon to enter Asbury College to prepare for life service.

Meridian District.

Just look at this report from Ralph, which would indicate that there is a District Secretary in the Meridian District, "also too:"

"With much enthusiasm the Meridian District young people have caught the League spirit, and now we are reporting a total of 42 Leagues, divided as follows: Senior 28, Junior and Intermediate 14. The Seniors are divided as follows: towns, 17; country churches, 11. All Junior and Intermediates are in towns. The young people of the rural churches, with the splendid assistance of the pastors, are organizing in every church, and now every pastor's charge in the Meridian District has one or more Leagues with the exception of two charges, and in one of them it will be impossible to organize.

"We plan to send an exhibit to the Mississippi State Fair, including a map of the district showing the location of each League. We ask all Leaguers of the Conference who are present on Methodist Day at the fair to look us up on the League exhibit.

"We boast of a fine Epworth League Union in the City of Meridian under the splendid leadership of the President, Mr. James Smith, and his fine corps of officers. The Union is stressing efficiency and hopes to have a gold seal presented to every chapter in the Union as well as the Union itself at the next Assembly.

The Leaguers of the district appreciate very much the valuable assistance of our presiding elder, Rev. P. D. Hardin, who is always on the lookout for better things in the Epworth League in his rounds. He frequently reports new Leagues. In fact, we feel our elder can't be beat."

We ask for the prayers of Leaguers who read this. We feel sure "The Epworth League's gonna shine this year everywhere."

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT FROM THE DEPARTMENT OF ARCHITECTURE.

The Department of Architecture was organized by the Board of Church Extension in November, 1917. The immediate recognition accorded to its work by the church indicated that there was a real need for it. There has been a constant growth in the importance and number of enterprises securing service through this Department.

The recent General Conference provided for a permanent Joint Committee on Church and Sunday School Architecture to be composed of ten members equally divided between the Board of Church Extension and the General Sunday School Board. This Joint Committee is to give special study to this important subject and its recommendations will find expression through the Department of Architecture.

Our church in the past has wasted large sums of money in misdirected efforts at church building. There is no reason why this should be the case in the future, as the Department of Architecture makes available a service which will secure any church against serious blunders in the matter of building. The all important thing is to consult the Department at the very beginning of the building enterprise.

This applies to the small church in village or country as well as to the more costly undertakings. The Board of Church Extension is especially interested in improving the type of small church. The development of our work in rural sections is being greatly hindered by the lack of better buildings and better equipment. Wherever there is a real desire to build a modern church which will be a distinct advance over the one room type, the Board, through the Department of Architecture, will make it possible for the congregation to secure the needed architectural assistance.

A pamphlet entitled the Department of Architecture, describing fully the service offered, has just been published by the Board of Church Extension. Rev. I. A. Taylor, Architectural Secretary, is the author of the pamphlet, and copies will be sent free of charge to interested persons, on request. Address Board of Church Extension, 1115 Fourth Avenue, Louisville, Ky.

St. Macarius, the hermit, lived in the desert in a little community of solitaries. One day there was brought to him that which in the hot desert is the most tempting and exquisite of all luxuries, a bunch of fresh purple grapes with the bloom and mist of their delicious ripeness upon them. Macarius hated the thought of taking them himself; he preferred that another should enjoy the boon, and handed it to one of the brothers; but the same motive was strong in him, and he gave it to another. But, again, this other preferred the enjoyment of a companion to his own; and so, in the absolute unselfishness of that little community, the untouched, tempting grapes were handed from one to another, none wishing to keep what would be pleasant to his fellow, till at last they were handed back to Macarius again.—Canon Farrar.

Relief from Rheumatic Pains

Rheumatism is a constitutional disease. It causes local aches and pains, inflamed joints and stiff muscles; but cannot be permanently relieved by local or external applications. It must have constitutional treatment.

Take the great blood-purifying and tonic medicine, Hood's Sarsaparilla, which corrects the acid condition of the blood on which rheumatism depends, and gives permanent relief. It combines the most effective agents in the treatment of this disease.

Headaches Vanish

Sick or nervous headaches, backaches, women's aches almost instantly respond to the liquid remedy Capudine. It stops the pain by removing the cause. Every home should keep a bottle handy. Sold by druggists, 10c, 30c, 60c. Insist upon getting CAPUDINE

SUFFERING?

Most of the pain we suffer is unnecessary. Why continue to endure it—to sacrifice your youth, beauty, and enjoyment to it?

The combination of simple harmless medicines found in

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills

is especially effective in relieving pain without bad after-effects.

For more than thirty-five years sufferers from headache, neuralgia, backache, toothache, sciatica and pains from other causes have found relief by taking these pills.

Why don't you try them?

ASK YOUR DRUGGIST

IS YOUR CHURCH LIKE THIS?

A woman writing for the Public Ledger, Philadelphia, says: "Since last June I have attended pretty regularly one particular church, and I am the same stranger there that I was ten months ago. The pastor greets me cordially. Others are intent, apparently, upon the circle of friends with whom they love to associate. They do not see newcomers. The denomination to which I particularly refer has just had a campaign to stimulate growth, and the leaders deplore the lack of results. I am not asked to put my finger on the weak spot in their system, but I make bold to suggest it to them. Cultivate a little unselfishness among the laity; let the average member "want" new members, and they will get them. I believe that many a lonely stranger would be not only made happy by a warm welcome in the church which he attends, but would, in many cases, become a working member of that church. I could tell you of many habitual churchgoers who are also church workers who have succeeded only by persistent effort in getting into the active life of the church. It takes little imagination to see in these days of worldly attractions what becomes of those who do not care whether they attend church or not." We know exactly how the writer feels. We have been along the same way. Bnt we have never been able to understand why it is so. Is your church like this?—Selected.

Doctor Discovers New Rupture Remedy

Akron, Ohio.—A prominent Ohio physician has discovered a wonderful new method, which is completely revolutionizing the treatment of rupture. This remedy is totally different from any other—no operation—no cutting, and nothing to "rub on." Anyone can use it without pain or danger and without losing an hour from work.

Relief is felt almost immediately and recovery is usually so rapid as to seem miraculous. Anyone who is ruptured may obtain full information regarding this remarkable discovery, by writing E. H. Sunday School

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Promotion Day should be observed the last Sunday in September. The school that observes it once will continue to do so.

Rally Day can be observed early in October. We can enroll 5000 new pupils before our Annual Conference if every organized class gets busy.

Many new superintendents will be elected at the fourth quarterly conference. Under the new law, the superintendent nominates the assistant superintendents, with the concurrence of the pastor, all the general officers and departmental superintendents, and the quarterly conference elects.

The Workers' Council is made a regular part of the Sunday school organization, and it is made up of all the officers and teachers of the school, together with representatives from the classes of those above eighteen years of age.

The Sunday school superintendent is called upon to fill the most important office in the church, except that of the pastor. No one will deny the fact that both these important offices need men who are willing to learn something more definite as to the details of their task. The man who is not constantly learning can not lead forward. Only a few in our Conference have taken training in leadership.

At the Aberdeen District Training School we enrolled 28 from five churches. Seventeen did credit work, one in "Primary Organization and Administration," one in the "Methodist Church and Its Work," nine in "Principles of Religious Teaching," and five in "The Pupil." No superintendents were present and only one pastor. The work of training leaders was started and will continue to grow.

The teachers promised to visit every church near Houston and urge the teachers to attend the school if it should be held at Houston next year.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

(Received too late for Issue of September 7)

On the fourth Sunday in August I was with the Lake Circuit Institute, meeting at Eureka. We had a fairly good institute. The schools showed progress. There is one new school on the circuit and some signs of improvement. The reports were not written and therefore there were some items that failed to appear that otherwise would have appeared.

I remained at Eureka through Wednesday, preaching and teaching "Organization and Administration." It was delightful to renew old friendships. One girl united with the church. I trust that the teaching of the book will mean more and definite work in the school.

Saturday, September 2, I went to Providence, on the Georgetown circuit. I enjoyed my visit with these folks very much. There is a large opportunity with them if they are developed. Many seem willing.

Sunday night I dropped in on the meeting at Capitol Street. It starts well. A large and attentive crowd were present to welcome Brother Tolle and to take part in the service.

Please, if you can, give us something for the Sunday school exhibit for the State Fair; send it on. We need the work—handwork, pictures of classes, class books, records, etc. Anything that you think is interesting, send it along. Time is short and the force to do the work with is small. The sooner, the better and the surer.

Please help us with Sunday School Day. We are so far behind. It looks as if everything is moving against us. If our work fails, it is not only we that fail, it will mean the whole church. The church is going forward on the feet of the children. Our investment in them will make or unmake us. Won't you please attend to this most important matter? If you cannot have the program, please take the offering and send it in. Pray for the work and the workers.

Mississippi Methodism is going to have an exhibit at the State Fair. We are responsible for the Sunday school exhibit. If you know of anything that ought to be exhibited for the help or interest of Sunday school workers, won't you please send it to us? Help us get the best exhibit ever offered before.

Records. You are helping to make either a good or a bad one. Below are printed Sunday School Day statistics. What did you do? You cannot perhaps have the Day now, but you can send in an offering. Please take the collection and send it in. If your charge is not represented, get it in by next report.

There are 470 Sunday schools in the seven districts of the Conference. Of these, 131 have sent in Sunday School Day offerings to the amount of $1219.98. This record shows that 339 Sunday schools have sent no offering at all. Offerings have been received from 92 charges, seven of which have sent an offering from every school. We have received no offering at all from 59 charges.

Will you help us to improve this record before Conference?

Fifteen new schools have been organized by the Board this year. That is mighty fine work. One hundred and twenty-one teacher training credits have been issued up to July 1 in our Conference. That is far beyond any former record. Over 3000 new Sunday school scholars have been reported to the Board so far this year. Have Rally Day! Increase your attendance and give us accurate reports at Conference. We will have a gain of 5000. Twenty have united with the church through the effort of employed workers.

$1,000 Prize Story For 15c.

You Must Not Miss Reading Booth Tarkington's "Alice Adams," the Story the Whole Country Is Talking About.

Washington, D. C. (Special).—Announcement has just been made by the editor of the Pathfinder, that, in keen competition with other publishers, he has paid the highest price for the right to publish "Alice Adams," the great story for which Booth Tarkington recently received the famous $1000 Pulitzer prize. Hundreds of thousands of copies of this novel have been sold in book form at $2 each. This amazingly beautiful story of present-day American life, written in Tarkington's most fascinating style, will begin in the Pathfinder Sept. 23 and be published complete in thirteen issues of that splendid paper. The editor says he will send the paper for this period—13 weeks—to new subscribers who write to The Pathfinder, 209 Langton Station, Washington, D. C., and inclose 15 cents in coin or stamps. You can also order for your friends, at 15 cents each; but send at once so as not to miss the start of the story, Sept. 23. It costs the editor a lot of money to do this, but he believes the fact that the Pathfinder is growing so fast proves it pays to invest in new friends.—Adv.

VACATION IS OVER.

Again the school bell rings at morning and at noon; again with tens of thousands the hardest kind of work has begun, the renewal of which is a mental and physical strain to all except the most rugged.

The little girl that a short time ago had roses in her cheeks, and the little boy whose lips were then so red would have insisted that they had been "kissed by strawberries," have already lost something of the appearance of health.

Now is a time when many children should be given a tonic, which may prevent much serious trouble. No other is so highly to be recommended as Hood's Sarsaparilla, which strengthens the nerves, perfects digestion and assimilation. It aids mental development by building up the whole system.

Equally good as a medicinal preparation are Hood's Pills, which are so well adapted for both children and adults. In small doses they are a gentle laxative, in larger doses an active cathartic.—Adv.

Service to the Church

It would be interesting to learn how many of the Southern Methodists know the exact purpose for which their great Publishing House was established and how many are trying to help it accomplish that purpose. The object in establishing this institution was "to advance the cause of Christianity by disseminating religious knowledge and useful literary and scientific information in the form of books, tracts, and periodicals," and the people charged with the responsibility of conducting the business of the Publishing House have put forth every effort to accomplish that purpose.

IT IS YOUR BUSINESS.

The Publishing House is owned and operated by the M. E. Church, South, and you, as a member of this great Church, have an interest in the business. Every order for books, Sunday school literature, and Church supplies you send the House helps to build it up. If all the Southern Methodists would buy their literature, books, Sunday school and Church supplies from their own Publishing House, its usefulness would be increased wonderfully.

PROFITS.

There is another great argument for your support. The only way the proceeds of the Publishing House can be used is for the support of superannuated preachers, their widows and orphans. Could there be any cause more worthy?

You have a great printing and publishing plant and a big book business—equal to the best anywhere.

With the parent House at Nashville, Tennessee, and the well-managed branches at Richmond, Virginia, and Dallas, Texas, there is no reason why the usefulness of your Publishing House, with your help, cannot rise to a higher plane of usefulness.

The Publishing House is not suffering from a lack of business, but it is felt that there is a wonderful opportunity for a greater service to Southern Methodists.

Watch the columns of this paper for the opportunities offered you in the advertisements of the House.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE

President's Message.

It gives me great pleasure to introduce to our faithful workers our new worker, Miss Bessie Brand, whose presence among us is made possible by the co-operation of the women in the ranks. In another place will be found a statement by Miss Brand herself, which shows something of what she has been doing during the few weeks she has been in our midst, as Secretary of Rural Work.

The work Miss Brand is able to do now is only preparatory to the more definite thing that this survey will lead up to. Before the close of the fiscal year, we hope to begin work in a center where we may concentrate and work according to a definite program.

The North Mississippi Conference is a pioneer in rural work and we believe others will follow our lead: hence the necessity of leading in the right direction. At the district conferences during the summer, pledges were made to meet the financial obligation that had been apportioned to the separate districts. It is necessary that these amounts be paid as soon as possible, in order that we may know during the fall what we have to depend on. All of the districts have paid some and we are hoping that all of them will complete their share of this fund at once.

In order that we may look forward intelligently, it is necessary that we look back over the first two quarters. According to the Treasurer's report, we sent to the Council Treasurer $4,606.62 at the end of the second quarter. The first quarter we sent an amount not quite equal to that, not much above it. Our annual pledge to the Council as voted at the last session of our Conference is $25,000. Less than half of our pledge has been met and we are past the middle of the third quarter. The fourth quarter is always so full of so many things, we see the necessity of meeting each quarter's part of the annual obligation. May we not redouble our diligence during this last half of the third quarter and work off that part of our pledge which will make it easy to meet the remainder during the last quarter without overstrain? Mrs. Lipscomb reports a gain of $7,500 throughout the connection over the corresponding quarter of last year, which meets nearly half of the deficit for the first quarter. North Mississippi did not meet her share of this gain, but we are confident that before the year is out our pledge will be met in full.

Dr. J. M. Sullivan, director of the Methodist Exhibit at the State Fair at Jackson, has asked that our Conference co-operate with Mississippi Conference in placing an exhibit in the Liberal Arts Building that shall show the progress of our work since its organization. Please bear this request in mind, and send to me any material that will be of interest—photographs of leading workers since organization, attractive posters that have been used with success, items concerning the lives of our missionaries that have been sent out from the Conference, and other items of interest.

MRS. T. M. CLARK, President.

Report of Rural Survey Secretary.

The morning of July 11 found your President giving your Rural Survey Secretary a welcome warm enough to have come from each member of the Missionary Societies in the North Mississippi Conference. Needless to say I am glad to be here. I have spent 26 days visiting the county seats and as many rural churches as possible in the Corinth District. I have made 25 talks, attended 15 meetings, visited 10 institutions, organized four missionary societies, and been in 27 different homes. Everywhere I have found the keenest interest, the most unflagging zeal to carry forward any plans for my itinerary, as well as hearts as warm as the weather in this fair Southland. I hope to do as much in the other districts as I have in the Corinth District. I shall need and appreciate suggestions, co-operation and above all your prayers.

BESSIE BRAND,
Rural Survey Secretary.

Miss Kellog Will Enter Scarritt Training School.

Miss Ruth Kellogg, of Boyle, has offered her services to the Council for definite work, and will enter Scarritt Bible and Training School in September, thanks to the good women of Durant Auxiliaries. Miss Kellogg is one of us, having been reared in this section of the State. Her fellow-workers wanted North Mississippi to receive the blessing of having a worker go out from their midst fully equipped for any task she may find.

When it became known she was a volunteer, members of the Durant auxiliaries pledged themselves to finance her two years in Scarritt, as a memorial to Mrs. Eva Beasley Neblett, the beloved wife of the pastor of the Methodist church at Durant. Miss Kellogg has accepted the members of these auxiliaries as her big sister during her days of study and no doubt prayers of this noble band who have taken this method to honor one of their best workers will be one of the strongest forts this young woman will have before her.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Newton District Conference.

The Newton District Conference of the Woman's Missionary Society met in Laurel at the Kingston church August 1-2. The program was as follows:

August 1, 8 p.m.—Devotional, Rev. L. F. Alford; Address of Welcome, Mrs. L. F. Alford; musical program rendered by the young people of the Kingston Church.

Conference officers present were asked to come forward. Mrs. H. L. McClesky, Mrs. Bradley, and Miss Hunt came and were introduced to the audience.

The audience was then invited to the sub-story of the church and was served delicious home-made cake and ice cream by the ladies of the church.

August 2, 9:30 a.m.—Devotional, Mrs. J. W. Ramsey; Organization of Conference; Roll Call of Auxiliaries; Our Conference Outlook, Mrs. H. L. McClesky; District Outlook, Mrs. Lois Hunt; How Missionary Interest should be aroused in the church through your Auxiliary, Mrs. J. H. Hill; Reports from Auxiliaries; Hymn; Benediction, Rev. J. W. Ramsey.

2 p.m.—Devotional, Mrs. J. J. Henry; Playlet, Service, by Juniors; Presentation of Children's Work, Mrs. Bradley; Round Table Discussion on how to carry on the Junior Missionary Work and Junior League in same organization, led by Mrs. Bradley; Report from Missionary Council, Mrs. McClesky; How to use the Missionary Society for Community good through Social Service Department, Mrs. J. B. Moore; How to catch Women, Young People and Children and hold them, Mrs. Pursell; Consecration Prayer, Mrs. O. S. Lewis; Adjournment.

8 p.m.—Devotional, Miss Alford; Pageant, Garden of Flowers, by Kingston Young People; Solo, Miss Annie Lee Crawford; How to Win Young People, Mrs. Purcell; Talk, Service, by Rev. O. S. Lewis; Report of Committee on Resolutions; Benediction.

Miss Lois Hunt, our new District Secretary, presided over the conference with dignity and ease. The reports from the Auxiliaries showed the result of faithful, consecrated effort put forth by our District Secretary.

It was indeed a great pleasure to have with us at this time two of our former District Secretaries, Mrs. J. C. Clark and Mrs. J. H. Hill.

Our Conference officers, Mrs. McClesky and Mrs. Bradley, brought to us stirring messages of every department of the work, which were very helpful and inspirational.

The presence and sympathetic interest of our Laurel preachers, Rev. O. S. Lewis, J. W. Ramsey and L. F. Alford, proved invaluable.

Rev. L. F. Alford, pastor of the Kingston church, was untiring in his efforts to make the District Meeting the success it was.

The delegates and visitors were most cordially received and royally entertained by the ladies of the Kingston church. They were ever mindful of the comfort and pleasure of the visitors.

MRS. W. L. WALKER,
Secretary.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

From Kentwood, La.

One of the most interesting programs was enjoyed at the Methodist church of Kentwood on Sunday evening, August 13, when the Missionary Society presented "The Missionary Voice" as given in the July number of the Missionary Voice. The walls were artistically decorated with posters of our different mission fields, made by Mrs. A. J. Coburn, our pastor's wife. She also made a most attractive poster for the Voice, from which she gave an interesting and instructive talk.

Miss Mamye Reames, who has been engaged in missionary work, told very graphically of the work of a deaconess, at the conclusion of which she presented "The Little Black Bonnet" as found in the January number of "The Voice."

After the program, subscriptions were taken for The Voice; eight were secured.

A collection was taken recently by members of the Junior Missionary Society for the local fund, and a nice sum was realized.

Pray for our Auxiliary.

Yours in work for our Master,
(Miss) FANNYE REAMES,
Corresponding Secretary, Kentwood Auxiliary.

WAS A BROKEN-DOWN WOMAN

Then I Began Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Medicines

Donaldsonville, La.—"I write with pleasure to praise your medicine—Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—which has done so much to restore my health. I was a broken-down woman until my husband brought me a bottle of your Vegetable Compound and one of Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Medicine. I had been having pains every month and at intervals between, was weak and seemed to be smothering at times, but in a week I felt like another woman. I also used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash. It did me a lot of good too. I cannot praise your medicines too much and will be more than glad to recommend them to any woman who is suffering from female troubles. You may print my testimonial, as it is true."—Mrs. T. A. LANDRY, 612 Miss. St., Donaldsonville, La.

Note Mrs. Landry's words—"as it is true." Every letter recommending Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is genuine. It is a statement telling the merits of these medicines just as the women in your own neighborhood tell each other about them. For fifty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has sold on merit.

THE METHODIST MEMORIAL AT CHATTEAU-THIERRY..

By Rev. T. J. O'Neil.

Through the kindness of a friend, I have a picture of the Metbodist Memorial, whicb is the Old Hotel Elephant at Chatteau-Thierry, in the Valley of the Marne, about thirty-nine miles east of Paris, France, remodeled, enlarged, and beautified.

But a short while after that terrible battle that resulted "By the help of God and a few Marines," as expressed by Brigadier General Catlin, in stopping the hitherto victorious German Army, and beginning their retreat which was continuous till the signing of the Armistice, November 11, 1918, Dr. D. W. Bysshe, Superintendent of the Methodist Episcopal Mission of France, visited Belleau Woods, recently evacuated by the Germans, not till they had left a fearful trail of death, however, as attested by the cemetery at the foot of the hill verging the valley, where were to be seen row upon row of graves, each marked by a tiny American Flag, and a white cross.

As the Doctor left his car and drew near the graveyard to salute the silent heroes who had recently made the supreme sacrifice in one of the fiercest battles of the World War, he was greeted by two dough boys who had come up from Chatteau-Thierry, with the words, "They ought to have some fine monument—those guys." To these words the Doctor responded, "They should, indeed, have one of the finest monuments in the world." As he turned away from that pitiful little cemetery to resume his journey, there came to him a vision as from heaven.

The French Government had just recently asked the Methodists to aid in bringing relief to the refugees who were returning to the villages near Chatteau-Thierry. Plans were being made to distribute aid from Chatteau-Thierry to the people in the villages near by, making the Hotel Elephant the temporary depot for supplies, and bospital for the sick and wounded. Instead of making the Hotel only a temporary distributing point, Dr. Bysshe conceived the idea of making it into an enduring monument which should stand for many years as a memorial of the sacrifices made by the American soldiers in and near the Chatteau in 1918.

The Hotel Elephant had been a leading hotel since 1789. It stood through the dark days of the French Revolution. It witnessed tbe evacuation of the town in 1870. It was terribly torn by the two bombardments of the World War, in 1914, and 1918. It was in ruin, when the Methodists purchased it. Because of its broken roof, rain-soaked walls, and great accumulation of filth, it could not be occupied for months after it was purcbased.

Temporary quarters were secured, and relief work was begun at once. The work was extended till thirty-two villages were supplied from this central distributing piont. During the winter of 1918-1919, tons of clothing and provision secured from the American Red Cross and the French Government were distrihuted to the destitute people living in these war-scarred villages, and many wounded soldiers were cared for in the hospital.

In the beautiful Methodist Memorial which has been built of the carcass of the "Elepbant," a program bas been planned to include the following activities:

1. Trained nurses to visit the bomes of the sick, and a weekly clinic to be held in the building, under the supervision of local physicians, for the babies and mothers.

2. A day nursery for the daily care of babies from six montbs to two years of age. These babies are from the homes where the mothers are working to support their families.

3. Educational classes. Popular classes in English are held two evenings in each week. In addition to this, each afternoon, thirty minutes are given to gymnasium work, thirty minutes to preparing lessons for next day, and thirty minutes for games.

4. A Circulating Library, where a thousand carefully censored volumes are in circulation, and where monthly soirees are held with speakers from Paris.

5. The boy scouts. Three troops with fifty scouts have been organized.

6. The Girls' Social Club, where thirty young women meet weekly for self-improvement.

7. War Museum, where a valuable collection of souvenirs of the War is being made.

There is no charge made for any service rendered in this Memorial. All expenses are paid with Centenary money, and the great work being done in this Memorial attests the wisdom of the Centenary Movement, had we no other witness.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE CONDITIONS OF CITIZENSHIP.

According to press reports, seven aliens were recently refused final citizenship papers because it was shown that they had used their citizenship in other countries as a means of avoiding service with the armed forces of the United States during the war, and it was proved that none of them served in the countries of their origin. The judge held that men who would not serve their own country because of residence in this, and would not serve this country because of citizenship elsewhere, were not fit to become citizens of the United States. We fear it will be thus with some when they desire to enter into "the land which is fairer than day." It will be shown that they observed none of the conditions of heavenly citizenship while on earth, and their claim to a heavenly citizenship will be disregarded. Fitness for heaven is determined by the life lived upon earth—and there will be no chance to slip by the barriers against those who have not lived right here.

CHRIST IN THE HOME.

When the Master said to Zacchaeus that he would spend the day with him, we can easily imagine some of the things, at least, that Zacchaeus began to think about. Some of them are not left to imagination, for he began immediately to say that he would observe the strictest regulations concerning the law of the tithe and that he would make ample reparation for all the money he had gained unlawfully. It is of more worth, perhaps, for us to consider what we should think, say, and do if the Master should inform us that he would spend the day in person in our homes. The great probability is that our first thought would be about material things—what room we would give him and what we would have to eat. Jesus would not care about those things—but he should be given the best we have. We wonder if he does get that always. It is very likely, too, that we should begin to wonder how we might amend our home-life so that it would meet his approval. It is probable that we would determine to keep a close watch upon our words and temper, lest we say or do something that would manifestly be improper in his presence. We would probably determine, also, that we would walk circumspectly in the community so long as he was our guest. In other words, we would undertake to adjust ourselves to the great fact of a present Christ. We should say that this adjustment is the great problem of the individual Christian. It is very easy to think of God as absent; to feel that he does not know just what we are doing or thinking at any particular time; to imagine that we are left pretty much to our own devices as a rule. What a change would be wrought in our thinking and speaking and acting if we were always consciously in the presence of the Lord! "This day I must abide at thy house"—what thought-provoking words!

WHAT A STRIKE COSTS.

Now that the strike of the coal miners seems to be settled, the statisticians have begun to estimate the cost of the strike in actual money. One estimate is as follows: Lost wages, $450,000,000; loss of profits to operators, $40,000,000; consumers' loss (excess cost of coal during strike), $100,000,000; railroad loss in decreased freight revenues, $300,000,000; consumers' loss ($1 a ton increase in price to April 1, 1923), $300,000,000. These figures show the staggering total of $1,190,000,000. We are confirmed in the opinion, recently expressed, that a strike is a method of settling industrial disputes by which everybody loses. We suppose the strike of the railway workers has cost even more than the coal strike cost. The wonder is that the country is not in the midst of industrial chaos.

LOST LABOR.

In no other industry that we know of would such loss of labor be calmly endured by the country at large as is endured by the cotton growers of the South as a result of the ravages of the boll weevil. Accord to recent figures, this pest destroyed last year 79 per cent of the cotton growing in the United States, amounting to a total of 6,277,000 bales. The reports received this year show a marked increase over the loss of last year, the loss during September alone being estimated at 830,000 bales. In terms of dollars, this means that the South will lose this year more than $100,000,000. Those who are not directly interested in the growing of cotton may think that the price of the staple is altogether too high; but if they could see practically half their own labor going for naught, we imagine they would call for aid from all sources that they might be saved from such grievous loss. If the United States is to continue as the greatest cotton growing country in the world, it is evident that some way must be found of overcoming the ravages of the boll weevil; and it is evident that this is a matter that affects the nation at large, as well as the cotton growers in the South. It is certain that no halfway or local measures will afford relief.

TIME ENOUGH.

It is a kind of hobby with us that there is time enough to do everything that needs to be done, i. e., every man has time enough to do everything that he ought to do. There is no program in the universe that lays upon any individual the obligation to do more than he is able to do—but there is a very stern requirement that every man shall do all he ought to do. We have all the time there is—and nobody has any advantage of us in that respect. The trouble with most people is not lack of time, but waste of time. Sinclair Lewis, the noted author of "Main Street," of which nearly four hundred thousand copies have been sold, says that he found time to write one of his novels while riding on trains, and he employs the moments that many of us throw away in doing some of his best work. Mr. Lewis even goes so far as to say that he has scant patience with those who are "too tired to work," for that "tired feeling" is often nothing more than the vanquishing of the desire to work by the desire to play. What we ought to do is sometimes a very different thing from what we want or do not want to do.

THE PLODDER.

Most of the world's work is done by plodders. There are unusually endowed individuals who seem to be able to use processes that quickly bring them to the goal of their desires, but most of us have to plod along slowly, sometimes painfully, in order to accomplish with any reasonable degree of success the thing we have undertaken. The plodder should never become discouraged. If he works slowly, he works surely, and he knows the cost of what he has attained. What he lacks in speed, he makes up in thoroughness and complete mastery of his resources. His heavier toil is offset by his freedom from the cares that come with the endowments of genius. An ox-wagon is a slow moving vehicle—but it finally reaches its destination, and it is able to carry a heavy load.

A DIFFICULT DUTY.

Very few people go through life without facing the duty, at one time or another, of apologizing to some one to whom they have done an injustice; yet the performance of that duty is one of the most difficult that fall to their lot. The mere confession of wrong-doing seems to be a reflection upon one's personal integrity, a kind of confession of weakness that must be concealed rather than avoided. Many a helpful friendship has been wrecked upon the shoals of stubbornness. One word of acknowledgment would often clear the way to good feeling and warm appreciation—yet that word remains unspoken. If no wrong has ever been done, there can be no need of an apology; but who can claim immunity from so difficult a duty upon the ground of absolute moral perfection? The eased conscience is always an adequate reward for those who frankly confess their faults, even though there was real humiliation in the confession.

"I AM THE VINE."

By Rev. R. T. Ware.

"I am the vine, ye are the branches."
How close this union, you see;
The branch cannot live without the vine,
"Neither can ye without me."

"I am the vine, ye are the branches:"
Through me your strength must come.
"Abide in me, and I in you,"
The task will then be done.

"I am the vine, ye are the branches:"
On you the fruit must grow,
The fruit of life, of light, and love,
That from the Savior flow.

"I am the vine, ye are the branches:"
Through you the world shall live;
They shall drink of the strength of the vine.
From the fruit you give.

"I am the vine, ye are the branches:"
"If ye abide in me,"
You shall be purged from all your sins,
And great the yield shall be.

CAN WE TRUST CHRIST AS A TEACHER?

By Bishop W. A. Candler.

It is the habit of many rationalistic men to accept and eulogize Christ as a teacher, while denying His deity and rejecting Him as an atoning Savior. But rationalism is never stationary, and its movement is always away from light into deeper darkness.

We now find men among them who lay claim to great critical learning, denying that Christ may be trusted as a teacher even. They are ready to acknowledge the superior morality that he taught, but outside of these general ethical principles, they deny both his ability and his authority. For example, there is Prof. Kuenen, who, in his "Prophets and Proprecy in Israel," says: "With regard to the revered Master, the rigbt of criticism must be maintained." In other words, the teaching of Christ concerning the Old Testament Scriptures must be revised by the sin-clouded intellects of modern critics.

With reference to what Christ says concerning the Old Testament, Kuenen acknowledges that it contains "ample material for admiration," and this, too, although it may not be accepted as truth.

It is not strange that these men, and those in our own country who follow them, have fallen to analyzing and discrediting the nature of Christ after repudiating the supernatural wherever it seems to appear in Old Testament Scriptures. Indeed, their fundamental error is found in the fact that they refuse any place in history for the supernatural. They exclude God from the world he has made, or else bind Him with processes of nature which they have interpreted as laws of nature.

One cannot logically go with them in their teaching concerning Christ or in their criticism concerning the Old Testament. Of the Old Testament Scriptures, Jesus says, "They are they which testify of me," and He and the Hebrew Scriptures stand together before us for absolute acceptance or absolute rejection. There is no middle ground upon which the logical mind can take position and stand. It is quite true that some of these rationalists, after rejecting the Hebrew Scriptures, attempt to hold faith in Christ by ingenious theories, like the theory of "the "Kenosis." By this Greek term they mean His self-imposed human limitations arising from His becoming very man. They affirm that He emptied himself of all knowledge and descended to the depths of ignorance belonging to our common human nature. Hence they affirm that He made no claim to authority upon any scientific matter and that He assumed no authority in what they now call "historical criticism."

Whatever truth there may be in their Kenotic theories, an intelligent mind cannot believe in any sort of humiliation of the Christ which imposed upon Him ignorance of any subject, but which did not restrain him from speaking upon the subject concerning which he was ignorant. It is quite true that he did not discuss scientific questions, and his teaching is, therefore, in no way involved in the science of His day or of our day. But such is not the case with reference to the Old Testament Scriptures. About them He maintained no such silence as He exercised with reference to the questions of science. On the contrary, with reference to the Old Testament He speaks in the most authoritative and positive manner.

In the Sermon on the Mount, He says: "Think not that I have come to destroy the law and the prophets; I am not come to destroy but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled." (Matthew v:17, 18.)

Speaking to the Pharisees, he said: "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye have eternal life. They are they which testify of me." John v:39.) "Do not think that I will accuse you to the Father: There is one that accuseth you, even Moses, in whom you trust. For had ye believed Moses ye would have believed me; for he wrote of me. But if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my words?" (John v:44-47.)

This sharp question which he addressed to the Pharisees might well with equal pertinence be addressed to our modern rationalists; for if they believe not in the writings of Moses, how can they believe in the teaching of Christ? They may eulogize Him as a teacher in extravagant terms, but when they reject His teaching concerning the Old Testament Scriptures, they repudiate Him as a teacher as well as a Savior.

Upon the human nature of Jesus there were limitations. Otherwise the incarnation would not have given us a perfect human Savior, but his humanity was far above that of ordinary men, in that it was sinless. Before men and devils, he could stand and utter the challenge, "Which of you convinceth me of sin?" Not one of his critics who have left any writings during the two thousand years which have elapsed since He appeared among men has ever been able to fix a fault upon him. In view of this amazing fact, we cannot attribute to Him gross error concerning the Old Testament without impugning his sincerity and truthfulness.

Moreover, the humiliation of Christ terminated with his resurrection and ascension. As he talked to two of His disciples on the way to Emmaus after His resurrection, it is recorded of Him that, "Beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them the Scriptures concerning Himself." (Luke 24:27.)

He upbraided these disciples for their unbelief, saying, "O, foolish ones and slow of heart to believe all the prophets have spoken." (Luke 24:25.) Certainly, neither before nor after his resurrection did he leave upon the minds of any of His followers the impression that the Old Testament Scriptures were an uninspired or an unauthoritative body of writings. On the contrary, he taught them to trust the Hebrew Scriptures implicitly, and when his apostles went forth to propagate Christianity, they all with one accord made frequent and confident appeal to the Hebrew Scriptures. If these Scriptures are unreliable, what shall we say of the first preachers of the gospel of Christ? They certainly established the Christian church among both the Jews and the Gentiles. Would we have had any church at all if these men had preached the things which modern rationalistic critics proclaim? Suppose Peter had accepted the views of Graf, or John had ted the teachings of Wellhausen, or Paul had uttered the writings of Kuenen, would there ever have been a Christian church or a New Testament?

And who followed these men in later centuries in maintaining and spreading Christianity? Every one of the Ante-Nicene fathers holds the same views of the Scriptures and preaches in the same apostolic fashion.

The Christian church lived for nearly three hundred years on the Old Testament Scriptures. Justin Martyr, Origen, and Cyprian, and all the rest maintained the broad principles of the organic unity of the Old and New Testaments, and the perfect sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures to reveal God to man.

After the same manner the Reformers wrote and spoke: Luther, Calvin, Wycliffe, Cranmer and Latimer maintained the same position, and after the same fashion taught. Later divines like the Wesleys, George Whitefield and Jonathan Edwards followed in the same holy succession, without doubt or debate concerning the Holy Scriptures.

Nothing has happened in our day to discredit these Scriptures except the destructive criticism. The discoveries in archaeology have all tended to confirm the Old Testament Scriptures. Some twenty-five years ago Prof. A. H. Sayce, of Oxford University, said: "Wherever the Biblical comes into contact with that of its neighbors, Egypt and Assyre-Babylonia, it is confirmed and illustrated even in the smallest detail."

In an admirable article, Prof. Sayce said: "The witness of ancient monuments to the Old Testament Scriptures is of a two-fold nature. It is positive, inasmuch as it proves that they are in agreement with actual facts; and negative inasmuch as it shows how far this is from being the case with documents which lay claim to the same amount of credibility, and deal with the same subject matter, but which really belong to a later age. The witness is therefore complete. Difficulties, no doubt, may still exist here and there, since as long as our knowledge is imperfect, there are things which cannot be satisfactorily explained; but difficulties enough have been already cleared away, confirmations sufficient of the truth of the Biblical record have been produced, to banish such doubts as may have found place in our minds, and to inspire us with a calm confidence, that with the increase of knowledge and the discovery of fresh monuments the difficulties which still remain will be diminished, and the great body of verifying facts continually enlarged."

Every added year brings from ancient ruins and re-discovered manuscripts additional confirmation of the truth of the Old Testament Scriptures as well as attestations of the New Scriptures. Indeed, the critics have been pretty well driven from most of the positions which they held twenty-five years ago concerning the New Testament Scriptures. They pitched the battle then mainly in the book of Acts of the Apostles, but from that field Sir William Ramsay and others, exploring in Asia Minor, have thoroughly routed them.

But let us return to the question raised in this article, "Can we trust the teachings of Jesus when He speaks concerning the Old Testament Scriptures?" If in a matter so important to faith He cannot be trusted, let us no longer eulogize Him as a teacher. Let us reject Him both as a teacher and as a Savior. If upon a topic of such supreme importance He is not as trustworthy as modern critics, we may as well dismiss Him and seek elsewhere for light upon the great subject of salvation. But if we turn away from Him, to whom shall we go? Certainly not to the critics. They are not agreed among themselves, and one and the same critic does not agree with himself for long. Harnack, for example, has affirmed principles one year that he has abandoned the next until the intelligent reader finds it difficult to state with accuracy what the poor man really believes. Graf, Kuenen, and others are losing their hold upon the critics even, and their successors cannot have a more enduring propaganda than these rationallstic critics have enjoyed for a season. No, we must hold to Christ as our supreme Teacher who alone has the words of eternal life.

NEW TESTAMENT PURIFYING—PAPER VII.

By Arthur Madison Shaw.

Conclusion.

I. We have seen that baptism is referred to in the New Testament, as Purifying; and that the ancient Law, still in force in the time of Christ, specified sprinkling as the mode. Every analogy and symbol that bears upon cleansing supports this view.

1. When the water of baptism is referred to in prophecy, in connection with the promised Kingdom, it is to be sprinkled. Ezek. 36:25: "Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you and ye shall be clean; from all your filthiness and from all your idols will I cleanse you."

2. Peter calls baptism "the answer (or interrogation) of a good conscience toward God." How does a sinner get a "good conscience?" Heb. 10: 22: "Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed (purified, or baptized!) with pure water."

3. In the New Testament, the real agent of cleansing—that which takes away sin—is represented as the blood of Christ. Let us see how the blood purification is administered. Heb. 9:13-14: "For if the blood of bulls and goats, and the ashes of an heifer, sprinkling the unclean, sanctifyeth to the purifying of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the Eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God." See also Heb., 12:24: "And to Jesus the Mediator of the New Covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel." And, once more, I. Pet., 1:2: "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ."

Thus, when God speaks of using water as a purifying agent, He says He sprinkles it! When He baptizes with the Holy Spirit, He pours it out, or sheds it forth! And when the blood of Christ is applied for cleansing, it is sprinkled! There is nothing in the Bible about plunging soul or body in water, or Spirit, or blood! The first verse of that grand old hymn—written by an Immersionist—should be made to conform to the Word of God, thus:

> "There is a stream, a crimson flood,
> Drawn from Immanuel's veins:
> And sinners, sprinkled with the blood,
> Lose all their guilty stains!"

II. Let us briefly recapitulate. What have we learned in these short studies? We have learned,

1. That Baptism is a ceremonial purification with water, and that all such purifications have always been by sprinkling or pouring; that baptism is not, therefore, a birth nor a burial.

2. That it is not essential to the remission of sins, and not to represent Christ's burial, but is a token of the Covenant of Redemption. It is called "the circumcision of Christ;" and is a type of the "washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost," which Paul declares is "shed on us."

3. That Peter calls it "the answer of a good conscience," and the conscience is made good by sprinkling!

4. That, while baptism was sometimes performed where immersion would have been possible, it was often administered where immersion would have been out of the question!

5. That, when the Israelites were "baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea," the Psalmist says it was by pouring!

6. That, when God speaks of using water as a cleansing agent, it is always to be sprinkled!

7. That, when the blood of Jesus Christ is applied to cleanse us from all sin, it is said to be sprinkled!

8. Finally, that God Himself forever settled the Scripture meaning of the word "baptidzo" when He applied it to the work of His Holy Spirit, and said it was "poured out," "shed forth," and "fell upon" the people!

It is gratifying to me to know that hundreds whose faces I have not seen have followed me in these studies. I thank the Editor for the space so generously allotted me; and am very grateful to him and to many other brethren who have written words of appreciation. We have sought, not victory, but truth; the studies are necessarily brief, but the conclusions are Scriptural, and cannot be overthrown. In the near future, with the Editor's permission, I shall present the subject of infant baptism.

BUT IT IS SO.

Dear Brother Carley: I find myself at variance with your editorial in the August 24 issue of the Advocate, under the caption, "It Is Not So." I believe the church is less spiritual than in former times, that is, our part of the church. I am in no position, of course, to speak for other denominations, but the reports from them indicate there is room to believe that they are suffering from the same trouble we are, and in many cases more so.

Even if the church were no worse than in former times, that would give us but little comfort, for the church has had too little of the Pentecostal fire and zeal throughout all its history.

But I am as firm in my opinion that our denomination is not as spiritual as it was once as any one could be that it is. We have too few in our church that are loyal and true to the vows they took when they joined. There was a time when the rules of our church were enforced against worldliness, but we all know that such is not true of the church of to-day. This gives us a lot of people in the church who are perjurers, for they have vowed to obey the rules of the church, follow its Bible, attend upon the ordinances, and support its institutions, and the largest part of them are doing but little of these things. John Wesley enforced the rules of our church and warned his followers that they had better do it, too. Many of us are at a loss to know just what to do. If we take some offenders to task, and conditions are such that they have to be brought to trial and removed from the church, some pussyfooter will come right along behind us and put them back, even though there seems to be no show of repentance. There was a time, or else I do not read aright our history, when such was not the condition with us.

Wesley said of the people called Methodists, in his day, that ninety per cent of them either had obtained, or were seeking, the baptism of the Holy Spirit. Who thinks that is a fact to-day? I have preached on the person and work of the Holy Spirit to Methodist congregations, to which prominent people belonged, who said they knew nothing of the teaching of the Holy Spirit, nor had they ever heard a sermon on His person or work. We were BORN OF THE SPIRIT as early Methodists, which not only distinguished us from the people of the world, but as well from mere professors of religion.

"Scattering gospel holiness throughout the lands," is our task. There is no place for worldliness among us, but only holy living is to be countenanced. People should understand that if they want to dance, gamble, break the Sabbath, wear extravagant dress, or indulge themselves as the world does, while some denominations permit this and would be glad to have them, such does not become those who are called Methodists. Too strict! Then let our people read the General Rules of our church, and the Bible, all of which we have accepted (see Article of Religion 5), and then say, "too strict." Anything short of this is too low for our profession. Let him deny it who can.

So, in spite of my love for you and the very pleasant associations of past days when you were my teacher and I your student, I must disagree with you in the matter of the editorial, and say that some of us are as tired of hearing certain things, that have no legal or rightcous place in our church, defended as you or any one could be of hearing them denounced. We all love our church. I loved her enough to turn from the church of my mother to her. We are zealous for her, but not enough to wink at her sins. Yes, we believe the revival is coming, and are praying for it, but when it comes it will be shot through with the message of the Bible, warning men to "flee the wrath to come and to be SAVED FROM THEIR SINS." That was the message of Isaiah, Jeremiah, John the Baptist, Jesus the Christ, the Apostles, Wesley and all others who have really glorified God and helped this old world on toward the better land. Forgive me and set me right if I am wrong, but if I am right, bear with me in my folly.

Fraternally yours,

MISSISSIPPI METHODIST CELEBRATION.

During the month of August a personal letter was sent out from the general director of the Mississippi Methodist Celebration to each of the preachers and many of the lay members of the Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences. Committees are actively at work and a creditable exhibit of the work and growth of Methodism in Mississippi is assured. This Celebration will be held during the State Fair, October 16-21, and an extensive section in the Liberal Arts Building has been secured for our exhibit. Thursday, October 19, will be Methodist Day at the Fair, and on that morning we expect to have a great parade in which there will be large groups representing the ministry, men's and women's Bible classes, Epworth Leagues, Colleges, Orphanage, Boy Scouts, etc. There will be many interesting features, and it is hoped that our people will take great interest in being present on Methodist Day, as far as possible, and participating in the parade. It is earnestly requested that all Epworth Leaguers or other young people, who will take part with this section of the parade, notify Miss Emma Taylor Hoskins, 111 Adams Street, Jackson, Miss., not later than October 1.

Will all pastors please bring these matters to the attention of their congregations, and use Lay Leaders in urging attendance? Other information will be furnished from time to time. Shall we not make this a great occasion? It should be one of combined profit and pleasure to our people, and let us unite our efforts to see that it is such.

Fraternally yours,

J. M. SULLIVAN,
General Director.

Jackson, Miss.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES—LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The Epworth League is a mighty agency in the church to train for leadership. From their ranks we recruit many students for our Christian colleges. At the Mansfield Assembly this year, we obtained twenty one new volunteers for Life Service. From this group will come our future missionaries and preachers.

It has been our privilege to be with Brother J. B. Grambling, our enthusiastic Epworth League Field Secretary, in three of his district institutes. We taught the "Methodist Armor," and it was inspiring to see how eager the young people were to study Methodist doctrine and usages. This is one of the outstanding needs of our church—for our young people to be rooted and grounded in the faith and to fully understand the fundamentals of our glorious Methodism.

We also delivered addresses on the three covenants, Quiet Hour, Fellow-Worker and Stewardship. These are also the three fundamentals of the Christian Education Movement: Prayer, Life Service and Stewardship. These three principles firmly grasped will revive any congregation.

Our aim is to make Christian Education preeminent in the minds and hearts of our people. The main starting point is from a deep experience of grace in the heart. This kind of education must mean a gradual adjustment to the spiritual possessions of the race, with a view to realizing one's own potentialities in Christ and to assisting in carrying forward that complex of ideas, acts and institutions which enter into the make-up of what we call Christian civilization. With tremendous insight, Browning puts these words into the mouth of his Paracelsus:

"Truth is within ourselves; it takes no rise
From outward things, whate'er you may believe.
There is an inmost center in us all
Where truth abides in fullness; and around,
Wall upon wall, the gross flesh hems it in,
This perfect, clear perception.
And to know,
Rather consists in opening out a way
Whence the imprisoned splendor may escape,
Than in expecting entry for a light
Supposed to be without."

At Monroe, we preached to a large and appreciative congregation. They have not met their full quota for Christian Education, but the board of stewards passed a resolution promising to put it over as soon as the general condition of the country is more favorable.

We will soon be in the midst of the period of the second payment. Some of our subscribers are paying up in full. This is wise, as it sounds the note of victory. We trust a great many of those who did not subscribe during the drive will make a liberal voluntary response this fall. We want full collections, so see your local church collector and have him send on your contribution.

ALBERT S. LUTZ,
Conference Secretary of Education.

"SIR, WE WOULD SEE JESUS." (JOHN 12:21).

By F. A. Dicks.

Suppose the morning papers should announce that a picture of Jesus had been discovered, with proof of its identity. What a thrill it would bring to the heart of Christianity! How the world would treasure and crown it with precious jewels!

Master painters for ages have striven to portray the glorious beauty and grace of his face and form. Yet the pictures of the greatest artists fail to satisfy the ideals of our souls. John tells us, "And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, and we beheld His glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." Like the Greeks, we would see Jesus as He appeared in the flesh. Mortal eyes have ever craved this privilege, but we have the promise that in the glorious hereafter, "We shall see Him as He is."

Stephen in his hour of martyrdom saw Him, and the reflex of His glory made Stephen's face like the face of an angel. Paul saw Him and was blinded by the dazzling light of His countenance. Such are the glimpses which are on record of His glorious beauty and majesty.

Were the Greeks admitted, who desired of Philip the great privilege of seeing Jesus? Surely they were. The Master invited every one to come unto Him who was seeking the way of life. What a thrilling interview that was! These Greek travelers had journeyed far over sea and land to Jerusalem to worship the God of the Jews. Doubtless, they were of the highly cultured class who were familiar with the philosophy of Zeno, Socrates, and Plato. They were men who had pondered over the problems of human life. They had heard of the wonderful Jew—of His mighty miracles, of His gracious words and sweet messages of cheer to the sick and hopeless ones, who had spoken with authority of the way to eternal life. They must see Him face to face and drink of the water of life so freely offered to thirsty souls. When they saw Him, the divine beauty of His face enraptured their cultivated sense of the beautiful, while they listened with eager ears to His voice of power and sweetness, which opened their hearts to this new philosophy—so strange, so gripping, that, having heard it, they came away never more the same men, for they had seen Jesus.

Would we see Jesus? Let us look around and observe the lives of those who have been transformed by looking unto Jesus; catch the inspiration which changes this old human nature and repeats the sweet story of the good Samaritan in a thousand ways; see the passing of the cup of the water of life to earth's thirsty and weary travelers along dusty highways; the speaking words of hope and giving the hand of help to the fainting and despairing; the helping guilty souls to see a wonderful redemption from sin and the shining pathway of a new life. In these miracles of grace, we can see Jesus to-day.

A LETTER FROM AFRICA.

(Published by permission of Rev. W. M. Williams, father of Mrs. Beaniand.)

Nkoi Ebolc Bengon, June 7, 1922.
Mission Protestante Americaine,
Ebolowa, Cameroun, West Africa.

Dearest Everybody: We came in home yesterday afternoon after a two week's visit "on the road" aud in the native villages. Our little bark cottage looked awfully good to me, and my lovely flowers were all trying to see which could seud out the most joyous welcome. The cosmos were all waving their whlte, red and pink heads, and my little six months old rose bushes were boasting of new buds and promises of blooms soon. Today has been a busy one, and those of you who have never been on such a trip can't begin to realize the sensations one gets from unpackling damp and dirty tin trunks filled with soiled clothes and linen, unpacking dirty chop boxes, in which anything might be spilled, from a jar of jam to a tin of cooking oil! The dozeus and dozens of eggs, different and indifferent that had been "dashed" to us, aud the getting back into place everything that didn't have to be either washed, cleaned or sunned! I'm ready to stop for a while now and am more thau content with my little bush-cottage.

I was awfully tired of the road, though I realize that it is through just such trips that we accomplish the greatest good, and come in closer contact with the people, but I was tired of having my cot jerked out from under me every morning, tired of washing my face in the dripping forest and on the wet leaves as we passed early in the day, tired of eating food that tasted like smoke, and tired of being the "observed of all observers!" But now that we are home and were so warmly welcomed by the many new friends that we have so recently made up here, I can retrospect and realize that our trip was a great success, and one that will bear fruit in the days to come.

Such a lovely mail was sent to us as we rested Sunday in Atok, and now that letter-writing seems worth while again, I must get this letter off in this week's post, and I'm wondering if you would be interested in some of the things that we did and saw on the trip.

We left home on Tuesday morning, just two weeks ago, and planned to sleep at Endele, about 15 miles away. Endele is the home of Biwole, the boy who died of influenza during the Evangelists' School here, and so we had to stop there to see about Biwole's wife, make some arrangements for her, and place another boy there to carry on his work. To reach Endele, we have to cross the big Nlon River about ten miles from here and pass the big Government Sleeping Sickness Hospital at Ayos. The doctor, Dr. Jambot, who is stationed there, heard that we wanted to cross, so he sent his big hospital boat over for us, and we crossed with all 20 of our carriers, Gayle's wheel and my big chair all at once. We had hoped to slip through the grounds, for neither of us was dressed to be received as guests, Gayle in his knee breeches, and I in dark road suit and hiking shoes; but before we reached the top of the hill we spied two white men waiting for us, and as they met and greeted us we found out that they were Dr. Jambot, in charge of the hospital, and Lieut. Tourne, Chef of the Subdivision of Dumie, who was there for treatment for a small abscess. They insisted that we stay for "small breakfast" at 11 o'clock, and refused to accept a refusal, so we stayed; and how we did enjoy it! It was a thoroughly new sensation for me, and I was quite impressed with the eight-course luncheon which Dr. Jambot served, and tried to smile and look as if I understood the volley of French that was showered at and around me!

He had a Bulu interpreter there, but as Gayle handled his own part of the conversation, I dismissed the "Interrupter" and let them have the conversation. But I realized again how dreadfully a woman is handicapped when she cannot talk! We got away at two, and had a hard journey in the hot sun for the rest of the way. The boys, especially my chair boys, Ze and Lombo, were very much displeased that we had lost the nice cool morning, and they complained as they ran along: "Those white men certainly did spoil our journey when they made you stay and eat with them!" But all the same they were surprised, for later I heard Ze say in a meeting one afternoon that it was so strange that we of different tribes, who had never seen each other before, should meet as friends, and should eat together as such! The Bulu can't understand how the white man can do those things.

Wednesday we arrived at Nya Mvutu, after a most interesting day traveling through great, huge, dripping forests. I had my butterfly net along and we captured some very beautiful specimens. There were no small towns or tiny villages scattered about, but very large towns and long distances apart. Very few of them had ever seen a white man before, and scarcely any of them a white woman, so they ran along the side of my chair, screaming, and exclaiming over the wonderful thing! Ze, who speaks their language, and likes to tease, would shout as we sped along; "If you'll dash me two eggs, we'll walk slowly so you can see!" If he was told that no eggs lived in that town, off he would scamper, and they would follow, not unlike a stampede.

Thursday as we sat in a wayside palaver house eating our morning lunch and resting awhile, a Houser passed by going to market with his wares. He was wearing his barefoot sandals, but as he approached, he reached down, pulled them off, walking past us barefoot, and then replacing them as he passed on. I asked why he did this, and was told that he did it to show respect, just as a white man removes his hat when he passes a lady! That is a strange, interesting, and mysterious race.

Thursday night we slept very comfortably in a new house built especially for white guests. We held a meeting that afternoon in the headman's palaver house, and granted a request for a school to be placed in his town. Friday we arrived at Efufup, one of our Communion points, and rested for two days. Plans were made for building a new house and a new church there, and we spent Saturday transplanting palm and pawpaw trees to beautify the grounds. To reach Efufup we travel for many miles on the big Government Highway, which the Germans built before they retired in favor of the French occupation. One "fill" that we crossed we counted 29 small bridges, all made of bamboo and bushrope; not a nail was used in a single one. And so with the big river bridge at Abon Mban, which is built entirely of bamboo and bushrope. It seems almost impossible that such should be the case. We had good meetings on Monday and Sunday, and Monday we were off again. Monday I had quite a thrilling experience with a man who had indulged too freely in palm wine, and was happily drunk. He, seeing my push-push chair for the first time, thought it a pretty toy perhaps, and wanted to play with it awhile. He rushed up to Ze, who was pushing in the rear, and tried to take it out of his hand. A struggle ensued, and it was all that Ze could do, with Lombo's help, to hold possession. I was bouncing and balancing in the chair, but, thanks to my strong boys, I suffered no ill effects except a slight nervous headache from the scare. When I reached the school where Gayle was visiting and told him of my encounter, and showed him the cause of my scare, he, with the headman and a policeman, administered the correct punishment, and sent him soberly on his way! It must have had a good influence on the whole town, for that afternoon, when the drum was beaten for a meeting in the big palaver house, 500 people were there to hear the Word.

In the country and tribes through which we traveled then they have the most peculiar architectural notions that I have ever seen. They begin at one end of a street and build all the houses in a straight row, each as tall, as wide, and as high as its neighbor, and each one rubbing elbows with his neighbor, thus giving you the impression that it is one long house, instead of dozens and dozens. Each house has a small 2x2 foot hole in the front, which serves as door, window and chimney, and from each of these holes one might count the heads of father, mother, from one to six children, the dog and the chickens, and from the cracks between the heads small spirals of smoke from the open fire on the floor, over which the small clay pot boiled and sputtered, in which the family's evening meal was being cooked.

I grant you that I have quite a bit of traveling to do yet before I see all of the world, but never have I seen such crowds, such throngs, and such multitudes of people as I have seen on this trip. I am sure that neither Billy Sunday, Mary Pickford, Barnum and Bailey Circus, or a freak at the World's Fair has ever attracted more attention than I have on this trip. As one passes through these big towns and looks back from the top of the next hill he only sees hundreds and thousands of tiny black exclamation and interrogation points!

We held a meeting in the afternoon and had over 200 present. I wish you might have seen the youngsters dance for us that night. The teacher brought up about 30 youngsters and had them dance in the moonlight for us. Some of them wore shackles of dry nuts on their ankles that rattled merrily and in perfect rhythm as they marched and danced. The leader, in his small, shrill voice, gave the signals, and the way those youngsters followed him, and the way that they managed their lithe bodies was perfectly wonderful. These people are the most graceful I have ever seen, and the use they make of the muscles in their bodies is marvelous. So many of them are handicapped by the heavy brass anklets and necklaces that they cannot move gracefully, but those who haven't been burdened with such finery are certainly masters of the Terpsichorean art.

On Thursday we had dinner with the Governor of the Subdivision of Abon Mban, where we met a Chef of the Dumie Division, and two French merchants. One of them has a sister who has married a man from New Orleans, and lives there. He has spent some time in Mexico and China, and has visited the States, so, of course, he speaks very nice English, and was very entertaining. The Governor was extremely nice, and we thoroughly enjoyed every minute of the new and strange experience. He also served lunch in the true French style, one thing at a time, which covered eight or nine courses. I really think that this meeting of the men in official life is going to mean much to our work here, for each one of them expressed a new interest in the work of the Mission, and offered to do all they could to encourage the people in it, even though they themselves are not Protestants. We held a meeting in the afternoon at the Mission and 455 were present. How they marveled at the wonderful little folding organ, and how loath they were to leave! That night we took the organ out in the street in front of the house where we were sleeping, and soon hundreds gathered and sang until I was tired out. It made a very impressive picture as they stood there, with their brown bodies outlined in the moonlight, singing lustily the songs that a few years ago they didn't know were in existence. And they know the words, too, even the third verses, that we so often omit in our singing at home!

I can so easily understand now why the little Ycbekolle girls who were in school at Metet came to me so often with the request that they be allowed to go fishing, because these people up here live in the water. Wherever you see a small stream, no matter how small, you can see old women, young women, and small girls and boys wading in the water waist-deep, shoving big fishing baskets through the water, or making a trap to catch the larger ones in. Ze says that when he sees a small stream and sees no fishing baskets, or no footprints in the sand, that he feels great grief in his heart, and when asked why, he said that he knew then that it was a long, long distance to the next village!

Sunday we spent in the town of Atok, which is owned by Beyene, the King of all the Mekae tribe, and great man he is. The Governor had sent him a letter, telling him that he must show us every attention, and so we were royally entertained. We slept in the house he had built for the white man, and sent us his soldiers and policemen to use as we wished. Beyene has only 250 wives, and the largest town in the colony perhaps. But now that the French Government is putting a tax of ten francs on every wife after the fifth one, Beyene says that he's giving a woman to every man who comes and says that he wants one and will live in his town. He has a most modern plank house built after the model of the house of the white man, but he has a most beautiful brick house under construction, which will soon be finished. He is very jealous of every one else, because he wishes to keep his reputation as being the King, and when Gayle told him that he had planned to establish a new Communion point on that side of the river, and would put it in the town next to his, he shouted: "I refuse! I refuse to consent!" Then he promised that he would build a big church building, a house for the white man to live in and a house for guests, and furnish all the food for the many guests who would be there at that time. On Sunday at meeting, at which there were 600 present, Gayle announced to the congregation that they would have the next Communion there so that the people would not have the trouble of crossing the river to Efufup, and said that he wanted to see three thousand people present at that time. Beyene, who was in the congregation, lifted up his voice and shouted, "No, there'll be five thousand, five thousand!" Beyene has, until recently, done all he could to oppose the work of the Mission and had refused to allow his wives to become Christians, but since our visit up there last year, he has promised to do better, and now he seems to have had a complete change of heart, for which we are grateful, for with Beyene against us, we can hope for little success in his town, but with him on our side, we can accomplish wonders.

Soon after arriving on Saturday afternoon we heard that a leopard had visited a nearby village, and had killed and eaten a woman, and on Monday we learned the rest of the story and saw the track across the path along which he dragged her body. It seems that she was a young woman of another tribe, and had come to this village to sell kank. She was sleeping alone, and the leopard jumped up on the roof, tearing a hole in the thatch, killed her and then dragged her body to the forest, eating half of it one night and returning for the other half the next night. About 7:30 we passed a tiny village of about half a dozen houses and were so surprised to find six newly-made graves in the street. Ze asked a man who worked in a nearby garden of what kind of sickness so many people had recently died. Imagine our horror when he replied that a leopard had killed them! Poor people, they seem so pitiful in their helplessness! Small children sitting in the street, whose mothers have been killed in this horrible way, look almost as starved as war-ravaged Armenians. It would almost be a kindness should the leopard make his next meal of them. How one's heart goes out to them, and how we long and pray for an orphans' home in the country of neglected children!

I mustn't keep you longer, though I could talk on forever. However, you know that I love you, and am counting the days and weeks until October 7, the date for our sailing from Douala. This week's mail brings us letters from my Chinese brother who expects to meet us in Europe so that we can see some of the sights together, and reach home at the same time. Such a home-coming that will be for us, as well as for dear mother and dad.

This is a harvest time in Africa, and the natives are all busy digging their peanuts and potatoes, and they are showering us with good things to eat. Ebo'o, the pastor here, has just come and set a big basket of lovely Irish potatoes here by my chair. Our own garden is a joy now and we are enjoying every meal eaten in our own little cottage on real china plates, instead of on tin ones. My coffee tastes lots better from a china cup with thin dainty edges, than from a big thick army tin cup.

Since returning we are told by the pastor here who hands in his report that nearly one hundred people have confessed and become Christians since we have come to live on the hill, which is very gratifying; and if you could only see the piles of heathen medicine that have been turned in by these confessing you wouldn't doubt it! I have suggested to the Other Half this morning that he have a pit dug to throw these things in, for so many of them are poisonous and I am afraid to touch them—small bits of bark, bone, leather, animal horns filled with powders of different kinds, bracelets of wire from which dangle all kinds of gruesome objects. There is one brush-looking affair which contains, so they say, the hair of some man's grandmother and grandfather whom he killed many years ago, and he now confesses his crime, and gives up this brush which has contained his witchcraft for all these years.

With all my love for each of you,

Lovingly,

LILLIAN.

A WORD OF APPRECIATION.

My dear brethren in the ministry, and also my many friends throughout North Mississippi:

So many of you have written to me expressing your sympathy and assuring me of your prayers for me, that I find it is next to impossible to write a personal letter to each of you; so I take this method of trying to tell you that I appreciate your kind letters more than you can ever know until you pass just where I am passing. And I pray that you may be spared this bitter cup.

I have always loved my brethren in the ministry, and have prayed daily for each of you ever since I have been a pastor. But, brethren, you have never meant quite so much, or been quite so near to me, as now. God bless every one of you. As I have read your sweet letters, I am sure that you do not realize how much they have meant to me in this the darkest hour that I have been called upon to pass through, in the loss of my precious sweet wife. Oh, it was so hard to see her go! But I am sure my loss is heaven's eternal gain.

And to my good people in Brooksville, God's richest blessings be upon every one of you. I have been with good people—people that I loved, and I love them yet—but surely you must be the best people this side of heaven. I am sure that you can never know in this world the gratitude of my heart for all that you have done for me, for I have not the language to express the feeling of my heart.

I also desire to thank the good people of Meridian, Miss., who were so kind to us; also Revs. Paul D. Hardin, presiding elder of the Meridian District, and J. Loyd Decell, pastor of Central Methodist Church, Meridian.

To one, and all, allow me to say, "God bless every one of your." Your brother in Christ,

A. L. DAVENPORT.

Huh? What? Vaeation's over with!
I got to find my books?
W'y ma—w'y, me an' Willie Smith
Just got some more fish hooks!
W'y, we'd made up to catch that bass
Down in th' willer pool!
I don't care who will head my class—
Aw,
Pshaw,
Ma!
I don't wan' tuh go tuh school!

I'll bet th' teacher will be mean;
I know just what she'll do—
She'll say my han's an' face ain't clean
An' make me wash 'em, too!
I'd a heap ruther not to go.
I'll not grow up a fool!
Aw, shucks! A boy don't have no show—
Aw,
Pshaw,
Ma!
I don't wan' tuh go tuh school!

What? Got to carry all them books?
They're awful heavy, ma.
I'm sick! You'd know it by my looks.
I don't care! Just tell pa!
I don't want to be President—
Ain't stubborn as a mule!
You'll whip me? I don't care a cent.
Aw,
I'shaw,
Ma!
I don't wan' tuh go tuh school!

FOOLISH FLORENCE.

Eleanor hurried over to Florence's. She had a scheme in prospect that was altogether too delightful to be enjoyed without the help of some other girl.

"Come on, Florenee," she cried, "there's just time to catch the car for Oakport. What do you think—I've just managed to get father to give me the money for a new hat! We can be all the afternoon picking it out. Hurry!"

Florence slowly finished adjusting her long apron. "Can't go to-day, Nelly," she said. "I've been appointed First Lady of the Dishpan for a while, and then I'm going down to the village to do the week-end marketing."

"Oh, nonsense!" Eleanor spoke crossly; "you are foolish about sueh things. Why don't you let mother do it? She expects to. Aanyway, my mother does."

A picture of tired Mrs. Horton flashed across Florenee's mind. "I won't turn it off this time," she thought; "I'll tell her."

Without saying a word she took the astonished Eleanor by the arm and led her out to the street, and then turned her around. "There," she said, "see that house?"

"Course I do," snapped Eleanor.

"That's where I live," Florenee sweetly informed her; "have lived there for fifteen years. Eat there three times a day. Can go in and stay there any time I want to. I think it costs my father something for taxes and repairs each year. But he never presents any bill to me. Now let's go in."

"You're erazy," Eleanor spoke sulkily; "but we've lost the car anyway."

"This is my room." Florence threw upon the door with a gesture of invitation.

"That's great news! I've been in it a dozen times."

"Perhaps," Florence spoke gently, "you never noticed how many things there are here for my special comfort and pleasure."

"It's a lovely room," agreed Eleanor.

"Sometimes," Florence went on, "I eome up here and take mother by surprise planning something new and dainty for me. It's a habit she's had for years. It seems to make her very happy."

"Well, what next?" Eleanor's foot was tapping the floor impatiently, but her face was flushed.

"The next isn't the last," said Florence; "but the water must be boiling by this time, and I'm due in the kitchen. But when I think of all the things that are done for me at home, I—I sometimes wonder whether I am worth it. And so I try to do a little—— What, going, Nelly?"

"I certainly am. I'm due—somewhere—myself."

—The Girls' World.

KEEPING THE WEEDS DOWN.

It seemed as if the parting of the ways had come—the ways of mother and daughter.

Molly was fifteen. Up to this summer, she had never wanted to go anywhere or do anything without mother. Now, she had fled to her room—after a cold, perfunctory kiss in place of the hug that was her usual good night—fled in angry tears, because her mother had refused to allow her to spend the night with her chum.

The mother, alone downstairs, was most unhappy. She realized that her child must have girl friends, but Molly's choice of a particular friend distressed her. She knew little of the girl, or of her relatives, but from her free-and-easy deportment her use of slang and her general conversation the mother argued that the intimacy could not be beneficial.

So, long into the night, she sat downstairs, alone, thinking, hoping, planning.

The next day was Saturday. Molly belonged to a tennis club that met every Saturday afternoon.

"Bring the girls home to tea, dear," suggested the mother, as Molly, very fresh and pretty in white duck skirt and middy blouse, tennis racket and shoes slung over her shoulder, was about to start.

"Thank you, mother," said Molly, rather coldly. She was still on her dignity. Other girls slept about variously with their friends, why couldn't she?

However, the temptation to extend hospitality was not to be resisted. Therefore, the mother, watching the garden gate late that afternoon, saw with pleasure a group of girls, very pretty in their gay-colored sweaters, preceding her daughter along the garden path.

Molly, on her part, was frankly delighted and proud when she saw her mother prettily and effectively dressed, and the drawing room at its best, gay with flowers, shining with care. The tea table, set near the open window by the veranda, was a picture. It held not merely delicate sandwiches and tempting cookies, iced tea and lemonade but the very best china and the embroidered tablecloth—everything that was used for the most important company. And a friend of her mother's, also dressed as for an important occasion, was pouring tea.

The little festival was a great success.

"Molly will have tea every Saturday," announced Molly's mother as the guests departed. "We shall always be glad to see you."

When they were alone, Molly rushed to her mother and hugged her, to the detriment of her gown.

"You're an angel, mother," she cried. "Giving my friends the best of everything!"

So their ways were one again. The danger was over; for the "chum" did not come back on any subsequent Saturday. The slight effort required to keep her own language and deportment up to the standard of Molly's home was a little too much.

Thus Molly's friendships were formed, little as she knew it, by the principle of the survival of the fittest. She found those girls most congenial who seemed to fit into her home. Years later she understood and blessed her mother's wise censorship.—Youths' Companion

If I can live
To make some pale face brighter, and to give
A second lustre to some tear-dimmed eye,
Or cheer some way-worn soul in passing by:
My life, though bare

DIRECTIONS.

All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after three or four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.

Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

TAKING CARE OF THE YOUNG PEOPLE.

Its young people have constituted the greatest asset of the church in all ages. It is to them that the church must look for a developing leadership; it is from their ranks that the officials of the church, from highest to lowest, must ultimately be drawn; it is by their contributions that the institutions of the church must be supported and its work carried forward. It is of supreme importance, therefore, that the church take care of its young people by nurturing their spiritual life, by training them to perform the duties they will have to assume later as officials, and by bringing them to a realization of their responsibility to God as the trustees of material wealth that is committed to their keeping.

In our church there are two outstanding institutions by means of which the young people may be especially reached and influenced—the Sunday school and the Epworth League. The Sunday school, it is true, is not designed for young people alone, but it is the organization that first attracts their attention and enlists their interest, and it is unquestionably the most influential of our organizations in shaping their character and determining their destiny.

The development of the Sunday school in recent years has been one of the most notable achievements of the church. By persistent efforts on the part of those who have led us in this department of our work, we have been brought to see the necessity of proper organization for the most successful work, and have been made to realize the importance of having trained teachers to instruct the children and young people in the fundamentals of their religious faith. Every year marks an advance in the realization of our ideals; but the goal has not yet been reached. We cannot conceive of a field in which greater returns may be gathered by the faithful pastor and the older members of the church than the Sunday school, which lies at the foundation of our organized activities. No labor is wasted that is faithfully and prayerfully put into this field.

The Epworth League is, likewise, an organization that has as its greatest work the development of the young life of the church. Its program embraces the whole life of the young people to whom it makes its appeal, and its activities are such as to meet their demands for social, cultural, and spiritual development. That it is not failing in its appeal to the spiritual, is to be seen from the fact that a large number of volunteers for life service are coming from its ranks. A careful investigation has shown that a great many of our preachers, home and foreign missionaries, deaconesses, and other trained workers received their inspiration and their first opportunity for definite Christian service in the Epworth League. It is a wise pastor, therefore, who gives his sympathetic and enthusiastic interest to this department of his work. We cannot see how any one who is really concerned about the young people can fail to co-operate with them in carrying on the work of the League in every possible way.

We call attention to the possibilities in connection with the Sunday school and the Epworth League only as a suggestion—there are many other ways in which we may show our young people that we are really interested in them and by which we may lead them into the fullest kind of Christian service. Our whole point is that the church MUST take care of its young people if it expects to hold them within its fold as they reach maturity..

BISHOP AINSWORTH IN MISSISSIPPI.

According to previous announcement, Bishop W. N. Ainsworth will meet with the presiding elders and Board representatives of the North Mississippi Conference at Winona on Wednesday of this week, and with a similar group of the Mississippi Conference at Jackson on Thursday. Bishop Ainsworth will spend two weeks in Mississippi on this trip, preaching at Columbus, West Point, Starkville, Winona, Jackson, Laurel, and Hattiesburg. As will be seen, his itinerary covers a good part of the State, and many of our people will have the opportunity of seeing and hearing one of the most distinguished of our chief pastors. Bishop Ainsworth will be cordially received and gladly heard, both for his own and the work's sake.

DEATH OF REV. THOMAS CAMERON.

Just before the Advocate went to press, we received the following note from Rev. J. H. Holder:

"Rev. Thomas Cameron, eighty years old, charter member of the North Mississippi Conference, died at his home in New Albany, Miss., at seven o'clock p.m., September 15. Brother Cameron had been in failing health for several months and the end was not unexpected. He leaves one son, assistant postmaster at Memphis, Tenn., and one daughter, Miss Ida Cameron, of New Albany.

"Brother Cameron joined the Conference in 1867. He was licensed to preach at the close of the war between the States. He preached for several years in North Alabama, and then became a charter member of the North Mississippi Conference, where the larger part of his life was spent. He was an earnest, noble man, and greatly beloved.

"He was laid to rest in the family burying lot in the New Albany cemetery. Services were conducted by the pastor, Rev. Mellville Johnson, assisted by the writer. A suitable memoir will be prepared."

One by one God calls his saints home. We sorrow with those who mourn the departure of a loved one, but we rejoice that there is "a mansion in the skies" for those who have loved and served the Lord on earth.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

An exchange is authority for the statement that the editor of the Dearborn Independent, Henry Ford's paper, is a Methodist preacher.

Rev. A. Brulet, of Greensburg, La., writes that the work of the church is moving along well in that community. Some gracious seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord have been experienced.

A Sunday school class, known as the Wesleyan Bible Class, has been organized in the First Methodist Church of Laurel, Miss., with Mrs. Cochran as teacher. The interest is fine and the attendance is growing.

We learn from the "Big Brother," of Greenville, Miss., that Rev. John W. Robertson, our pastor at Rosedale, Miss., recently underwent a serious operation in a hospital at Memphis, Tenn. We trust that he will have a speedy recovery.

We learn from the Arkansas Methodist that ground has been broken for the erection of a $20,000 church at Portland, Ark., where Rev. F. R. Power is pastor. Brother Power was formerly a member of the Louisiana Conference.

Mrs. F. C. Slaton, of Benton, Miss., in renewing her subscription to the Advocate, states that the paper has been coming to her home for more than fifty years. We are always glad to hear from these faithful members of the "Old Guard."

We received the following telegram on Monday morning from Dr. I. W. Cooper, president of Whitworth College, Brookhaven, Miss.: "Officers and teachers, twenty-seven; largest enrollment in history of college." Whitworth is one of our greatest schools for girls.

Rev. P. O. Lowrey, the pastor, has planned an "Efficiency Week" at Indian Bayou, La., September 24-October 1. A fine program, embracing every interest of the church and the community has been prepared, and we are sure much good will result from this occasion.

The meeting now being held at Epworth Church, this city, is making good progress. Rev. J. L. Seils, of Meridian, Miss., arrived on Monday and is doing the preaching daily to growing congregations. The pastor, Rev. J. E. Selfe, is greatly encouraged with the prospects.

Rev. W. W. Holmes, of Lake Charles, La., paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Monday of this week. He was passing through the city en route to the Seashore Camp Grounds, to attend a meeting of the board of trustees of the Camp Ground property, of which he is a member.

A note from Rev. C. A. Northington, of Lambert, Miss., tells of a good meeting at Belen, in which Rev. W. V. Shearer did the preaching. There were fourteen accessions to the membership of the church. At the time he wrote, the meeting at Lambert was in its second week, with Rev. W. M. McIntosh doing the preaching.

In a personal note to the editor, Rev. Jas. V. Bennett, Mississippi Conference evangelist, speaks of having recently been in a meeting at Fayette, Miss., with Rev. C. F. Emery. He stated that Brother Emery is doing a great work in that splendid community, and that he is greatly beloved by his people. This was the third meeting Brother Bennett has held in Fayette.

Rev. H. H. Wallace, of Pleasant Hill, Miss., writes as follows: "We are having a good year on the Pleasant Hill charge—more additions to the church than have been on this charge in many years. We have good Sunday schools and good prayer meetings. We are remodeling the parsonage and making a pretty home of it. We are hopeful of a good Conference report."

The Business Men's Bible Class of Durant, Miss., planned a visit to the Methodist Orphanage at Jackson, Miss., on last Sunday. They expected to go by automobile, leaving Durant early in the morning and returning in the afternoon. The officers of the class are: J. A. Meredith, president; B. W. Moore, vice president; Walter Odom, Jr., secretary; Mrs. R. P. Neblett, teacher.

The Mississippi Methodist Celebration, to be held during the Mississippi State Fair, ought to be a means of impressing upon the people of the State the significance of Methodism as a vital force in the commonwealth. If the Methodist people of the State will co-operate properly with the Director, Dr. J. M. Sullivan, and his competent staff of assistants, it will mean much to the church.

Rev. K. W. Dodson, presiding elder of the Monroe-Ruston District, Louisiana Conference, has sent a letter to every steward in the district, calling his attention to the fact that the fourth quarter of the Conference year is at hand and that much depends upon the work of the stewards during the next few weeks. We are sure the letter will have a fine effect in promoting the financial interests of tbe church.

We regret being out of the office on Saturday of last week when Rev. E. C. Gunn, our pastor at Bogalusa, La., called. The corner stone of the new church at Bogalusa was laid last Sunday afternoon. Dr. George Sexton, of Shreveport, was to have delivered the address, but was unable to be present on account of sickness in his family. Dr. W. L. Duren, pastor of Rayne Memorial Churcb, this city, took his place.

We bave just received a note from Rev. Leon 1. McCain, our pastor at Lafayette, La., in which he says: "We have just closed a gracious revival at Jena. Tbere were about forty conversions and reclamations, thirty additions to the Methodist Church, fifty new tithers, and seven new subscriptions to the Advocate. The efficient and gifted pastor, Rev. A. E. Barrett, is rejoicing over the splendid results of the campaign."

Rev. Van R. Landrum of Harlston, Miss., requests us to announce that the annual camp meeting of tbe Americus circuit will be held at Salem Camp Ground, October 3-8, the first sermon being preached on Tuesday evening, October 3. Rev. Jas. V. Bennett will do the preaching. A cordial invitation to attend is extended to everybody, and all former pastors and presiding elders are especially urged to come. The prayers of all the bretbren in behalf of the meeting are requeqsted.

Rev. W. H. Saunders, our pastor at Hazlehurst, Miss., writes concrning the meeting just closed, in which the preaching was done by Rev. Jas. V. Bennett: "The good done will be great and far-reaching. There has not been a man in this town in many years who has given more genral satisfaction and made a deeper impression for the cause of Christ. Brother Jno. L. Carter, our pastor on the Scotland charge, has given great service in song and in general work among the young. He is a good leader in song and one of the most capable and promising young men in the Conference."

From "Methodist Notes" in the Newton (Miss.) Record, we take the following: "Many of the congregation last Sunday morning expressed their appreciation of the talk made by the pastor recounting a three weeks' stay he made once in the city of Jerusaiem, Palestine; and he has promised to continue the talk at some early future date. When he was in Jerusalem the Turks were in control, and a visit to the Temple site was under escort of a paid Turkish guard; but that has been changed since General Allenby, in 1917, representing the Allies, captured the Holy City." Rev. H. G. Hawkins is the pastor.

Rev. J. L. Neill writes from Prague: "Dr. Walt Holcomb reached Prague early on Sunday morning, August 20, and has been with us for the last ten days. He preached every night in the largest theater in Central Europe. This theater is four stories under ground. I do not think I have ever seen a man facing a more difficult situation; yet he has met it bravely, with implicit faith. Last Sunday morning he began a revival with a open-air mass meeting on the public square at Slany, and bas been speaking in Slany each night. The city is just the opposite of what you find in Prague—the rankest socialism rampant. The fact is that it is a Bolshevik center of this entire section. The same success has attended his efforts at Slany, notwithstanding the different conditions."

THANKS TO OUR FRIENDS.

We desire to express our thanks to the following friends who have sent us two or more subscriptions recently: Rev. J. B. Cain, Ellisville, Miss. (by W. R. Grayson, Moselle, Miss.), 5; Rev. S. D. Howard, Lake Arthur, La., 3; W. R. Baker, St. Joseph, La., 6; Rev. P. O. Lowrey, Indian Bayou, La., 2; Rev. Geo. H. Thompson, McComb, Miss., 3; Mrs. Pink Clements, Lisbon, La., 2.

MOUNT SEQUOYAH—YOUR OPPORTUNITY.

The interest in Mount Sequoyan, the site of our Western Methodist Assembly, at Fayetteville, Arkansas, is constantly growing. I was there last week, and found that certain business men had almost had to give up their occupations in order to show visitors tbe Assembly site and the ground that will be offered for sale as lots. The best of it is tbat tbe visitors are always deligbted with tbe wonderful situation and the possibilities of development, and many are saying that, just as soon as the plat showing location of lots is ready, they want to select lots and build homes.

Last week a subcommittee and the landscape architect, Mr. S. Herbert Hare, of Kansas City, made a careful study of the topography and reached an agreement about the points under consideration. In a few days his revised plat will be submitted and the Executive Committee will be called to approve, fix prices and let contracts for grading streets and drives, laying water and sewer mains and the erection of the water tower and administration building. It is practically certain that the lots can be ready for sale by Oct. 15.

Only about 150 lots will be for sale, and all will be choice. They will differ in size from 30 by 50 to 50 by 200, and the prices will range from $300 to $2000. Water and sewer mains will be accessible to every lot, and the streets and drives will give ten-minute automobile connection with the depot and stores of Fayetteville, and yet they are hundreds of feet above the surrounding country and in tbe midst of wild scenery. At most resorts lots have a speculative price. Our lots have a high real value because they are near a great Assembly and also a fine university town and have conveniences of the modern city. They can be used for summer homes and the houses rented during tbe other ten months.

Fayetteville can be reached by Pullman in a night's run from most of tbe principal cities of our territory, and a large part of our people can get to the Assembly in a day by automobile. The Assembly grounds are at an altitude of 1,725 feet and no lot is lower than 1,500 feet. The climate is the best all-year climate in the Mississippi Valley, and the products of orchard and farm supply necessities and luxuries at minimum cost.

There are 800,000 Methodists in the patronizing territory. It is not unreasonable to expect that there are 150 who want lots and are ahle to pay for what they want. We have sufficient cash already to make the improvements most needful for opening, June, 1923. If, however, we can sell lots to the amount of $75,000 or $100,000 immediately, we can make improvements before next June, which otherwise would be deferred. There is no doubt that, if we should put agents in the field on salary or commission, all the lots would be sold in thirty days. Is there not a better way? If our people will buy direct, the Assembly will get every dollar paid for the lots and be able to accomplisb more. I therefore make this suggestion: Let every pastor in our territory mention this to his congregation, and let every person who wants a lot immediately notify me. Then when our committee meets, we shall know whether we shall need a selling organization. As the number of lots is limited, prospective purchasers will need to act promptly. Fulfillment of conditions is guaranteed.

Will you help your church to do a big thing? Address Rev. A. C. Millar, Pres., Western Methodist Assembly, 221 E. Capitol Ave., Little Rock, Ark., and mention this paper so that we may know tbrough what medium you got your information.

It is hoped that each State and each Conference will be represented in the buyers of lots. I am expecting 200 applications within thirty days. Remember that this is an investment from which both buyer and the church will get full value.

A. C. MILLAR.

TEACHING A DOG TO TALK.

The late Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, who invented tbe telephone—a lasting monument to his name and fame—was a teacher before he began his experiments in sending speech over wires. In fact, he was on the faculty of our own Boston University as a professor of the mechanics of speech. Dr. Bell's father had also been a teacher, teacbing people who were deaf and who could not speak. So it was natural, perhaps, that the son should follow.

One of his early experiments he described in an article in The National Geographic Magazine, a short time before his death.

"I had," said Mr. Bell, "often wondered whether there was anything in the mouth of a dog to prevent him from speaking, and I began to make experiments with an intelligent Skye terrier that we possessed. By giving suitable kinds of food I soon taught the dog to sit on his hind legs and growl continuously while I manipulated his mouth, and to stop growling when I took my hands away. Taking his muzzle in my hands, I opened and closed the jaws a number of times in succession. That act produced the syllables 'ma-ma-ma.'"

Various other experiments added to the dog's repertoire of sounds until he could say the vowels "ah," and "oo," the diptbong "ow," and the syllables "ma," and "ga."

"Then we began to form words and sentences of those elements," the article continues, "and finally the dog was able to say, 'Ow-ah-oo-gama-ma?' which by the exercise of a little imagination readily passed for 'How are you, grandmamma?'

"The terrier took a bread-and-butter interest in the experiments and often used to stand on his hind legs and try to say the sentence by himself, but without the help of hands on his throat he was never able to do anything more than growl. The fame of the dog soon spread among my father's friends, and people came from far and near to hear him talk."—Exchange.

Died, May 26, in Jackson, Miss., at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Frank McGrew, ANNIE WINGFIELD MASON, beloved wife of J. W. Mason, of Benoit, Miss. The deceased was born in Washington, Ga., April 22, 1853, and moved to Deer Creek, Washington County, in early childhood. After her parents' death, she made her home with her sister and brother-in-law, Col. Robert Sims, and was married from their house, February 20, 1877, the Rev. Stevenson Archer officiating. This marriage was an ideally happy one, through the 45 blessed years that the Master permitted them to journey together.

Mr. and Mrs. Mason united with the Methodist Church in 1888, and in all their subsequent life taught their children by preeept and example to serve the Lord. Six children, three boys and three girls, were given to bless their home; three are living, Mrs. Lowry, of Clinton; Mrs. Jackson, of Benoit, and Mrs. McGrew, of Jackson, Miss.

The writer knew Mrs. Mason when she was a joyous girl, and all through her beautiful Christian life was intimately associated with her. Never did a servant of the Lord work more gladly in his vineyard. Nothing was too difficult if the Master needed her. She was one of those happy Christians who fixed earnest eyes on heavenly things, even though her feet walked in diffieult paths.

Only God knows the eountless little acts of kindness she performed throughout her long, beautiful life. The world was made better because of the influences of her sweet, pure life. None ean fill her place in the chureh and home. Her busy hands are quiet, and the little feet, so eager for the Master's service, are at rest; but they that are with Him are called ehosen and faithful, and they shall see His faee and His name shall be in their foreheads.

MRS. H. L. SUTHERLAND.
Cleveland, Miss.

About 3 o'eloek in the afternoon of the 4th inst., the angel ot death suddenly swept down into the home of Rev. and Mrs. W. A. Hart, of Jonesboro, and took their baby child, GEORGE BEVERLY WILSON HART. George had been sick for about two weeks, but was thought to be better. The end came as a shocking surprise to both friends and the family. George was four years, four months and two days old. His path through time was a short one, yet he filled a noble mission in his short career. He beautifully entwined himself into the hearts and lives of his parents, sisters and brother. In his delirious condition he said his verse that he was accustomed to say when retiring. These sweet memorles, with others, will eternally live in the memory of his father and mother as sweet, heavenly ehimes brought to them by a dove from on high. George was a whole boy, full of pep, keen perception, wide-awake, with an inquisitive mind. But he fulfilled his mission and "was not, for God took him." The many friends of Brother and Mrs. Hart deeply sympathize with them in the loss of their little boy. Brother Hart is a superannuated minister of the West Texas Conferenee, of high standing. He and his good family are remembered in the prayers made by his brethren.

J. C. PRICE, Pastor.

A GREAT MEETING AT CARTHAGE, MISS.

Desiring to give praise only when praise is due, we stop to give report of what we truly believe to be a great meeting in Carthage, led by the well known evangelist, Rev. C. M. Dunaway, one of the general evangelists of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. This meeting was not great in eburch joining, because the field had been well gleaned; however, we received 13 into the church. Neither was it great only in giving vent to emotion and in shouts; still from day to day the Holy Laugh was heard, and many expressions of joy were given that manifested the intense feeling that prevailed among the people.

But this meeting was great in the depth of work done, in the many testimonies that were backed by a shining faee, given to the transforming work of grace in the heart, and in the many testimonles, given by the members of the church, as being nearer the Lord than they had ever been before, and saying to this humble pastor, they were more ready to help him in prayer meeting, Sunday school, and all church work than they had ever been before.

We saw at least two of the most beautiful servlces that we think we ever saw. One was especially for the ladies and mothers, where we saw fifty-seven ladies, and most of them mothers, kneeling at the altar, praying God's blessings upon them, and pledging themselves to be true to their homes and their children, and standing for the highest morals and the holy religion of our Lord Jesus Christ. The other was a eonseeration service of the young people, when we saw perhaps sixty of our young people offer themselves for Life Service, to be pastors, missionaries, evangelists, laymen and anything God might call them into.

Brother Dunaway is one of the greatest exponents of the Scriptures and forceful gospel preachers. He did wage the most terrific war on sin and the forces of the devil, and present the love of God and the gospel of Christ in the plainest and simplest terms, and the mighty power of God to save from all sin that we ever heard.

Brother T. A. Spinks did so beautifully and sweetly sing the gospel and lead the choir that he did well contribute his part to the success of the meeting. We most heartily recommend these brethren to all who need help in revival meetings.

Faithfully,
T. B. WINSTEAD, Pastor.

FROM GREENWOOD SPRINGS, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: On the night of September 2, we closed our seven weeks' revival meetings, including seven ehurches. We had for our help during the season Brothers E. C. Driskell, J. R. Murff, Jas. T. McCafferty, and Thomas H. Lipscomb, and in all we had good preaching, good congregations, and good attention and splendid results, considering the disadvantages we had. Some of the meetings we had to close just as the interest was at its best. When Brother Lipscomb had been with us only two days and was, by his great ability as a preacher, attracting the attention of the great crowds and had, it seemed, laid the foundation for a great meeting, he was called suddenly away on aceount of the death of a friend and one of his flock; but in the wind-up we had 28 additions on the charge—22 by profession and 6 by letter and vows. So we feel that the Lord has blessed us and we hope to make a good report at Conference. So mote it be, and we will give God the glory and the praise. Amen.

J. W. JONES, P. C.

WHAT A SMILE DID.

In London, in 1872, one Sunday morning a minister said to me: "I want you to notice that family there in one of the front seats, and when we get home I want to tell you their story." When we got home, I asked him for the story, and he said:

"All that family were won by a smile."

"Why," said I, "How's that."

"Well," he said, "as I was walking down a street one day, I saw a child at a window; it smiled, and I smiled, and we bowed. So it was the second time! I bowed, she bowed. It was not long before there was another child, and I got in the habit of looking and bowing, and pretty soon the group grew, and at last as I went by a lady was with them. I didn't know what to do. I didn't want to bow to her, but I knew the children expected it, and so I bowed to them all. The mother thought that I was a minister, and the children followed me the next Sunday, and found I was a minister. And they thought I was the greatest preacher living, and their parents must hear me. A minister who is kind to a child, and gives him a pat on the head, why, the children think he is the greatest preacher in the world. Kindness goes a great way. And to make a long story short, the father and mother and five children were converted."

Won to Christ by a smile! We must get the wrinkles out of our brows, and must have smiling faces. —D. L. Moody.

Material for this Department from the several Conferences should be sent to the editors named above. Copy must be in the Advocate office by Thursday preceding the week of publication.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE

In the Columbus District there are several good Leagues. The one at Weir, on the Aekerman and Weir charge, where Rev. W. L. Storment is pastor, is flourishing. These young people are doing a distinct service for the students of the Agricultural High School, which is located at that place. Miss Leo DeLoach, Columbus, is district secretary.

At Maben, in the Aberdeen District, where Rev. W. B. Baker, of the Eupora and Maben charge, is pastor, a good Epworth League has been in progress for some time. Mr. Thomas Allen Hartley is corresponding secretary of this League and is wide awake, seeking all information possible to assist them in the carrying out of the programs. This League had two representatives at the Grenada Conference, in June, Miss Rosa McLemore and Miss Grace Hawkins. Miss Vera Combs, Pontotoc, is district secretary.

The young people of Guntown, in the Corinth District, where Rev. J. J. Garner is pastor, have just been organized, with Miss Levelle Rhodes, as president; Harvey Wilson, vice president; Miss Inez Dougless, secretary, and Miss Annie Booth, treasurer. They have written, through Miss Bessie Brand, for literature and are looking forward to a live organization this fall and winter. Brother Garner, their pastor, was at the Grenada Conference, June 7-9.

Miss Falla Richardson, of Corinth, who has been serving as district secretary for this territory, has resigned, since the death of her father, and has gone back to school to finish her course in preparing for the definite service as a deaconess. We wish her Godspeed. A successor has not as yet been appointed, but the Conference president will likely have these new appointments made within a short time.

Miss Allen Ramsey, of Minneapolis, Minn., who is visiting her mother, Mrs. G. B. Ramsey, in Durant, Grenada District, gave a most comprehensive address to the Senior League at their meeting Sunday, September 10. Miss Ramsey is a Y. W. C. A. secretary in the Northern city, but is a product of Mississippi and Southern Methodism.

R. P. NEBLETT.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Mr. Harrell of the Hattiesburg District wishes to announce that Miss Louise Dawson had been appointed assistant district secretary for his district, in charge of Junior and Intermediate Leagues. Her address is 507 Miller Street, Hattiesburg. Reports of Junior and Intermediate chapters should be mailed direct to her.

Miss Dawson is the present superintendent of Broad Street (Hattiesburg) Junior League. She has been an officer and worker in the Broad Street Chapter, both Junior and Senior, for several years, and is an earnest, consecrated worker, and we feel that our president has made a wise choice in this appointment.

We have been asked to publish a complete list of the officers of the Ellisville Chapter. Here they are: President, G. J. Jordan; Vice President, Miss Grace Carley; Secretary, Miss Mary Allen; Treasurer, Mr. Harrold Ramsey; Era Agent, Mrs. J. B. Cain; Organist, Miss Carathine Turnipseed; Music Director, Miss Carrie Smith; Reporter, Miss Annell Jordan. Superintendents: First, Miss Alice Griffin; Second, Miss Maggie Leguin; Third, Miss Sallie Anderson; Fourth, Miss Myrtis Meador.

Mr. Hawkins recently visited the Ellisville Chapter and talked to the 10 young people who compose that chapter. He says "they are eager to do the work." This chapter is getting a fine start and we are expecting big things of them. Mr. Hawkins also visited the Moselle Chapter and talked to that band of young people.

Mr. Harrell and Mr. Lewis also visited the Moselle Chapter recently, and report them taking on new life and getting ready to do some real work this winter.

Mr. Hawkins congratulates our Epworth Leagues on the splendid showing in payments on our African Special. Read what he has to say about it.

We know that all of you who know Mr. Harbin are anxious to know what he thought of our first assembly. See what he has to say about it next week.

J. H. WEEMS.

Centenary Payments in the Mississippi Conference.

I wish to congratulate the Mississippi Conference Epworth League on behalf of the Centenary Commission for the very splendid work they have done. If everybody would do as well in the payment of their pledges as our Leaguers do, the African Special, your Conference Missionary Secretary could retire, and many new missionaries could go to the foreign fields.

Your splendid devotion to the interest and ongoing of the Kingdom has been an inspiration to me, and I have not forgotten your interest in the cause. Yours for service,

W. D. HAWKINS,
Conference Missionary Secretary.

Congratulations to Mississippi Epworth Leaguers.

Please allow me to call your attention to some statistics that appeared in the Nashville Advocate of September 1, in which it was stated that among the first ten Conferences in Southern Methodism in Epworth League payments on the Centenary, Mississippi Conference is in the seventh place. The total amount paid on the African Special is $8477.23. This is a splendid showing and I feel sure that if it had been placed on the percentage basis on the quota assigned each Conference, we would have been on the roll of honor very much higher than the seventh place.

I am sure you will be interested to know that our quota was $7600 for the five years, and in the third year more has been paid than was asked for. Now I am going to make a special appeal to you that in the two remaining years we double the amount; in other words, let's be 200 per cent instead of 100 per cent. This is a fine showing, and I most heartily congratulate you on your splendid work.

It might be well to say that while the Centenary Campaign was put on in May, 1919, our Conference met in June following, and we agreed to take care of the amount allotted us, namely, $1520 per year. Our first year ended in June, 1920; second, June, 1921; third, June, 1922; fourth will end in June, 1923, and fifth in June, 1924.

Let everyone throw up his hands and say, "Hurrah for the Epworth League!" Yours very sincerely,

W. D. HAWKINS,
President Miss. Conf. Epworth League Assembly.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Baton Rouge District.

News has come that Baton Rouge is in the race to win the State Shield and are reported to be in fine shape and working hard. Good luck, Baton Rouge.

Shreveport District.

Miss Pearl Williams, a very fine worker from Glenmora, is assisting her pastor, Brother Boddie, and is doing a wonderful work. She had anticipated going to Scarritt this fall, but Brother Boddie has asked her to stay in Glenmora and help with the organization of the work when they get to their new church; so she will teach this fall and go to college next fall, and then on to Scarritt.

The Senior League of Noel Memorial in the past year was of much help to the young people, and in the coming year the League hopes to do even more for the young people. To do this, they must stand up for the League and do all they can to help not only each other but those who are not in the League. These Leaguers are also very sure of obtaining a "Gold Seal" this year, since 25 Intermediates have just been promoted.

First Church reports their League is steadily increasing, despite the fact that so many are away on their vacations. The League is now ready to carry out the new program as given at the Assembly and are working for a Gold Seal this year. In order to do this, every member must be a Gold Seal striver and work to the one end of the greatest year in the history of our League.

New Orleans District.

The New Orleans City Union held their monthly meeting at Rayne Memorial Church on Tuesday, September 12. Among the most important business discussed was the Loyalty Legion (see full report below) and the circus to be given by the Union, announcement of which is also listed below:

FROM ESTHERWOOD, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: On the 27th of August we began a meeting at Estherwood, La., and closed on the night of Sept. 6. The attendance was splendid from beginning to end of the meeting. Rev. F. M. Freeman, of Crowley, did the preaching for us, beginning on the night of the 28th. His sermons were conscience-searching and very effective. Taking into consideration the number of those who attended the services and who were already members of the church, we can say that the results were indeed gratifying.

A splendid feature about this meeting was the singing. It was led by Brother Walter Fontenot; and all they who have heard him know what a treat we experienced from day to day. We counted ourselves fortunate in being able to command the services of Brother Fontenot, as it meant so much to the singing. The Crowley Methodists are proud of him.

We have a splendid plant at Estherwood. The church is a two-story building, with auditorium up-stairs and one class room. Downstairs there are six class rooms and a large vestibule. The building is well lighted by electricity furnished by Brother Ellis Hoffpauir's Delco plant, at his home nearly two blocks away.

We are glad to report that as a result of this meeting there were added to the church seven by baptism, nine on profession of faith, and two by letter. Among all those to whom we feel grateful for their untiring services are Mrs. Walter Fleshman, who is always so faithful at the organ, and Brother Ellis Hoffpauir, upon whose heart and hands so much of the burden for the success of the church rests. We have added fifty-five to the church—thirty-eight by revivals. On with the revival!

What This Buffalo Physician Has Done For Humanity

The picture which appears here of Dr. Pierce of Buffalo, N. Y., was taken in 1910. As a young man Dr. Pierce practised medicine in Pennsylvania and was known far and wide for his great success in alleviating disease. He early moved to Buffalo and put up in ready-to-use form, his Golden Medical Discovery, the well-known tonic for the blood. This strength-builder is made from a formula which Dr. Pierce found most effective in diseases of the blood. It contains no alcohol and is an extract of native roots with the ingredients plainly stated on the wrapper. Good red blood, vim, vigor and vitality are sure to follow if you take this Alterative Extract. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery clears away pimples and annoying eruptions and tends to keep the complexion fresh and clear. This Discovery corrects the disordered conditions in a sick stomach, aids digestion, acts as a tonic and purifies the blood. Write Dr. Pierce's Invalids Hotel in Buffalo, N. Y., and receive confidential medical advice without charge. All druggists sell Discovery, tablets or liquid. Send 10c for trial pkg.

Sunday School

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Promotion Day, the last Sunday in September, can be made a great occasion. Likewise, Rally Day can be used to bring in a large increase in the membership of the school. We must get them in to teach and train them.

The Greenville District Standard Training School for leadership promises to be a great occasion. Brothers Felts, Chapman, Lewis, Parks, Mathis and others are behind the enterprise. The date of the school is October 16-21. Better write Dr. C. M. Chapman, Shelly, Miss., for information.

So far, Miss Sue L. Taylor, of Potts Camp, is the only one who has sent an exhibit for the State Fair and our Conference exhibit. Send in your best work, that others may see what is being done for our children.

Has your school led a large number to a saving knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ?

Has your school so carefully taught the truths of Christ to the children that they have been kept from departing from him?

Has your school trained any one for superintendent in case the one you have should be removed?

Has your school trained any number of men and women to become superintendent of the different departments in the school?

Has your school seriously undertaken the training of a sufficient number of teachers to care for all the classes in the school?

Is your school supporting a missionary, or is it interested in any phase of mission work?

Is your school training its members to pray, to give, and to live the life that is Christ's? If you are doing these things, you can call your school a good Sunday school.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

The Meridian Standard Training School is now history. To say the School was a success is to put it mildly. We had VICTORY. The Board of Managers, consisted of: President, P. D. Hardin; Financial Secretary, L. E. Alford; Enrollment Secretary, J. L. Sells; Publicity, J. B. Holland; Entertainment, J. L. Decell, and the other preachers and superintendents of the city. Each of the committees performed. All moneys were collected and bills met. All the books were sold—not one single copy to be sent back. The homes provided for the faculty were delightful. Each school was enlisted in the work. The enrollment was 127. Some of these came only one session; some came two or three sessions. The vast body of them came every time. About 8 were below age to receive credit in a school of this type; 62 credits were issued, and counting the 8 who did creditable work but were only kept from the certificate by age limitation, there were 70. Two who attended each session but were kept from handing in the work were allowed time to send in their papers. This was very creditable indeed. One young man and four young ladies answered a call for life commitment for service. Several parents stood and said they had placed their children on God's altar for service and for trained servants.

The faculty were received gladly and were treated royally. Brother Gladney and myself were entertained at the Rotary, Exchangeites and Kiwanis. Brother Gladney captured the whole town and they elected him a permanent member of the faculty. He not only did great teaching, but he delivered several messages that made profound impressions for the kingdom. Mrs. Bowen had a great class and was received unusually well. I shall always be glad and thankful for the royal, kind, and thoughtful reception of the school to me and the workers. Each teacher was well received. I was besieged from all sides by the different workers who were in the various classes to be sure and have their teacher back. I thank God for victory.

As to the collections, brethren, they are slow. Can you put it over in high and do better? The cause is great, the need greater, the fields ripe, the workers ready, but no means to go forward with. Sunday School Day offerings sent in now will mean victory later.

Pray for the work and the workers.

Yours in Him,

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

NOTES FROM THE SHUFORD CIRCUIT.

Dear Brother Carley: We have just closed the series of revival services that has taken us around the circuit. Our gain in membership, though not as large as last year, is considerable. We gained over 50 per cent this year of the unchurched for whose evangelization our church is responsible. We received 46 members, all but two of which came by profession of faith. Since coming here 20 months ago our total gain has been 123, or nearly one-third the original membership.

The results of this season's revivals are most largely seen in the deepening of the spiritual life of the people. Bible reading and prayer, an Epworth League, and a prayer meeting came spontaneously as result of meetings, and another League is forming and will be organized as soon as the leaders read the handbook.

I had Brother George, Brother Wroten, and Brother W. A. Wilson to help me in three meetings, and held the other myself. All of the brethren did me excellent service, and every one of the meetings was a success, judged by nearly any standard.

I wish I had space to tell of them all but I must mention the meeting at Lovejoy. God greatly used Brother J. A. George in this place. His ministry here is the more remarkable in that this circuit is his home and he is kin to many of the people and well known to all. They affectionately call him Jesse. Perhaps Christ did not mean that a prophet never had any honor in his own country.

Brother George has held 4 successful meetings in three years on this charge, with 89 additions.

At Lovejoy we had 24 additions and the Baptists 4. We had an exhibition of the old-time power of the gospel to save men and women.

We not only had sin in the church, but were greatly troubled by bootleggers from whom the officers of the law had given us no relief. Under the powerful preaching of Brother George, conviction fell on sinners in the church and out, and they made haste to make things right. Among the number converted were two men who were running stills. The gospel of Christ remains the best remedy for the ills of the world.

We had the old-fashioned grove prayer meetings at sundown, with the men and women meeting in separate bands. We had the mourners [illegible] and the Christian people took the seekers out in the woods and prayed with them and taught them to pray until they found relief, or "came through," as they used to say.

The Saturday night that we received the class it seemed as though we [illegible] have to remain until midnight because while we were giving the candidates the right hand of [illegible] the mourners began to be converted out in the grove and again and again we were interrupted to baptize and add another to the line. Such scenes of joy have not been here in many days.

We not only sang "The Old-time Religion," but got it. It even extended to the pocketbooks of the people, and, in spite of the hard times, this church broke the record for the amount paid by a church on this circuit for the third quarter.

I want to recommend Brother George as one who holds up the hands of the pastor in an exceptional manner. I also like his manner of preaching the doctrines of our church. There are a lot of people who wonder why they are Methodists. But they don't wonder after they listen to Brother George a week. They are mighty proud they are Methodists. We have doctrines and we ought to preach them. We can do it without belittling and demeaning others; it will make the others respect us more, and when our people know why they are Methodists they won't slacken in their loyalty to their church when they happen to get a preacher they don't fancy.

Yours in Christian service,

N. D. GUERRY, P. C.

HALF THE FIGHT AGAINST ILLNESS

Keep the Liver Prepared to Do its Duty in Cleansing the System. Black-Draught Will Help.

Kernersville, N. C.—Mrs. Wesley Mabe, who resides near here, says Thedford's Black-Draught is kept in her home all the time, since it has proved very valuable when used to correct derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels, and to help prevent sickness from developing from such conditions.

"For dizziness, headaches, colds, and similar troubles, Black-Draught is a wonder," according to Mrs. Mabe.

"It helps carry away bile and cold the easiest of any medicine I ever saw.

"I have used Black-Draught with my whole family, and will continue to do so, as it has proven its worth. We are glad to recommend Black-Draught. My health is just fine."

Black-Draught has been found a useful adjuvant in breaking up colds, when the use of a laxative or cathartic medicine is indicated. It acts upon the liver as a tonic, helping it to drive poisons and unhealthful matters from the system.

Biliousness, dizziness, coated tongue, bitter taste in the mouth, often warn you that your liver is out of fix. Don't neglect it. Prevention of illness is better than cure. Take Black-Draught, for your liver. Be sure you get Thedford's.

Most druggists sell Black-Draught. Get a package, to-day—Thedford's.—Adv.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE

From Our Superintendent of Supplies.

Starkville, Miss., Aug. 14, 1922.

Dear Mrs. Neal: Have had letters from both Miss Lois Tinsley of the Biloxi Wesley House and Mrs. R. W. Freeman of the Door of Hope, Macon, Ga., telling of their needs in these two institutions that have been given North Mississippi Conferenee women to send contributions to.

At Biloxi Wesley House Miss Tinsley says they have been supplied with an abundance of sheets, pillow cases and towels, but are very much in need of little aprons suitable in color and style for babies one year old and under. Also aprons for five and six year old girls. Wash clothes and safety pins are always needed. If any one has toys their children have outgrown or even new ones they will be very acceptable. The table linen, Miss Tinsley says, needs replenishing. They have a small library and books for children will be gladly received.

Am sending Mrs. Freeman's letter which I am sure will interest our ladies, especially those who have contributed to the institution.

SUSIE THOMAS.

My Dear Mrs. Thomas: Your letter of July 5 was received some days ago and I would have answered ere this but for a few days of illness at that time.

In regard to a change in the list for the needs of this institution, I will say there are no changes that I would make at this time. We have received several boxes from Mississippi this year and they have been such lovely boxes and helped us in the work wonderfully. Almost every box has consisted of baby clothes and just to-day I have seen anew what a blessing the boxes have been to us. We have just had a baby born to-day and the mother had been with us only six days. She had not made a garment for the child, and but for a reserve of some of the little clothes sent in she would have had to borrow clothes. I was just so glad our good friends had provided for us and the little baby be cared for. There have been two other similar cases to this, so you may know just how greatly we are blessed with these contributions.

I wish I knew just how much you wanted to tell your Conference about the work and perhaps I could give the information briefly. I will say, however, that this is only a small institution, the capacity being twelve girls. Just now we have nine girls and eight babies. There have been nine births this year. We receive the girls here on the condition they stay until the baby is a year old. This gives the baby a fair chance for life and the mother an opportunity for caring for it during the nursing period. This time also gives the mother an opportunity for making good and leading a clean, pure life. I should say we only take girls upon first offense, choose whom we class as an occasional offender. We do not receive those who have led a public life.

While here the girls receive training in house work, for they do all the work of the house. We have no educational work in connection with the institution, though it is badly needed in some cases. They are taught to cook and sew by doing the practical work. The principal aim of the work, of course, is to have souls saved. We have family worship both morning and evening and the girls are required to attend church services both Wednesday night and Sunday. It is wonderful to see the change that comes in so many lives and the effort put forth to keep and rear the little baby. We never encourage a mother to release claims to her child, but, on the other hand, we do all we can to help her keep her baby. Very few of them ever give the baby up; even if they can't keep the child with them, they sometimes board it or let relatives keep it. We find that in one or two instances where the child has been given up, the mother grieves and is very unhappy over it. Then we are all almost sure that a girl will not make the same mistake if she has her child to provide for and rear.

I might tell you of some interesting cases that have gone out from this home and of the good work that they have done, but I fear that would be more than you care for.

Please thank your Conference for all the lovely boxes contributed and tell them what a blessing they have been to the little babies and mothers.

If I can give you any further information about the work or can serve you in any way, please let me know.

With best wishes, I am, yours in service,

MRS. R. W. FREEMAN,
Door of Hope, Macon, Ga.

Young People's Rally, Aberdeen District.

The following program was rendered at Tranquil Church, Aberdeen R. F. D., August 18.

11:00 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Devotional—"Jesus and the Open Country," Mrs. T. W. Baker; "The Creed of a Country Girl" Alice Baker, Tranquil; "The Boy with the Hoe." Ladd Davis, Tranquil; Reading, Miss Harris, Okolona; Solo, Mary Seale Miller, Okolona; Organization; Reports of Auxiliaries; "Our Goals." Houston Young People; "The Journey of a Dollar," Elizabeth Taylor, Tupelo, "Why Should We Study Missions?" Lottie Spencer, Okolona; "The Mission Study Books We Have Enjoyed," Mary Frances Word, Tranquil; "Personal Bible Study and Prayer," Saville Clark, Tupelo; "Young People's Work in the Mill Village, Oline Coffee, Tupelo.

12:30 p.m., Picnic dinner.

2 to 3 p.m. Devotional, Rev. E. H. Cunningham, Okolona; Presentation of District Pennant to Tranquil Young People; Suggestive Program for a Country Church, Miss Bessie Brand, Secretary of Rural Work; Report of Resolutions Committee.

A sunshiny day, a fresh new church, well cleaned surroundings, two hundred fifty friendly Christian people, young and old, a delicious and bountiful dinner, and, best of all, boys and girls happy in rendering service—all these circumstances conspired to make this Young People's Rally a happy occasion.

The Y. P. from Okolona, Houston, Tupelo, Grady's Chapel and Tranquil had fine delegations. Okolona had the banner visiting delegation. Tranquil Y. P., by doing the best work last year, had won the greatest number of credits on the Standard of Excellence and were presented the district banner.

We were fortunate to have with us our new Secretary of Rural Work, Miss Brand, whose message was both practical and inspiring. During the morning session she paid a loving tribute to Miss Belle Bennett, our Council President, who has so recently been translated to the Heavenly home.

Loving greetings were sent to our three volunteers preparing to enter Scarritt in September, Misses Ruth Kellogg, Ruby Berkley, and Willie Weissinger.

Announcement was made of the Methodist exhibit at the State Fair at Jackson and of Methodist Day, set for October 19 at the Fair. Every Y. P. S. Superintendent is urged to have her auxiliary prepare something for this exhibit.

The summer is drawing to a close. I am sure that you have had all sorts of good times. PUT GOD FIRST. Our pledges are not half paid. I am depending on you. The young people of many lands are depending on you. Jesus Christ is depending on you.

MRS. T. W. BAKER,
Tupelo, Miss.

Women Need More and Better Blood

To be strong, well, equal to demands of home, society, office or shop.

It is a fact proven by thousands of grateful letters that Hood's Sarsaparilla is remarkably beneficial to young or older women.

The most common ailments of women drain and weaken the system and sometimes result in anemia, nervous weakness, general break-down.

Hood's Sarsaparilla gives the blood more vitality and better color, makes stronger nerves, and contributes to the length and enjoyment of life.

FROM GALLMAN, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: We are moving along nicely on the Gallman charge. The revival season on this charge has just closed. Brother W. H. Saunders assisted us in our meetings at Gallman and Mt. Pleasant by doing the preaching, which was done well. He is a strong and forceful Gospel preacher. I did the best I could in the other meetings on the charge. The meetings resulted in stimulating the church to more active service, some few conversions and additions to the church, organization of two prayer meetings, and reorganization of two Sunday schools.

The Bethesda Church is now being repaired by putting on a new roof, new floor, new steps, and painting all over, which will add much to its beauty and comfort. My one aim is to get the church to become a working force in the community. We have a strong Woman's Society at Gallman, and have organized an Epworth League Chapter here that is doing good work. Bless the Lord for the success we have had.

Fraternally,
J. T. ABNEY, P. C.

SUCH PAINS AS THIS WOMAN HAD

Two Months Could Not Turn in Bed. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Finally Restored Health

Seattle, Washington.—"I had dragging pains first and could not stand on my feet, then I had chills and fever and such pains in my right side and a hard lump there. I could not turn myself in bed and could not sleep. I was this way for over two months, trying everything any one told me, until my sister brought me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took it regularly until all the hard pains had left me and I was able to be up and to do my work again. The hard lump left my side and I feel splendid in all ways. I know of many women it has helped,"—Mrs. G. RICHARDSON, 4640 Orcas St., Seattle, Washington.

This is another case where Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound brought results after "trying everything any one told me" had failed.

If you are suffering from pain, nervousness and are always tired; if you are low spirited and good for nothing, take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. You may not only relieve the present distress, but prevent the development of more serious trouble.

FROM MAYERSVILLE, MISS.

Our third quarterly conference has come and gone. We had quite a nice crowd out and a good many came almost 20 miles. We had a nice dinner at the church, which, of course, added greatly to the enjoyment of the occasion.

Our presiding elder, Brother J. R. Jones, preached two fine sermons, which was nothing unusual for him; he has the habit of preaching good sermons. If he has any sorry ones, he always leaves them at home, as he never shows them at church; at least, in nearly four years I have not heard him preach a sorry one. The fact is, we love him very much, he is so kind, brotherly, and helpful in his administration throughout his district.

Well, we have been on a little vacation; most preachers and their families need a vacation once a year, and if they did not, the people "might." We passed through ten counties in our travels in the faithful Ford. We saw fields of corn and cotton growing along the good roads that have been and are being built all through these counties; and good school and church houses all along the way were constant reminders that the people were not only looking after and preparing for the body, but that the soul and mind were also being cared for, which is by far the most important thing. For after these fields of corn and cotton and these splendid churches and school houses have crumbled down and gone into decay, yea and these extensive valleys and mighty hills have passed away, with these bodies returning to dust, the soul, the real man, will be existing either in the ever-unfolding glories of the Father's house—the many mansions with all the redeemed of every age and clime—or, sad thought, wailing and gnashing their teeth in the everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels. But I did not start out to write a sermon.

Well, we got up into Leake County, in the bounds of Walnut Grove charge, just in time to attend the third quarterly conference. We found a good crowd out on Saturday (the old-time plan and the best plan I have ever seen tried).

The P. E., Brother J. A. Moore, preached a very fine sermon; then dinner—and the ladies up there have never forgotten how to cook good dinners. After dinner we had an interesting quarterly conference. Then on Sunday back to Sunday school, after which another of those good, strong, scriptural sermons—spiritual food that should be very helpful in developing strong, vigorous, healthy manhood and womanhood. Say, did you know that J. A. Moore could preach that way? I did not. I had never heard him before, but I know it now.

I also met the beloved pastor, Brother Price, who seems to be getting on in favor with his people.

As we served that charge two years several years ago, it was a great treat indeed to wife and me to meet again so many of our old friends.

But we are home again, and our folks seem glad to receive us again. We take courage and go forward.

Yours in Him,

M. J. MILLER.

THE FLYING SQUADRON AT DURANT, MISS.

The "Flying Squadron," an organization of the associated Bible classes, from Jackson, Miss., sent a detachment of more than 50 business and professional men to Durant Sunday night, and one of the most unique, and largely attended religious meeting ever held, was conducted by these men in the open air at "Lee Place," beginning at 7:30 o'clock.

Local committees, who represented every denomination in Durant, had not only extended the invitation to the "Squadron," but had made every provision possible to make the occasion a success. It had been advertised and people from all parts of the county and surrounding country crowded the square at an early hour, where several pieces from the Durant Brass Band, led by Gaston A. Guess and Mrs. Kate Hunoldstein, an organist, began the evening's program with a sacred concert.

More than 1,000 people were assembled by the time the song service, under the direction of Rev. R. P. Neblett, pastor of the First Methodist Church, who was master of ceremonies, began, when, with the use of the stereopticon, words of gospel songs were thrown upon the large screen and the people sang with zest. After prayer by Rev. S. G. Posey, pastor of the First Baptist Church, and announcements, the master of ceremonies, Rev. R. P. Neblett, assured the visitors of Durant's appreciation of their presence and said, as their slogan was "Go Tell the Story," it was the earnest desire and prayer that every one in the vast throng would become earnest messengers and as a result of the service would also "Go Tell the Story."

The service was then turned over to Mr. W. N. Cheney, who was in charge of the body of splendid men, crowding the platform more than fifty strong, who had come to give their witness in song, prayer, and personal testimony to the power of God to save. Mr. Cheney explained that as there had been so many requests for visits from the "Squadron," it had been found necessary to divide in groups and thereby be enabled to have representatives visit several nearby communities at the same time. If the rest of the membership has any more "pep," or evinces any more real religious fervor, and can "Tell the Story" any more effectively than those who composed the company who visited Durant, we do not see how any power on earth can keep them from "taking Mississippi for Christ."

One of the most profound and sacredly sweet testimonies of the two-score given was that which spoke through the "Converted Trombone" of Mr. Roger Philip, when with breathless silence the whole park was literally spellbound while he played "Abide With Me" as a solo.

Young men, strong men, those in middle life, and others passing down the slopes of time told how they had been lifted out of the mire of sin and saved "with an everlasting salvation," to a life of service, as they pleaded with others to come with them into their "new-found joy." Many of these men were converts during the Gipsy Smith revival, recently held in Jackson, but others were converted under the direct influence of "The Squadron," either on some of their trips, or at their prayer meetings, which are held each Wednesday at the Majestic Theatre in the Capitol City.

Colonel John Armstrong delivered the main address of the evening, and when the invitation was given a large concourse of people came forward to shake the hands of those who were asked to stand in line with the ministers of the Durant churches, consecrating themselves to a life of larger service. The churches and Christian people of Durant are deeply in debt to "The Flying Squadron" for their visit, and the impression for good left in the hearts of the community. Their trip and earnest service are greatly appreciated.

THE CARROLLTON REVIVAL.

There is a school of religious thought which holds that the evangelical ideal is in leading people to know Christ and obtaining decision for him in the Sunday school or "church school." The value of the Sunday school cannot be overrated; it is one of the strongest arms of the church, and it furnishes the major portion of the recruits for the church. The denomination without an aggressive Sunday school policy year by year shows diminishing returns. Still the church is not ready to accept the dictum that the world is to be saved by the Sunday school, that the pulpit must eventually yield its ministeries to the saving agency of the Sniday school. It is true that the time to bring people to Christ is while they are young, and the most effective way of evangelizing them must lie through the informal, personal contact that exists between teacher and pupil. But it is a matter of common knowledge that the vast majority of men and women are led to the Christian life in campaigns like that which Rev. W. M. McIntosh and Rev. Ed. G. Phillips recently closed at Carrollton. In fact, the test was put one evening to an audience of a thousand or twelve hundred people. There were ten present whose conversion to the Christian life was not the result of their attending some revival meeting, while hundreds signified that they were influenced to accept Christ by some revival they had attended. Until the realization of the ideal referred to above, we must hold on to the revival campaign and the method it employs for the saving of souls.

The revival, the greatest in the history of Carroll County, was held in a temporary tabernacle at the north end of the iron bridge midway between the towns of Carrollton and North Carrollton. Great preparations were made, various committees were appointed, and a tabernacle seating a thousand people was erected. The Lord immensely rewarded our huge undertaking, for what the Gipsy Smith meeting was to Jackson the McIntosh revival was to the Twin Cities on the Big Sand. While the revival was under the supervision of the Methodist pastor, all the denominations joined in the great enterprise and made it the great success that it was. The choir numbered one hundred and fifty voices, the largest number, Brother Phillips said, they had had anywhere in the State.

As a result of the two weeks' campaign there were one hundred and fifty-two professions and reclamations; one hundred and twenty-three pledged themselves to tithe; twenty young people pledged themselves to definite Christian service; fifty-two family altars were established; and one hundred and three gave their names for membership in the different churches, more than sixty coming to the Methodist Church. Sunday following the close of the revival the pastor preached at the North Carrollton church to a crowd that filled the church and crowded the aisles. The largest class in the history of the town came forward at the close of the service to be received into membership.

For their hard labor while in our midst, Brother McIntosh and Brother Phillips were given a purse of $717.50, which was suplemented to the amount of $100 from other sources.

Following the revival here, two additional prayer meetings were organized, Sunday school classes formed, and a marked increase in spiritual vigor and growth characterizes all.

On the closing evening of the meeting the proposition was presented to the people to build a permanent tabernacle to be used for all big gatherings by the people of Carroll County. The need of such a meeting place was speedily recognized by all. E. L. Duke, J. R. Bingham, and C. Gillespie were the first to subscribe, giving $100 each. In a few minutes the total in cash and subscriptions amounted to $2000. It was voted to make this community spiritual campaign an annual event, beginning the second Sunday in August; and the tabernacle, or community house, with a seating capacity of fifteen hundred, its comfortable features, rest rooms, etc., shortly to be built, will supply a need long felt in our community.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

ENFORCING THE LAW.

When people fully realize that all laws, both those of God and of man, are made to establish justice and promote well-being and happiness, they will come to look upon the violation of law as, in itself, a gross crime, and they will guard the sanctity of the law as they do their very lives. It is a burning shame that so many so-called respectable citizens to-day either openly oppose the enforcement of law or tacitly give their consent to its violation hy an attitude of indifference that encourages law-breakers and discourages those who are sworn to uphold it. We commend to all such a recent statement by Henry Ford: "Starting Monday," he says, "it will cost a man his job, without any excuse or appeal being considered, to have the odor of beer, wine or liquor on his breath, or to have any of these intoxicants on his person or in his home. The Eighteenth Amendment is part of the fundamental law of this country. It was meant to be enforced. Politics has interfered with its enforcement, but so far as our organization is concerned, it's going to be enforced to the letter." The Manufacturers Record, commenting on this statement, very pertinently says: "They say that Henry Ford is 'queer.' He does 'queer' things. Nevertheless the time is coming in this country when breaking of the law, whether by bootlegger or murderer, will land the culprit behind the bars, where he belongs. Respectability, to its shame, has played with fire on enforcement of the liquor laws. Foreigners, such as Parmentier, who was lately here on a financial mission for the French Government, go home and tell how officials at Washington entertained them with 'barrels of champagne.' But the still, small voice of conscience is beginning to operate. The common sense of industrial leaders is showing them that leaders in business cannot violate fundamental law and expect their employes to do otherwise. Bolshevism feeds on law-breaking. Mr. Ford does not have to take public polls to ascertain whether the law or bootleggers should govern America."

THE RIGHT KIND OF CLEAN-UP.

Every now and then we read in the newspapers that some town or city has adopted a "clean-up day," on which all good citizens are expected to clear away rubbish from their premises and the proper departments of the city are supposed to remove all trash, etc., from the streets; the kind of clean-up that most towns and cities need, though, is one that will get rid of the moral disfigurements that most of them are afflicted with. Too many of them are "like unto whited sepulchres, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones and of all uncleanness."

A HIGH PURPOSE.

That a man should resign his position as a member of the Supreme Court of the United States is so unusual as to attract more than ordinary notice. Tho recent resignation of Judge John H. Clarke from that high position has provoked the criticism that he probably has it in mind to become a candidate for the Democratic nomination for the presidency in 1924 In answer to that criticism, Mr. Clarke has issued a statement in which he makes it clear that he was actuated by a high motive in his unusual course, and that he is inspired by a noble purpose. He says: "To a lawyer, there is no higher honor than that which I have had, and when I resigned I did not intend to become and shall not under any circumstances hereafter become a candidate for any public office * * * I resigned that I might have leisure to travel, to read, and to become better acquainted with my soul before it leaves my body." We like those words—"to become better acquainted with my own soul." Too many people seem to have forgot that they have a soul. They seem to think that the whole of their existence is wrapped up in the purely material and physical, and that there is no higher interest that deserves attention. We cannot understand why a man should have to give up his legitimate vocation in order to become acquainted with his soul—but if it is necessary, we honor him for his action. We cannot forget those momentous words of the Master: "For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?"

"THE VICTIM OF CIRCUMSTANCES."

The words used as the caption of this paragraph are sometimes uttered as an excuse for an embarrassing situation in which a man finds himself. There may at times be merit in the excuse, but as a rule it is a weak expedient to remove a deserved reproach. Circumstances are not rational and self-willed things that arbitrarily thrust themselves into a human life to humiliate and discount it; they arise largely out of the acts and habitudes of the individual himself, and are, therefore, subject to his control. In other words, it is too often the case that the man himself is responsible for the circumstances of which he claims to be the victim. It may be that a weak man is shaped by circumstances, but the strong man makes his own destiny.

EMPHASIZE THE SUCCESSES.

In his book, "The Preacher and the Crowd," which has just come from the press, George R. Stuart gives a wealth of helpful suggestions that many of us might use to advantage in our pulpit ministry. His own success as a preacher—and we have heard it stated that he preaches to more people regularly than any other man in America—entitles him to a hearing on any question dealing with pulpit success. Here is a suggestion that is worth much: "No preacher ever growled up an audience. If failure is confronted, it should be treated as an opportunity and turned into a success. An old negro boasted that he could ride any horse. 'No hoss can dus' dis nigger's clo'es.' They led out a hucking broncho. He mounted. In three hucks he hit the earth. He arose with a smile of triumph, ignoring the dirt, and said: 'Dat's de way I does. When I sees a beas' tryin' to be mean, I jumps off and takes a new start.' It is never necessary to lie, but a fall should be treated as a 'jump' if possible. A preacher confronted a very small audience at an evening service. Only one unsaved man was recognized in his audience. He slipped around to five or six consistent Christians and whispered in the ear of each: 'There is an unsaved man here to-night. Pray earnestly that he may be saved.' His sermon and exhortation and invitation were all directed toward the salvation of this man. He asked the right man to approach him. He came to the altar and was converted. There was great rejoicing in the little company. The following Sunday morning the minister had this man publicly testify and describe the wonderful service in which he was converted; then an evangelistic service was announced for the evening hour. The audience was large and a revival of great power and results was started. A fall was made a jump without lying. If the preacher had spent ten minutes growling over the small audience and the absent members, there would have been fewer next time to hear the growler. A preacher should never emphasize the fact that he is a failure. Others will gladly do that for him. Some preachers play the role of being exceedingly humble, and sing, 'O to be nothing,' till the people agree with the pretense."

TOO LATE.

A few weeks ago we used the entombment of forty-seven men in a mine in California, caused by a cave-in, and the vigorous efforts to rescue them, as a lesson to suggest that there are imprisoned souls for whose rescue all too little is being done. News dispatches last week announced the ending of the tragedy—when the debris was finally cleared away, it was found that every one of the men had perished. Help had come too late. In this case, there was no lack of effort to save the imprisoned men—the physical obstacles were simply too great to be overcome before life became extinct; but it was a tragedy, nevertheless, that stirred the nation. What shall we say, then, of those imprisoned souls for whom help comes too late? Every day some of them are perishing. We cannot go to the rescue of those who have already passed on; but is there not one soul we can save if we try? Hurry!

IN OUR FATHER'S CARE.

The ships glide into the harbor's mouth
And the ships sail out to sea,
And the wind that sweeps from the sunny South
Is as sweet as sweet can be.
There's a world of toil and a world of pains,
There's a world of trouble and care;
But, oh, in a world where our Father reigns
There is gladness everywhere.

The earth is fair in the breezy morn,
And the toilers sow and reap,
And the fullness comes to the tassled corn
Whether we wake or sleep;
And far on the hills, by feet untrod,
There are blossoms that scent the air;
For, oh, in this world of our Father, God,
There is beauty everywhere.

The babe lies soft on the mother's breast,
And the tide of joy flows in;
He giveth, he taketh, and he knoweth best—
The Lord to whom we win.
And, oh, when the soul is with trials tossed,
There is help in the lifted prayer;
For never a soul that loves is lost,
And our Father is everywhere.

The ships sail over the harbor bar,
Away and away to sea;
The ships sail in with the evening star
To the port where no tempests be;
The harvest waves on the summer hills,
And the bands go forth to reap;
And all is right, as our Father wills,
Whether we wake or sleep. —Anonymous.

ASBURY, THE PROPHET OF PRAYER.

By Rev. H. H. Smith.

Nobody has ever been accused of praying too much. Of too much work and of too much play, many have been accused; but of too much prayer, none. The biographers of Bishop Asbury criticize his ascetic habits, and say:

"Not Loyola, with his scourge, had less pity on his poor, feeble frame than Asbury on himself. The poorest slave, who was so much the object of his pity, was better treated by the eruelest master than Asbury treated his poor, frail, emaciated body."

But they never criticize him for rising at four o'clock to pray, though his sick and tired body so greatly needed rest. Such is the high value we unconsciously place upon prayer.

Bushop Hurst says:

"Asbury was a literalist in following the scriptural command, 'Be instant in prayer.' He usually prayed with families at the close of each meal, at taverns, or elsewhere. In every pastoral visit he offered prayer. For years his custom was to pray for each preacher by name daily. On his rides he prayed ten minutes of every hour. Besides he fasted every Friday and at other times besides."

He allowed nothing to interfere with his habit of prayer. Once he tells us that his conscience smote him for lying in bed till six o'clock; not because it made him late in reaching his appointment, but because it deprived him of two hours of meditation and prayer. He usually rose at four o'clock and spent the early morning hours in prayer and Bible reading. No wonder Freeborn Garrettson said of him: "He prayed the best, and prayed the most, of any man I ever knew."

Through his custom of keeping a diary, and faithfully recording his religious experiences, we have the privilege of entering the door of the closet and beholding this prophet of the Lord in communion with his Maker. Through his journal we may come very close to him, so close that we can almost feel the heart throbs as he cries out to be "filled with all the fullness of God."

In this busy, bustling age, when there is too little time reserved for communion with God, let us reverently enter the closet of "the prophet of the long road" and learn something of the secret of prevailing prayer:

"Rose this morning with a determination to fight or die; and spent an hour in earnest prayer. Lord, keep me ever watchful.

"As sure as we draw nigh to God in sincerity He will draw nigh to us. I have given myself to private prayer seven times a day, and found my heart much drawn out in behalf of the preachers, the societies, especially the new places, and my aged parents. And while thus exercised my soul has been both quickened and purified. Let the glory be given to God!

"This was a day of much divine power and love to my soul. I was left alone, and spent a part of every hour in prayer, and Christ was near and very precious.

"Being Good Friday, I devoted myself to fasting and prayer."

He did not allow even the reading of the Bible to become a substitute for prayer. After mentioning that he had read so many chapters of the Bible, and so many pages of other books, he says:

"It is plain to me the devil will let us read always if we will not pray; hut prayer is the sword of the preacher, the life of the Christian, the terror of hell, and the devil's plague.

"I purposed to rise at four o'clock as often as I can, and spend two hours in prayer and meditation, two hours in reading, and one in recreation and conversation; and in the evening, to take my room at eight, pray and meditate an hour, and go to bed at nine o'clock.

"I must spend the whole night in prayer, after the example of my Lord; for temptation is to try me, perhaps for my good, as I have many things to lift me up.

"Rose at five o'clock, prayed five times in private, once in the family, etc."

All great religious leaders have had their severe trials and persecutions, and Bishop Asbury was no exception. During the early days of Methodism in this country a schism was about to take place on account of divergent views concerning the ordinances of the church. Asbury was sorely distressed at this. His journal says:

"After an hour's conference we were called to receive their answer, which was, they could not submit to the terms of union. I then prepared to leave the house, to go to a neighbor's to lodge, under the heaviest cloud I ever felt in America."

Now what did this man of God do when "under the heaviest cloud he ever felt in America?" The next lines in his journal, written the following day, tell us:

"I returned to take leave of Conference, and to go off immediately to the North, but found they were brought to an agreement while I had been praying, as with a broken heart, in the house we went to lodge at; and Brothers Waters and Garrettson had been praying upstairs where the Conference sat. We heard what they had to say; surely the hand of God has been greatly seen in all this."

When his motives were questioned and personal abuse heaped upon him, he took refuge in prayer:

"I received an abusive, anonymous letter (I believe from Mr. Smith) on several subjects. My spirits were low. I came from my knees to receive the letter, and having read it I returned whence I came."

"To work is to pray," according to some well-meaning people; but while Asbury was always working solely for the kingdom of God, he did not consider work a substitute for prayer. We hear him cry out:

"I must not neglect my devotions at any cost of time. * * * I see the need of returning to my twelve times of prayer; I have been hindered and interrupted by pains and fevers.

"I have little leisure for anything but prayer; seldom are there at my command more than two hours in the day, and that space I wish to spend in retired meditation and prayer."—The Methodist Review.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

When one travels he is overcome by a desire to tell others concerning the things seen and heard. This is the day of the summer tourist. The voice of the automobile is heard in the land and no man can tell the numbers thereof. The open trail, the forest's shelter, the vast sweep of undulating prairie land, the wayside spring, the towering mountains with the valley streams and cascades, flashing like impearled bridal veils, are Nature's calls to her tired children to seek rest on her ample bosom. There is not only a reversion here to primitive life; there must be also conversion in a sense to Nature's rugged ways, if one would really enjoy and enter fully into the joy and zest of camp life. Nature never works alone for man, but is an anxious mother and zealous nurse to work with man. Co-operation here, as elsewhere, is the law of success and achievement of the best.

* * *

The thousands, yes, tens of thousands of tourists who thread this land of ours during the summer vacation are a fine, genial, representative class of American citizenship. Never a favor asked but that the ready answer came, "Sure—only too glad," or like vigorous replies. Texas is a big State, but its people are bigger. A rancher took us in strangers at his gate, showed a beautiful camp site, furnished water, ice, milk, chickens for dinner, and scorned our puny coin. No wonder W. C. Everett and his crowd look so well favored and healthy. One thing I missed—the real country church. Churches there are in cities and towns, palatial, beautiful, impressive in their massive build, but few indeed are the rural churches. I suppose the automobile is to blame. But are the people on the fertile farms and wide-reaching ranches—as a class, I mean—hearing the gospel? Has the real country church—the center and hub of the community—lost its place and prestige among us? Let him answer who can or may. This is not a criticism—only an expression of what to this writer seemed a sad break in our economy.

The current of ecclesiastical life, energy, and wealth should flow from out the strongly entrenched city churches, and thus furnish means to equip and rebuild the country churches.

This era of good roads and swift, easy transportation should be means of help to this end.

A hidden spring! Back in the little cave, under the rock, it bubbled and gurgled, while from its source poured through the narrow channel a crystal stream. And the stream went on and on, making all things glad that its magic waters touched. The ferns and grasses bent over it, the sun impearled its spray into jewels, the stars at night watched their quivering lances of light reflected from its bosom, bird and beast, all the thirsting world of animate being, drank of its liberal flow. Its mission, its meaning, its life were to serve and to save. Far off in that mystic voice, that all the things of nature hear and know, the call of river and sea sounded over its hurrying course. Its answer was a louder murmur, a swifter run. From an overhanging cliff a great rock plunged downward right athwart its channel. All its waters halted, for a time, in seeming surprise. Swiftly the message rang backward even to the hidden fountain and the waters began to heap and climb, until with a flash and shout of triumph they shot across the prison bar and fell beyond in pearls of spray. Hidden spring and winding brook have a lesson for me, it may be for you. Some lives are sublime in lowliness. Hidden in some humble home, chained by the strong links of circumstance or strong sense of duty, many, many of them of choicest spirit—God's children of destiny—are living, toiling, hoping, praying on the way, a never-ceasing spring of abounding faith behind them and the call of the River and Sea of Life, eternal, immortal, sounding over the years. And by such hidden springs making glad the way is much of God's work done in this world of need and want.

VISIT TO THE MISSISSIPPI METHODIST ORPHANAGE.

The Business Men's Bible Class of the Methodist church, of Durant, Miss., of which organization J. A. Merideth is president and Mrs. R. P. Neblett, teacher, together with the pastor and several members of the Matron's Class, formed a "Flying Squadron," Sunday, making the journey in automobiles to Jackson, Miss., to be present in the Sunday school of the Methodist Orphans' Home, and take lunch with the 200 children and the workers there.

At 6 o'clock a. m., 12 cars were lined up in front of the City Hall, badges were pinned on those who occupied them, large placards pasted on the windshields and the trip was started down the highway to the capital city, 64 miles away. There were 57 people in all, and with favoring showers, which made the going good and weather cool, the first arrivals were at the Home in Jackson by 9 o'clock, the others following in rapid succession.

At 9:30 the children marched into the chapel, followed by the visitors, and a service was conducted. Prof. G. R. Bennett, superintendent of the Durant Sunday school, assisted Rev. B. F. Lewis, Manager, in carrying out the program. After announcements, the children passed out to the waiting street car and began the trip to Galloway Memorial Church in the city, followed by the "Squadron," who entered their cars, drove through Millsaps College campus, by the New Capitol, and sat in a body with the children for the 11 o'clock service.

After the church services the party, led by Hon. W. H. Petty, Trainmaster of the Illinois Central Railroad, with offices at Durant, returned to the Home, where a splendid lunch was served. After dinner speeches were made by the officers of the class, as they were each introduced: J. A. Merideth, president; W. B. Moore, vice president; Walter Odom, secretary; C. G. Mansfield, treasurer.

Prof. G. R. Bennett, Superintendent of the Durant Sunday school, under whose direction the Class was organized about a year ago, was called on and told the company that the object of the visit to the Home was to get into closer touch, learn the needs, and seek to inspire others to do more for the children in the Home.

Captain F. A. Howell, 83 years young, was another one of the speakers; W. H. Petty, who suggested the trip, just a week ago, and Dr. R. C. Elmore, who was largely responsible for the general arrangements in making the trip, were among the speakers. Gaston A. Guess was presented as the "Big Brother," who presented the Manager with a purse of $126 as part payment for the dinner so faultlessly served by the young ladies of the Home. Mrs. T. R. King, in behalf of the ladies, thanked the children, the faculty and management for their entertainment.

Mr. Sugg, city editor of the Jackson Daily News, as did Mr. McDonald, said that the visit was an eye-opener to him in the workings of the institution. Mrs. R. P. Neblett, teacher of the class, closed the program with a most impressive and inspirational talk, and after a statement from the Manager, Rev. B. F. Lewis, as to the work done, the plans sought to be carried out, and the introduction of the members of the staff, the company passed out to the front steps and posed for a picture.

The buildings were thrown open for the inspection of the visitors, who took advantage of the opportunity to see the dormitories, inspect the kitchen and equipment, so that reports could be made to the people back home of the needs, and tell of the accomplishments of those in charge, as well as the children, who each have a task to perform each day in the care of the Home.

Some of the party went into the city for the meeting of the Associated Bible Classes at the First Baptist Church, while others began the return trip to Durant by 3:30. The last cars arrived by 9 o'clock, having spent a happy and profitable day. REPORTER.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

Mansfield College opened with the brightest prospects in its history. This is the school for our Louisiana girls. The religious, cultural and home-like atmosphere is conducive to the largest development in safe leadership. The young women educated at Mansfield have taken first rank in the social, educational and religious world.

Centenary College is getting ready for the biggest opening since the founding of the school. The old alumni can well be proud of their Alma Mater. Her name will be heralded far and wide, not merely for athletics, but for real constructive work in developing the highest type of manhood in the field of Christian Education.

It was our pleasure to preach twice to large congregations at First Church, Baton Rouge. They are in the midst of a big campaign to build a large representative church at the capital city of our State, which is also the seat of our Louisiana State University. Plans are now being perfected for the Greater Agricultural College, which will mean more than doubling the present student body. A great responsibility will rest upon this church and the whole State will be interested in this movement.

At Baton Rouge, we have a most excellent, live and efficient Epworth League. These young people keep "open house" every Saturday night and try to provide wholesome and entertaining amusement and pleasure for the young people.

Baton Rouge subscribed liberally for Christian Education, and the Epworth Leaguers promised our collector to assist in the collection of the pledges. We appreciate the help the young people have given in this connection.

In Louisiana, we have four other educational centers: Ruston, Natchitoches, Lafayette and New Orleans. In each of these the local church is doing a magnificent work among the young people in trying to reach them for the Biblical conception of the Kingdom of God.

It was Prof. Max Muller who has given us an authoritative and conclusive testimony on the real value of cultural training in these words:

"The intellectual and moral character of a nation is formed in schools and universities, and those who educate a people have always been its real masters, though they may go by a more modest name."

It is also true that the facts of history eloquently confirm the wise observation of Goethe, that "the destiny of a nation at any time depends upon the opinions of its young men who are under twenty-five years of age."

The Christian Education Movement proposes to put at the heart of American education the spiritual ideals of Christ. It was the church that kept education going before the State caught the vision. Hence, we are in the midst of a great patriotic Americanization movement to restore to our beloved country the Christian education of our fathers. This is fundamental to the life of the church and to the nation. Education in America is now in the sweep of a development and growth unprecedented in all history. Our church has spoken for God and civilization in this Movement. Therefore, let our people respond by paying up their pledges; and those who have not subscribed ought to respond liberally right away.

The Quaker poet of America, John Greenleaf Whittier, wrote this for the motto of a Christian college:

"Light, freedom, truth, be ever these our own,
Light to see truth, freedom to make it known.
Our work God's work, our will His will alone."

ALBERT S. LUTZ,
Conference Secretary of Education.

A SUPERANNUATE HAS A NEW SORROW.

By Rev. T. W. Adams.

The shadows are deepening; the losses are increasing. It seems that I cannot have any surcease of afflictions. A notification of trouble in my brother's home two weeks ago made me hurry to Yazoo City, where he lived. On the 30th day of August he had a fatal stroke of paralysis. From this stroke he never rallied. In a helpless and unconscious condition he lingered for eleven days. At seven minutes to four o'clock in the afternoon of Saturday, the ninth day of the present month, he breathed his last. The next afternoon at three o'clock we laid his precious body to rest in the cemetery at Yazoo City to await the resurrection. Rev. W. J. Ferguson, pastor of the Methodist church at that place, conducted the funeral services, paying his character a rarely beautiful tribute.

Within three years and nine months my dear wife, my only son, and my only brother have left me for the other and better world. I am dumb in the face of these heart-breaking bereavements. I could not be otherwise than grievously distressed. I can say nothing but "Thy will be done." I find some comfort in the words found in the twelfth chapter of Hebrews: "My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of Him." I am doing my best not to forget this injunction. I remember, too, what the same author wrote: "For whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth." I learn from these words that the chastisements and scourgings that come to us in the providence of God are not proofs of His displeasure, but rather of His love. Our parents on earth correct us for their own pleasure, but our Father in heaven for our profit. I sometimes think that I am not equal to this profound philosophy. I can not see all the way through it. I am sure that it is true. I do not doubt it at all. I just can not understand it. It does not trouble me that I can not understand it. What does concern me is that I see to it that these things work in me the peaceable fruits of righteousness. To that end I am hoping and praying. May His Holy Spirit work in me mightily!

My brother was the second child and first son of Rev. J. W. and Mrs. L. W. Adams. I was next to him. He was born in Lowndes County, Mississippi, twelve miles south of Columbus. He was born on the twenty-third day of November, 1842. He lacked two months and fourteen days of being seventy-five years of age. His life was a long and uneventful one. He spent all of his life, with a few months excepted, on a farm, and was a splendid and successful farmer. He was totally blind for the last several years of his life, but was always cheerful and happy. It was wonderful to see him groping in midnight darkness and yet buoyant in spirit.

He joined the Methodist Church in early life, and died in its communion at a ripe old age. He was never active in church work, but held steadfastly his connection with the church.

My brother was a manly man. He never knew what fear meant. He had the lion-heart of a Richard. He was a resolute and firm man. He stood out in the open and never failed to deliver his convictions on all questions. Although almost brutally frank, he was loved by a wide circle of friends. Although he and I differed widely in very many things, yet there was never a time we were not in great confidence and love with one another. We were one in heart. When he felt uncertain about living long, he requested his wife to turn over all of his business to me to manage for her.

She is a woman of fine character, but unaccustomed to handling business. Her devotion and loyalty as a wife to my brother for so many years, and burdensome cares in his helplessness have put me under such obligations to her that to care for her and to manage her business and thereby relieve her of burdens is a real pleasure to me.

Many of the friends in Yazoo City were exceedingly attentive and kind to me in my days of distress while in their midst. I shall never forget them for their kindnesses. May God reward them! Their whole-hearted services, rendered day and night, and the beautiful floral offerings and the large gathering at the cemetery attested the love and esteem they bore my dear brother. There were several Confederate Veterans at the cemetery. They were his comrades in arms. My brother entered the army at sixteen years of age, and was mustered out at the end of the war. For his dear wife in her loneliness I hope some who read these lines will pray.

NOTES FROM EUROPE.

By Rev. Walt Holcomb, General Evangelist, Cartersville, Ga.

IV.

From Brussells to Cologne is a short trip to the best entrance to the German Empire. The most wonderful cathedral in Europe stands in the heart of the city. Its towering massiveness is bewildering, and the mountain of polished stone, pushing heavenward, staggers the imagination. The Rheims Cathedral, utterly destroyed by the Germans, was its only rival; and the picture of the ruins crowds upon you as you pause in the presence of this untouched, unharmed and overpowering structure.

A boat ride up the Rhine is different from any other river trip in the universe. The scenery is varied and variegated and unsurpassed in grandeur and loveliness. Castles of ancient days are perched on the most exalted peaks. Some of them are piles of wrecked stone, blown asunder by French cannon long ago, while many of them are modern and massive. Surrounded by tall trees and luxuriant flower gardens, bathed in the mellow moonlight, with the river below, they present an entrancing picture.

The Germans have picked up the rocks and placed them in winding terraces along the steep mountain sides. Beginning at the base, the long row of circles start to shorten until, at the crest, they dwindle to a tiny terrace. Between these stone terraces they have planted the vines which grow the grapes that make the wine of the Rhine. The soil and the sun have put the flavor in the grape and given the wine an unusual taste. The Rhine wine holds the world-record. The vineyards line both sides of the river.

The Army of Occupation is scattered along the banks of the Rhine. The American Army is located at Coblenz and occupies the strongest German fort. "Old Glory" floated in the breeze and was so big and bright that you could almost count the stars and stripes from the deck of the boat. Our American boys looked good in their khaki. While we would rather have met them in Berlin, there was a sense of satisfaction to find them policing on German soil. When they return home it is hoped, however, that they may remain.

From Mainz to Munich carries you through a rich farming section and cities of commercial importance. The frontier of Germany is quite different from the shell-plowed soil on the French and Belgian border lines. It makes the blood boil hot as you climb and crawl from shell holes of the torn-up country of Belgium and France into the unmolested Fatherland. The French are right in holding the Germans to the original demands. The Allies should see that they repair and repay.

Munich is unique and antique. The Bavarian type and style differentiate it from any other city in Germany or the world. The Tyrol spirit and manner are in evidence among the lower and poorer classes. The public and private buildings have an appearance all their own. The city is noted for its antiquated museums and ancient art galleries. The National Academy is the home of the Bavarian and German opera. Thousands of tourists assemble here, as it is the leading gateway to Oberammergau, the little mountain village where the world-renowned Passion Play is presented.

On to Berlin! Well, I should like to have gone there four years sooner, on another mission, with different equipment, and with a larger American constituency. But, alas, I suppose that was not best. Berlin, notwithstanding it was the headquarters of the Beast, has thousands of big-hearted and generous-minded Germans. I have not received such courteous and whole-souled treatment elsewhere in Europe. The Government buildings are among the strongest, most substantial and superb in the world.

While their government may not be as solid as Gibraltar, and their money market is precarious, I do not believe that they are bankrupt. I joked them about Uncle Sam licking them, and they showed no resentment. They say it was a big blunder to sink the Lusitania, and think that was the real reason why the United States came into the gigantic struggle. They admit that they are whipped, but their pride is wounded also. They are better losers than I had anticipated. They smile and chat pleasantly.

While they are not broke, they will not pay a mark more than they are made to. With not an inch of the Fatherland scarred, great industries running at full capacity, the working people practically employed, great crops in every field, and cattle browsing on every hill, there is evidence of increasing prosperity. Really, I think they have enough money to settle with France and to meet the other obligations to the Allies. If Germany will pay her indemnities as fast as possible, it will be her greatest moral, financial, and social asset.

There is one thing absolutely certain—Germany will have no more Kaiser and War Lords to drive the people like deaf, dumb beasts to bloody battle. They would sooner cut their throats than to follow the small group of discredited monarchists. Public sentiment exiled the Kaiser to Holland and the War Lords to the country. They won't let them come to town. Many of them have died since the war, and the others had just as well be dead, as far as political ascendancy is concerned.

SCIENCE AND GOD.

By Rev. S. W. Miller.

Faith in the true God is not discoverable through material resources. A skeptic once asked Judge Longstreet if he could understand how it was that Christ was both human and divine; the Judge said that he did not want to know, that if he did, he would be as wise as God and would have no respect for him. Modern scientists see God through material resources, while the true Christian can see through divine revelation as well as in nature; and as he grasps the hand of the divine Christ by faith, he can feel an assurance of divine comfort and love that no so-called liberalist can feel.

That the world has made discoveries in nature cannot be denied; and yet possibly greater things will come to light. But, mark you, they have only discovered how to use that which God put in this old world when he spoke it into existence—not an atom of new material has entered into it since God created it.

Evolution as to growth, or discovery, or development in science or nature is correct; but there has never been any change in the natural laws under which they were created. The telephone, telegraph, phonograph, wireless telephone and airplane, and untold poisonous gasses are all only discoveries made by man of the things that God put here for our development.

I have lived long enough to see improvements, from the wooden axle ox wagon to the automobile; from the single-stock plow making five furrows to the row to the steam plow; from the telegraph using the paper ribbon to catch the dots and marks, to the present system of catching the sound by ear. These and other discoveries through science are mechanical and intellectual developments. This is natural discovery of things that do exist by which things evolve out of the intellectual ability with which God has endowed man.

CENTENARY COLLEGE NOTES.

After a successful year and a strenuous summer, we are looking forward to September 25 as the day on which we enter the greatest session in the history of the institution.

All summer long Centenary campus has been the scene of busy activities. Carpenters, plumbers, brick-men, and construction crews have been on the job. New bungalows for teachers have been built, new athletic quarters constructed, and the old brick building completely renovated, overhauled, and beautified. A new radio outfit has been installed, and a new library room and new classrooms have been erected. Additional Laboratory rooms have been created. New and modern administrative offices have been made. It seems but little short of magic, yet the reality stands before us. The buildings are here to speak for themselves.

Not only in material additions and physical equipment, but also in the increase of faculty members, courses of instruction, and those higher standards of measurement, Centenary College has made marked progress. The faculty will compare very favorably with any college of this State or section. Viewed from any angle, the administration of Dr. Sexton has been a constructive one.

We still need a number of books for our library. Several of the brethren have sent in nice contributions, for which we are very grateful. Will not others respond immediately?

The outlook is most promising and we are facing the future with glad hearts. We covet an interest in the prayers of all of God's people.

R. E. SMITH, Dean.

NOTES FROM THE RURAL PASTORS' ASSOCIATION.

By Rev. J. A. Poe.

(An outline of Dr. Howard W. Odum's lectures, delivered at Birmingham, Ala.)

If I should name his lectures, I would give the title, "The Importance of the Rural Community in Making the National Life."

1. The character of the farmer and the nature of his work. The man himself is dealt with in relation to customs, habits, environments, etc. His disadvantage is lack of knowledge of how to get larger returns for labor and lack of better equipment to put what knowledge he has into practice. Then, if he should produce a surplus of any crop, he cannot find a market; it becomes a loss to him, and cause for discouragement. Again, when he goes to buy things he needs, he finds a poor supply and has to take just anything to make out with, often things he does not need and of poor quality. He is handicapped by poor means of transportation, such as poor, weak teams, inferior vehicles, and almost impassable roads, with broken bridges, swollen streams and impassable mudholes. Here we see the need of better roads and better equipment for moving produce to market.

2. He is hindered by bad communication, and in some instances he has almost no means of communication. Mails are slow and often delayed. Telephones in some places are unknown, where, with little effort, the entire section could be connected with this simple and easy means of communication.

3. Rural finances are always bad. The farmer rarely ever has any interest in a banking business, and so rural credits are low and interest high, making it hard for the farmer to get money to carry on successfully the small business that he is compelled to transact.

The foregoing are some conditions pointed out that need relief, that this valuable asset to our national life be preserved and made to prosper.

Some Agencies of Relief Considered.

1. Organization and Co-operation. That the farmer is naturally selfish and not inclined to fraternize is not the cause of his aloofness, for he is truly neighborly and generous. The trouble is to be found in other causes. First, he can exist without the help of his neighbor, and then he has been deceived by being unfortunately organized in the past. His great need, however, is close and true organization and general co-operation, both in buying and selling.

2. Another great need of most rural sections is sanitation. While the city has been forced to enact and enforce sanitation, the country, for the same reason that it has not co-operated in other things, has failed in this matter—it could exist without it. However that may be, country life is suffering for lack of screening and drainage and other sanitary measures.

3. The life of country people is rendered unpleasant and often unhappy for want of social advantages. Homes are scattered, so neighbors do not often see each other. The church and schoolhouses are often inaccessible most of the year because of bad roads and inclement weather. All this tends to cause social unrest and desire for change, and the result is the tendency to leave the country to find segregated centers.

4. The rural church that should contribute largely to the making of country life fails in a large measure because it is not supported by the people to whom it should minister. The house as a rule is not comfortable or adequate. The pastor is usually inefficient, being a novice or a superannuate.

5. The rural school, that all-important factor in every growing state of civilization, is greatly deficient and inadequate. Like the church, the schoolhouse is usually a small, one-room affair, poorly ventilated and lighted, with bad heating facilities. It is often remote from most of the pupils, with bad roads leading to it that could easily be improved, and the teacher often only a young girl who has but little preparation for her important task. The main relief for this condition is larger school funds.

6. A better educated and trained womanhood, that the family life may receive in the beginning the best ideals. The country does not give its women a fair chance, because of the unequal burdens, growing out of the farmer's failing to appreciate the woman's need of recreation, cultivation, and association.

7. Civic efforts—other education. Under this we will group the main point of several subjects. First, the county newspaper could be made to serve a much better purpose and make a large contribution to uplift country life than is commonly done. It should promote publicity in every way possible.

Under proper leadership, rural aesthetics could be developed, improving and beautifying church and school grounds, and the influence would be reflected in a corresponding improvement of home surroudings.

It is the task of the church to develop real leaders that can force recognition. This leadership should be made so strong that it will be able to enlist the co-operation of the Government, measuring and fixing rural values, etc.

CENTENARY NEWS NOTES.

First Church, Pensacola, Fla., Dr. John W. Frazier, pastor, pledges payment of all Centenary and Christian Education Movement pledges due to date, and this by October 20. This pledge was by unanimous action of its Church Conference. It is a great record this church is making, and it needs not to be said that all its work is prospering.

* * *

McKendree Church, Nashville, last week carried through a program of information concerning Centenary enterprises that was well worth while. The stereopticon was used for four nights of the week, the views setting forth Centenary achievements and the needs of various fields. On Sunday, September 24, Centenary speakers were heard at both preaching hours, and during that day the canvass of the membership for Centenary payments began. Final returns are not in, but this great church will make a record that will ispire other congregations to attempt tasks worth while.

* * *

The "One Hundred Per Cent" Sunday Schools in Centenary giving number 1,335. This means that more than thirteen hundred Sunday schools of Southern Methodism have paid to date their Centenary pledges. While this is a good showing, from one viewpoint at least, there are far more schools below this "grade" than have held 100 per cent rating. A special effort should be made to bring your school to this mark by early in October, provided you have not already reached the goal. See what amount is lacking to bring your school to date in Centenary payments, secure this amount and send to John E. Edgerton, Treasurer, Nashville, Tenn.

* * *

Bishop Hoyt M. Dobbs writes from Brazil: "If the home church should see Centenary results as I have seen them on a 5,200 mile journey of twenty-one days through Brazil and the Interior, it would be greatly heartened for the task ahead." And Bishop H. A. Boaz says: "By looking over the records of the work in the Orient I find that great progress has been made and a wonderful work accomplished by means of the Centenary contributions. The foundation has been laid and the way opened for a greater work in the future. The Centenary funds must be collected promptly that the work in these needy fields may be prosecuted in the most efficient way. Our representatives on the field are depending upon the church at home to supply the sinews of war. We must not fail them."

Of $29,500,000 due to date on Centenary pledges there has been paid approximately $14,550,000 —eighty per cent due, forty per cent paid. Fifteen Conferences have paid more than forty per cent, these in order of percentage paid: Pacific, Missouri, Baltimore, Kentucky, Mississippi, Denver, Virginia, Northwest Texas, Tennessee, Illinois, Louisville, Western Virginia, Southwest Missouri, Northwest Los Angeles. Twenty-three Conferences are forty per cent and below. With eighty per cent of the Centenary appropriations due, and sixty per cent past due, it will be seen that the situation is really a critical one. Concerning this situation Dr. W. G. Cram, Directing Secretary, says:

"We will need at least two and a half million dollars by the first of December to pay the co-operating Boards the amounts due them. We urge our Methodist people who have so generously subscribed to this fund to pay in full as soon as possible, so that the great evangelistic opportunity may not go by unaccepted. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, set the pace for American Protestantism in this great missionary advance. Even in the midst of the financial crisis we have made a good showing on collections. The crucial test is now upon us. Will we pay in full? We believe we will. The solemn pledges that were made to God will be met with courage and faith. Let the message go all down the line, 'The Centenary in Full,' so the great revival may go forward."

CHURCH EXTENSION NOTICE.

To the Brethren of the North Mississippi Conference: Those who will expect to apply to the Conference Board of Church Extension for help in building or finishing churches or parsonages, should write at once to the Rev. J. T. McCafferty, Amory, Miss., who is the secretary of the Board, for blank applications, and have them filled out carefully. See that the county clerk has given his certificate and that it is properly endorsed by quarterly conference; then return same to the secretary to be placed on calendar for Conference.

The Board's Anniversary will be held Wednesday evening of the opening day of the Conference, and Dr. T. D. Ellis, our new General Secretary, will be with us and address the Conference.

W. M. YOUNG, President.

Leland, Miss.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 1.

That is the day for all Methodists in North Mississippi to begin to pay up what is due on their Centenary Pledges. You are due to pay the fourth payment. So let pastors tell their congregations, treasurers send notices, collectors see the subscribers, and people pay up on this day and the next few days, until all have done what can be done on this cause. There is too much to do now for us to go slow. We must finish one piece of work and go to the other. Do the Centenary work in one day if you can. The latest Bulletin has been sent to all pastors and treasurers. Present its message to the subscribers and let the great work that is being done with Centenary money rejoice the hearts of our people.

BEN P. JACO,
Secretary and Treasurer.

"LET'S GO!"

To the Pastors and Centenary Treasurers, Mississippi Conference:

October 15 to 22 has been designated as "Pay-up Week" in the Centenary; this date was approved by the Bishop, presiding elders, and Board of Missions at the meeting in Jackson, Sept. 21. Let's make this a "Real Pay-up Week" by putting our very best in this effort to redeem the unpaid pledges.

Our Aim.

To collect during this week all that is due on each pledge, or 80 per cent of the amount subscribed.

Our Plan.

Let the people know about it through: First, 3-minute speakers before each meeting in your church; second, distribute leaflets to the subscribers (write me for them).

Pastor, have a meeting with the Treasurer (with as many helpers as needed), and distribute the names among those who are to collect, so that every one who made a pledge will be called upon personally during this week and urged to pay—all due if possible, otherwise as much as they can. Those who have moved away, write them.

Results

Will be determined largely by the faithfulness of your effort.

Reports.

Please report promptly the amount collected and either send to me or deposit in the bank and notify me.

The need is urgent and we can pay; let's appreciate the splendid harvest by "Paying our Vows to the Most High." Yours for service,

W. D. HAWKINS,
Conference Centenary Treasurer.

A HINT: BE FAIR.

Put the Golden Rule into practice. Judge men not by single acts, but by the sum of all their acts up to date. When men fail—Be Fair.

Some contend with an ancestry with a downward pull. Yours is quite the opposite—Be Fair.

Some struggle with temptations, trials, and environment of which you know nothing. The wonder is not that they failed, but that they stood so long—Be Fair.

Put yourself in his place who has stumbled. If you had faced his conditions with his past, and without the influences that have made you strong, would you have failed?—Be Fair.

Look for strength in people, not weakness; for good, not evil. Most of us find what we search for—Be Fair.

What if the failure has been distressing! As a rule he suffers most whose lapse from that which is true and good is saddest. Lift him up; don't push him further down—Be Fair.

Jesus was always fair. He has been so with you. In spite of your resistance and rejection, he gives you the best of his great love. Some day you will be called upon to tell him why you were not fair with him.—The Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman.

The Home Circle

THE TWO NANCY BELLES.

The little path Billy and Nan had been following stopped with surprising suddenness before a high board fence. "I wonder what's on the other side," said Billy, eagerly. He stepped back and made a quick running jump. His fingers caught in a crack and he pulled himself up. "Oh, there's a house and a yard and a gray kitten, and oh, Nan, a boy just about as big as I am!"

"Let me see," cried Nan, impatiently. Skipping farther along the fence, she came to a knot-hole in one of the gray boards. She could see the boy standing beside a large horse-trough. "Why, he's sailing a boat," she exclaimed. "I wonder what his name is."

The boy had heard her. "My name is Eric Sanderson," he said with a smile.

"And mine is Billy Laurence, and this is my sister Nan," said Billy. "We came from the summer settlement."

"I thought so," said Eric. "There aren't any children very near here. Won't you come in and see my boat?" he asked politely.

Billy and Nan accepted his invitation with alacrity. Proudly Eric lifted his boat from the water. "I made it myself," he explained as he turned it lovingly about so Nan and Billy could see it better. It was the oddest-appearing boat the children had ever seen. It was stumpy and short, with a queer crooked slant to one side. Its mast rose stiff and straight, and its sail was of dull brown canvas. It was smeared all over with red paint that was thick in some places and thin in others, so that the board it had been whittled from showed through.

"I named her the 'Nancy Belle,'" said Eric.

"Why, that's the name of my boat, too," remarked Billy. Nan gave him a quick little nudge, to remind him that it was impolite to criticize Eric's boat, and that they must not boast about the gold-and-white beauty of Billy's trim, dainty craft.

"I'm sure I couldn't make a boat," she told Eric. "Are you going to enter the contest?"

The toy-boat contest was one of the greatest events of the season. Every year people came for miles to see it. The boys and girls were allowed to guide their boats with a strong cord, but not to touch them. It took a great deal of care and skill to keep them from capsizing and sinking. The first prize was a five-dollar gold piece. Billy and Nan were so sure that their "Nancy Belle" would win, that they had already planned to spend the money for two soft white fluffy rabbits. Eric's eyes shone as he answered Nan's question.

"Yes, indeed, I'm going to try to win," he said. "Last year I didn't have any boat. If only my 'Nancy Belle' didn't leak, I'd be sure to win, but she does leak a little," he added worriedly.

Billy and Nan exchanged glances. Suddenly Billy put out a hand for Eric's boat. "Let me look at it," he told Eric. "Maybe I can help you stop the leak."

It was a lovely summer morning when the tiny boats assembled for the great event. Eric was among the first to arrive with his stumpy little boat. His cheeks crimsoned painfully as he looked at the other boats.

"Never mind, Eric," whispered Nan. "You built yours, and we didn't."

Eric was holding tight to the cord with which he was going to guide his boat, when his foot slipped on a piece of seaweed, and he fell. Dripping and gasping, he scrambled to his feet again. His sharp cry of dismay startled those near him. The "Nancy Belle" had bumped her stumpy bow on a rock, as Eric plunged forward into the water.

"She's leaking," he cried. It was true. The little red-painted boat was settling fast. Nan's eyes sought Billy's. The question in them made Billy wriggle uncomfortably. Then he looked at Eric again, and he felt even worse. Eric was trying vainly to keep his boat afloat. Billy reached forward and thrust something into Eric's astonished hands. It was the cord with which to guide the beautiful toy boat that Billy and Nan loved so much.

"Here, you sail her," said Billy. "Quick! There goes the bugle."

Eric had no time to refuse. In an instant the fleet of tiny white-winged boats were skimming over the sparkling water. A puff of wind overturned two of them. Another struck a bit of driftwood and sank. Billy and Nan gasped as Eric guided the other "Nancy Belle" past a huge rock. Faster and faster the boats moved. Others capsized as the waves grew rougher. Eric's eyes were fixed on his tiny craft. His hand grasped the cord firmly. Skilfully he kept Billy's "Nancy Belle" afloat. Soon only four boats were left. The "Nancy Belle" crept up on them one by one. In a few moments she had passed them and was rounding the spar buoy. Billy and Nan trembled with eagerness.

As the wind filled her sails, the "Nancy Belle" seemed to skim over the waves. It was all Eric could do to hold her without sinking her. He heard nothing, saw nothing, but the little boat. He was astonished when the bugle sounded again. "The 'Nancy Belle,' sailed by Eric Sanderson, wins the contest," rose the joyful cry. "Hurrah for the 'Nancy Belle' and Eric Sanderson!"

It was a wonderful day for Eric. "But I'm going to divide the prize," he told Billy and Nan. "I couldn't have even entered the race, if you hadn't let me take your boat. And—and, what do you think?" he added. "A man looked at my boat and asked me ever so many questions about it. He makes boats himself, splendid big boats that will go anywhere, and he told me that if I would go to school and study hard, by and by he would like to have me help him design and make real boats."

"Oh, Eric, how glad I am!" said Nan, happily. She looked from Billy's "Nancy Belle," trim and beautiful in her shining gold and white paint, to Eric's queer-homely, red-painted "Nancy Belle" with her stumpy mast and brown sail.

"The two 'Nancy Belles,'" she laughed. "Which would you rather have, Billy?"

Billy cradled his own boat a little closer in his arms. "My own, of course," he confessed honestly, "but I'm glad Eric's 'Nancy Belle' showed people what he could do, so he will have a chance to build big boats by and by. You ought to keep her always, Eric."

"I will," said Eric, giving the little red boat a caressing pat.—Lillian E. Andrews, in The Christian Register.

FIDO'S HEROISM.

By Amanda Cordes.

The cat stood hesitating on the corner. A seemingly never-ceasing line of automobiles passed up and down the street. She had made several brave attempts to cross, but each time had been forced to scamper back, narrowly escaping with her life. It was determined to reach the other side and only waited for a favorable opportunity.

Across the street, with lifted ears and body tense, watched Fido, his sharp, bright eyes following every movement of the agile, white feline.

Suddenly, as if she espied an opening she darted in between the automobiles, but it was a false move. An unexpected car swung around the corner and bore down upon her, shutting off a retreat, and panic-stricken she lost the courage to take the one chance of keeping on. Destruction seemed certain, when, like a true hero "Fido" acted. A flash of brown and with lightning-like swiftness he had darted into the death-trap, caught the cat by the neck and whisked her across, all in one incredible second. A car grazed his body, shaving the hair close to his side in a long, wide streak, but he was not hurt. Once again on the sidewalk, he carelessly dropped his burden, as if, his duty done, he had no further interest in her. Perhaps with the diffidence of a hero, he did not wish to be thanked. A sudden embarrassment seized him and he studied an invisible object on the pavement with an all absorbing interest.

The cat picked herself up gingerly and looked around at the dog. Grateful, yet seemingly afraid to express her thanks to one of the sworn enemies of cat-dom, she hesitated, with lifted paw and quivering body. Then the hairless streak on the dog's side caught her attention. With a stealthy movement she crept to him, prepared to spring away at the slightest sign of enmity and stretching out a soft, pink tongue, licked the place. Poor Fido, overcome with confusion, gazed wildly and frantically around. Suppose one of his dog-friends should see him being publicly caressed by a cat! With a sharp bark and a sudden spring he was up and away, disappearing around the corner, and the cat, satisfied that she had adequately expressed her appreciation, trotted off on whatever errand she had in mind.—Our Dumb Animals.

DIRECTIONS.

All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after three or four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.

Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

MEETING OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

The regular annual meeting of the Publishing Committee is called to meet in the office of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, 512 Camp Street, New Orleans, La., on Thursday, October 12, at ten o'clock a.m. It is hoped that every member of the Committee can be present.

JNO. F. FOSTER, Chairman.

PAY THOSE CENTENARY PLEDGES.

As will be seen from announcements elsewhere, Sunday, October 1, has been designated as "Pay-up Day" for the Centenary pledges in the North Mississippi Conference, and the week of October 15-22 has been designated as "Pay-up Week" for the same purpose in the Mississippi Conference. We have not been informed whether a special period has been set for the Louisiana Conference or not, but we are sure diligent efforts are being made to bring the payments up to date.

It is gratifying to know that a considerable number of the subscribers in all our territory have kept up with their pledges, and that some have even completed their payments. To all these the warmest commendation should be given, for it is through their thoughtfulness and liberality that the work of the church has been enabled to go forward. There are some, though, who are behind with one or more payments, and some—a very few, we trust—who have made no payments at all. It is to these that we especially address these words of exhortation.

We take it for granted that every subscriber to the Centenary cause made his subscription in good faith, and that it is still his intention to pay the full amount subscribed. In a few cases it may have happened that unavoidable circumstances have made it impossible to meet those pledges thus far; in most of them, however, it is likely that the matter has simply been overlooked until the subscriber feels that there is no special obligation resting upon him. We merely suggest that a pledge is a pledge, and it is binding until its requirements have been met. In business, a man may "charge off" certain losses that have occurred in the course of business; but a solemn pledge cannot be so lightly disposed of.

The greatest incentive to the payment of these pledges now, though, is the urgent need of the money in order that the Centenary enterprises of the church may not suffer loss. As a church, we are concerned for the coming of the Kingdom of God upon earth, and all our activities are directed to that end. If we fail to do what we have undertaken to do, we are not meeting our obligations, and we shall have to bear the blame that falls upon those who are not doing their part in the evangelization of the world. This obligation is so heavy and the responsibility that goes with it is so great that we cannot afford to do less than our very best.

For the encouragement of those who cannot possibly bring their payments up to date, we suggest that a partial payment will be thoroughly acceptable, even though that payment may seem to be insignificantly small. It is certainly better to pay something than not to pay anything at all. A good slogan for the pay-up period would be: "Pay all if you can; at least, pay all you can."

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Standard Training School held at Shreveport, La., September 17-22, had an attendance of 134.

Rev. Osmond S. Lewis, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Laurel, Miss., is assisting the pastor in a revival meeting at Mendenhall, Miss., this week.

Lamar and Barton, Publishing Agents, announce that the new Discipline is ready for distribution. The price is fifty cents. Every official of the church and every Methodist family ought to own a copy.

Dr. C. G. Hounshell, of the Board of Missions, recently underwent a serious surgical operation in a hospital at Chattanooga, Tenn. Reports indicate that he is making satisfactory progress toward recovery.

The Sunday school of the Broad Street Methodist Church, Lakke Charles, La., held its "Commencement exercises" at 7:30 o'clock on last Sunday evening. There were many promotions of pupils to higher departments.

Dr. O. E. Goddard, according to an exchange, has been appointed pastor at Conway, Ark., the seat of Hendrix College. The former pastor, Dr. C. M. Reeves, has been elected to the chair of Religious Education in Hendrix.

We learn from our exchanges that Dr. George Albert Coe has resigned from the chair of Religious Education in Union Theological Seminary, New York, and that he will devote himself to lecturing and writing. He is sixty-one years old.

Rev. W. M. Young, of Leland, Miss., announces that a meeting will begin at Leland on the fourth Sunday in October, with Rev. Del Longgrear, of Coahoma, doing the preaching. The pastor and people are looking forward to a great meeting.

The Advocate office greatly appreciated a call by Rev. W. H. Giles, our pastor at Slidell, La., on Monday morning of this week. He was in the city to visit some sick members of his church and to attend the weekly meeting of the New Orleans Methodist preachers.

Rev. S. Curtis Yates, of Carrollton, Miss., writes: "We are closing out the most successful year in the Carrollton charge in recent years. The fourth quarterly conference was held on the 17th, with the best reports, perhaps, ever brought up." Fine!

Rev. H. A. Wood, our pastor at Waynesboro, Miss., is engaged in a county-wide revival campaign with Rev. H. C. Castles, our pastor at Long Beach, Miss. We are sure Harrison County will be greatly blessed by the ministry of these faithful workers.

Rev. P. E. Riley, pastor of the Methodist church at Polytechnic, Texas, has been elected editor of the Texas Christian Advocate. He succeeds Dr. A. J. Weeks, who is now editor of the Missionary Voice. We give Brother Riley a cordial welcome to the editorial fraternity.

Dr. J. L. Weber, pastor of the Broadway Methodist Church, Paducah, Ky., has been elected State Chaplain of the American Legion for Kentucky. He has been invited to deliver an address at the national convention of the Legion, to be held in New Orleans in October.

We acknowledge the honor of an invitation to attend the marriage of Miss Franklyn Parker Young, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Duncan F. Young of this city, to Mr. Charles Herbez, on Wednesday evening, October 4, at Parker Memorial Church. Blessings upon the young couple!

We are glad to learn that Rev. J. W. Raper, pastor of the Vaiden and West charge, North Mississippi Conference, seems to have recovered fully from his long illness which kept him from his work for several months during the early part of the year.

A note from Rev. C. F. Emery, of Fayette, Miss., informs us that the wife of Rev. W. W. Cammack, a superannuate member of the Mississippi Conference, underwent a serious surgical operation at a hospital in Natchez on October 21. We earnestly pray that she may soon be restored to health.

We learn indirectly that Grenada College had the largest attendance at its recent opening in its history. Seventy-two high school graduates enrolled in the Freshman class, and there were others who were not prepared for advanced standing. President Countiss has developed one of the finest schools for girls in the church.

Rev. and Mrs. H. E. Carter, of Minter City, Miss., will celebrate their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary on Tuesday evening, October 3. We appreciate the honor of an invitation to attend this happy occasion, and regreat that it is not within our power to accept. We pray Heaven's richest blessings upon these faithful servants of the church.

We take the following from the Nashville Christian Advocate: "Rev. John M. Moose, of the North Mississippi Conference and chaplain in the army for several years past, stationed at Monterey, Calif., received orders on the 2d of September to proceed to the Philippine Islands. He sailed from San Francisco on the 6th. This is his third appointment to that far-off station."

Mr. Horace B. Rickey, son of Rev. and Mrs. H. W. Rickey, of DeRidder, La., was married to Miss Marjorie Bouvier on Saturday evening, September 23, at Parker Memorial Church, this city, Rev. C. C. Wier and Rev. H. N. Brown officiating. Mr. Rickey's mother and several out-of-town guests were present. Mr. Rickey is a teacher in the city schools. The Advocate extends best wishes to the young couple.

Rev. and Mrs. J. G. Snelling and the district stewards and trustees have issued invitations to the opening of the New Orleans District parsonage, on Thursday, October 5. The hours will be from three to six in the afternoon, and from seven to ten in the evening. Brother Snelling has made a large contribution to the welfare of the New Orleans District by leading in this successful movement to provide a suitable home for the presiding elder.

Rev. A. E. Barrett, our pastor at Jena, La., writes: "We have had a great meeting at this place recently. Rev. L. I. McCain, of Lafayette, did the preaching for us. He is a great preacher. He did not 'shun to declare the whole council of God,' and many received the truth and were blessed. Results: fifty-odd professions, thirty additions, and the church greatly revived. Our work is in fine condition at this time, for which I thank God and take courage."

The First Methodist Church of Laurel, Miss., feels highly honored in having Rev. J. T. Nicholson, a superannuate member of the Mississippi Conference, in its congregation. Friday, September 21, was his seventy-first birthday, and the Sunday school presented him with a purse of $71 as a token of love and esteem. A beautiful basket of fruit was prepared by members of the social service committee and sent with the offering, besides an extra offering given to Mrs. Nicholson.

Rev. C. A. Northington gives us a fine report of the McIntosh revival recently held at Lambert, Miss. There were thirty-five additions to the membership of the Methodist church, six to the Presbyterian, and fourteen to the Baptist. The revival was one of the greatest in the history of the town. The sum of $700 was raised for the expenses of the meeting. Rev. Ed Phillips was in charge of the singing and children's services, and Miss Robbie Hammell officiated at the piano.

We take the following from the Baltimore Southern Methodist: "On August 23 Bishop Warren A. Candler passed his sixty-fifth milestone. Twenty-four years ago last May, at the General Conference held in this city, he was elected to the episcopacy, and from the viewpoint of service is the oldest active bishop in Methodism. Bishop Berry, who is the active senior bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was elected bishop in May, 1904, and therefore is Bishop Candler's junior in episcopal service by six years."

Rev. H. G. Hawkins, our pastor at Newton, Miss., recently made a round of appointments with the presiding elder, Rev. John A. Moore, and he gives an interesting account of the trip in the Newton Record. He gives the following information concerning the district: the largest congregation is that of First Church, Laurel, which pays its pastor $3000; the next largest membership is at Newton—368; the third largest is at Philadelphia, with 341, but Philadelphia pays the second largest salary in the district; the total number of members in the district is 9,344.

We take the following from a recent issue of the St. Louis Christian Advocate: "Rev. I. D. Borders, for the past two years Conference Missionary Secretary, Southwest Missouri Conference, has been appointed Conference evangelist. Dr. Borders is a preacher of ability and has held numerous meetings during the year and rendered most acceptable service to brother pastors and churches. His appointment is most fortunate and it is unnecessary to say that his services will be very much in demand." Brother Borders has many friends in Mississippi. They will not be surprised to hear of the success attending his ministry.

THANKS TO OUR FRIENDS.

We desire to express our thanks to the following friends who have sent us two or more subscriptions recently: Rev. H. A. Wood, Waynesboro, Miss., 5; Rev. W. E. Akin, Sibley, La., 6; Rev. S. Curtis Yates, Carrollton, Miss., 2; Rev. A. E. Barrett, Jena, La., 6.

THE CHILDREN'S BIBLE.

The Children's Bible has just come from the press of Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. It is beautifully printed, bound, and illustrated with reproductions of great paintings dealing with Biblical subjects. The price is $3.50. It is not the whole Bible, nor is it merely a collection of stories from the Bible; it consists of suitable portions of the Bible translated in words that can be comprehended by children—not the one-syllable words that are painfully unsatisfactory, but simple words that children are familiar with. A great many grown-ups would read this volume with eager interest. We do not know of anything that could surpass it as a gift book.

CALLING AT MANILA.

By Wm. C. Allen.

It has been seven years since I last was in Manilla. I then was very busy with addresses and meetings. This time (1922) we were there over one night en route to Hong Kong. Every one on the ship prophesied very hot weather because late spring there is the most trying part of the year. As a matter of fact, it was much like good stiff summer weather in eastern America. The difference largely consisted in getting our emotions worked up to the belief that we were likely to suffer in Manila, whilst in America most of us take a certain number of hot days in each year as a matter of course and are fortunate if we keep too busy to think about them.

Yet it was blistering enough on the big sun-heated steel ship to make us decide to go to a hotel for the night. Getting off and on that vessel was a problem. After spending a million or so for her and her equipment the money must have failed when the port-gangway had been built. We were compelled to go down a narrow steep descent, with cleats to keep us from slipping, 30 or 40 feet onto the edge of the dock, and there was no railing—only an unsteady rope to cling to.

Manila looks about as it used to excepting with respect to certain civic improvements. A few big buildings are in course of erection. The Escolta, that half-mile-long narrow street, the heart of business, is so crowded with motor cars that blocks are frequent. The Intramuros, or old walled city, with its massive buildings and quaint Spanish residences, is as full of charm as ever. The American regimen has not touched its centuries-old lights and shadows. The Pasig river has more little steamboats and fewer sampans floating on its turbid waters. Taft Avenue, in the newer quarter, is now lined with pretty foliage and modern houses—trees and flowers grow here unceasingly every month of the year. Americans are good colonizers, as I can testify after sundry visits to our colonies. Manila has no smells. I saw but one fly and no mosquitoes there on this trip. Our officials do not just talk about keeping our hot countries clean—they keep them clean.

Shopping consumed some of our limited time in Manila. Did we seek souvenirs? No; we were after necessities. The shops cater to Filipinos and Americans. You can get practically everything you would need in the United States. Sundaes delightfully constructed of milk from the real or tin cow, and soda drinks just like home, allure the Americans into dim corners of drug stores where they sip cooling refreshments beneath electric fans. My wife knows exactly where to go in Manila. Then I tried to see some men round town, but all were away. I do not forget to tell about the rooms in our hotel where the windows occupied almost all of one side of each apartment and where there was no glass. The outlook was rich in greenery, ferns and palms, old walls and barred windows, deep recesses and blinding sunlight. I would not like the bars across the glassless windows of the houses of our Spanish-founded colonies—Manila included—were it not for their oftimes exquisite beauty. They are straight, or curve outwardly in graceful fashion, whilst behind them are caught glances of pretty pots of plants and simple furniture. Indeed the architectural effects of Japan, China or the Philippines are infinitely more elegant than are our Western types with their stiff lines and massive features. Why do not some of our architects go to the Far East to secure designs that would be adaptable to the exteriors of our western buildings? They and ourselves would be the gainers by such an international development of their noble profession.

The poorer people of the Philippines live in houses made of nipa, a course straw. The living rooms are elevated on posts four feet or more above the ground. The scenes beneath are not always attractive if sometimes interesting. Street care and excellent roads give a casual visitor varied methods of observing the different phases of life in and around the quaint old city.

Like the busy little bee, I improved a few shining hours in endeavoring to ascertain the thought of all sorts of people regarding Philippine independence. I talked to natives on the tram cars, to civilians, soldiers, a newspaper man, and others. The situation seems to be about as it was a few years ago. When I asked an intelligent English-speaking Filipino he would very likely tell me that "all" want independence. A native business man, somewhat dependent on the expenditures of the United States army, will declare that the American occupation is a good thing. Army officers with whom I conversed honestly believed that the Filipinos could not govern themselves if given the opportunity to do so. An American private seemed to feel that the country cost the people of the United States more than it gave them and that the few Americans who made money out of our holding the country were already rich enough. White civilians have declared to me that native politicians stir up a demand for release from American control hoping thereby to enhance their own emoluments and power. So it goes. My own conviction is that the good old Declaration of Independence of 1776 and its reference to "the consent of the governed" may be forgotten in this conflict of opinions and that our retaining the Islands as an impregnable fortress is considered by certain powers as a menace to them which some day they may seek to remove. If such is the case, we may well apprehend that holding the Philippines is subtly endangering our own ideals as to human liberty and may become a source of weakness and danger, not of strength and security, to America.

I conclude writing this simple story as the coast of Manila recedes from view. Just in front of me there stands by the ship rail a young woman holding a baby in her arms. The baby is most sensibly covered with only one thin abbreviated garment. The woman is dressed in a sky-blue coat, outside of black trousers over purple socks encased in green slippers. And this reminds me that we are now bound for China.

A TWO-CENT STAMP.

When it comes to giving service cheaply you can't beat the 2-cent postage stamp, the Postoffice Department believes.

The little red square will now carry a letter weighing one ounce to fifty foreign countries and to more than 50,000 postoffices in the United States. The Pan-American postal conference, held at Buenos Aires last September, put its approval upon the 2-cent rate for foreign mail, and it is the belief of postoffice officials that it will soon be universally recognized in the Western Hemisphere.

The 2-cent rate was put into effect near the close of last year to Argentina, Brazil, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Jamaica and Martinique. On March 1 Bermuda and Haiti joined the ranks and in May, Spain and her colonies. Many Americans err by putting 5-cent stamps on letters when only two cents postage is required, it was stated at the department.

The countries with which the United States has 2-cent postage rates are: Argentina, Bahamas, Barbados, Bermuda, Bolivia, Brazil, British Guiana, British Honduras, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Dutch West Indies (Aruba, Bonaire, Curacao, St. Eustatius, St. Martins), Ecuador, Great Britain, Ireland, Honduras, Jamaica (including Turks, Calcos, Cayman islands), Leeward Islands (Antigua, Barbuda, St. Kitts or St. Christopher, Nevis, Anguilla, Dominica, Monsterrat, Virgin Islands), Martinique, Mexico, Newfoundland, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, Salvador, Shanghai, China, Spain (including the Belearic Islands, Canary islands and possessions on the North African Coast), Trinidad, Tobago, Western Samoa, Windward Islands (Grenada, St. Vincent, St. Lucia.)—Exchange.

Obituaries

Obituaries not over 200 words in length will be published free of charge. All over 200 words must be paid for at the rate of 1 cent a word. Count the words and be sure to send the amount necessary with the obituary. That will save trouble all around. We cannot make discriminations. Memorial resolutions are subject to the same rule as obituaries.

EVELYN LANN was born November 2, 1914, in Deerford, La., and died August 19, 1922, in Bryceland, La. While very young she gave evidence of faith in Christ, and at the age of six she joined the church while the writer was holding a meeting at Bryceland. She was regular at Sunday school, and a member of the "Sunbeam Band." Only a few days before her death she said to her mother, "Mamma, I love you and Daddy, but I love Jesus best of all." 'Twas hard, oh, so hard to give her up; but we know she is safe in the Master's fold, and though she cannot come back to us, we can, in the Father's good time, go to her. Dear parents, I would console you in the words of a poet:

"Somewhere on some moving planet,
In the midst of years to be,
In the silence, in the shadow,
Waits her loving heart for thee;
Somewhere in the beckoning heavens,
Where they know as they are known,
Are her empty arms above thee
That shall clasp thee for their own.
Somewhere in the far-off silence
You will feel her vanished hand;
Somewhere you will know the voice
That now you cannot understand."

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, we, the women of the Missionary Society of the Pineville Methodist Church, do deeply deplore the death, on August 11, 1922, of our Sister, MRS. J. M. HARLE; and whereas, while we miss her gentle presence from our midst, we do not grieve as those who have no hope,

Therefore, be it Resolved: That we extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy and that a copy of these resolutions he sent to them, a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication, and a copy be spread on the minutes of our auxiliary.

Respectfully submitted,
COMMITTEE ON RESOLUTIONS.

A LETTER FROM REV. A. M. BENNETT.

Two years ago next November, we were transferred from North Mississippi to the Memphis Conference by Bishop McMurry. Since that time, with the exception of a few letters to personal friends, we have neither made sign nor written letter to home-folks as to how it goes with us in our new field. We have, however, by reading the Advocate and by summoning a brother occasionally to help us in a protracted meeting from the home field kept better informed as to our former co-laborers. We have rejoiced in the reports of revivals such as those cited by J. B. Randolph over in Prentiss County and others in different parts of the Conference. Our chief object in this little note, however, is to report briefly on two great meetings on our own charge.

One was at White Haven, Tenn., where we united two Methodist and two Presbyterian churches in a meeting under a tent. Rev. L. D. Patterson, D.D., returned missionary of seven years from China, did the preaching. The meeting lasted two weeks. The preaching was very strong and spiritual. Eighty-odd souls were added to the rolls of the different churches, and a number of family altars were erected, and thought has been stimulated in a way to yield fruit for years to come. The judgment, punishment after death as taught by the Scriptures, achievement through faith in Biblical promises, all have more meaning. A number of young people pledged themselves to enter whatever field of life service the Spirit might direct. The Rev. A. J. Notestine led the song service and preached short sermons to the children daily. He is truly an evangelistic singer. The power of his selections in song was only surpassed by the great preaching of Brother Patterson.

The other meeting to which we referred was held at the Levi grammar schoolhouse, in a tent. Rev. J. A. George, of Duncan, Miss., did the preaching and Brother Notestine led the singing. From the first day the meeting prospered. Brother George literally showered his audiences with Scriptural quotations, and arraigned sin in any and all forms. Men who had long been indifferent were aroused, and numbers were converted—the total, I believe, is 30—and 23 were added to the church.

At both these meetings seats were prepared and a number of colored people were in attendance. Uncle Jonas said of Brother George's preaching, "He made the finest collecture dat I ever herd made by a white man." Brother George is a personal worker the like of which is seldom met.

People must not only think, but they must talk to him of their spiritual condition. The Lord bless him and give him great growth, grace and usefulness! A. M. BENNETT, P. C.

Dear Brother Carley: Please publish a few lines from the above charge. We have four appointments and have held revivals at three points. We held our meeting in Waterproof during the high water and just closed when the levee broke about 18 miles below us and flooded a great section of our farm land. We had a fine meeting and received sixteen members.

We went to Wesley chapel next, where the people are noted for their good dinners and big-heartedness. We had four additions to the church. On the last day of the meeting the good people gave the pastor the nice sum of $50 as a token of appreciation.

We have recently closed a very successful revival in St. Joseph, where the pastor had the co-operation of all the churches of the town. The song services were led by Mr. Otis Spinks. He is a fine young man and truly religious. His work with us will remain through the days and months to come. We received eleven into the Methodist Church on profession of faith, and one went into the Presbyterian Church.

There have been about 34 accessions to the church to date on the charge and still there remains one meeting to be held at Newellton. Our old friend, I. B. Robertson, is the principal of the High School there, and a fine worker in the church.

During August we organized a Senior Epworth League at Waterproof, which now has more than 40 members and is doing good work; also, at the close of our meeting in St. Joseph, we organized an Intermediate League with 16 members.

We are looking forward to a full report by Conference.

Yours in Christ,
H. W. CUDD.
